FROM THE CO-SECRETARIES GENERAL

This issue of our annual report on state-sponsored homophobia builds up on improvements introduced in the last two editions, by increasing the number of articles – by either scholars or ILGA regional board members – devoted to specific issues or regions, and comes in a new format, which we hope will make the whole report (including the world map) easier to use and to read. For the first time, this report is released in all 6 UN official languages, in an effort both to increase the readership and to make it easier to quote from it in other reports by (inter)governmental agencies and NGOs.

2012 and 2013 will definitely be remembered as the years of same-sex marriage laws, as a sort of chain reaction seems to spread from continent to continent, from Latin America (Argentina, Uruguay) to Europe (France and most probably the UK) to Oceania (New Zealand), thus bringing the total of countries where same-sex couples can marry to 14, while in Brazil, Mexico, Australia and the USA progress seems to stall, as can be read in the articles on Oceania by Simon Margan and Joey Mataele, and on North America by Danielle Maccartney and by Stephen Seaborn and Haven Herrin.

Though, perhaps, the most visible sign of change in relation to equality, marriage laws are not the only field which sees advancements of LGBTI rights – at the national and at the local level, through regulations, litigation or even election of openly LGBTI council or parliament members, change is gradually taking place in many countries all over the world, as can be read in the articles by Douglas Sanders (Asia), Eric Gitari, Linda RM Baumann, Rev. Rowland Jide Macaulay (Africa) and Tamara Adrian (Latin America).

Despite these very encouraging developments though, little has changed in the proportion between countries criminalizing same-sex sexual acts between consenting adults and those which do not, i.e., respectively, 78 (roughly 40% of UN Members) versus 113 (roughly 60% of UN Members). While the efforts in the international LGBTI movement and among its allies (NGOs, certain governments, etc.) to change this state of affairs must and will continue, it is important to realize that this current division of the world – from the point of view of legislation – into an LGBTI-friendly field and an LGBTI-unfriendly field is the result of different cultural, social and political processes rooted in the histories of the countries and the history of their relations with one another. As it would be impossible to list all these processes here, we decided nevertheless to have an in-depth article on a particular region of the world each year, starting with one on the MENA region by Yahia Zaidi.

While criminalization is the most blatant form of state-sponsored homophobia, countries which decriminalized homosexuality in the recent past, such as Russia, as explained in the article by Maria Sjödin and Martin Christensen, are sadly seeking to re-legitimize discrimination based on sexual orientation both at the national level, by way of laws against LGBTI activism – preposterously defined as “homosexual propaganda” – and at the international level, in the name of “tradition”.

We hope this year’s issue to be most useful for activists, governmental agencies, academics and the media and are grateful to the authors, Lucas Paoli Itaborahy and Jingshu Zhu, and all those worked on it, particularly professors Kees Waaldijk and Robert Wintemute, our staff (Stephen Barris and Sebastian Rocca) and – last but not least – all our member organization who provided the updates on the legislation of their countries.

Brussels / Mexico City, 13 May 2013

ILGA is a world-wide network of national and local groups dedicated to achieving equal rights for lesbian, gay, bisexual, trans and intersex (LGBTI) people everywhere.

Founded in 1978, it now has more than 1000 member organizations.

Every continent and approximately 117 countries are represented.

Pan Africa ILGA, ILGA-Asia, ILGA-Europe, ILGA-LAC, ILGA-North America and ILGA-ANZAPI are regional chapters of ILGA.

ILGA is to this day the only international non-governmental community-based association focused on fighting discrimination on grounds of sexual orientation and gender identity as a global issue.

FROM THE AUTHORS

LUCAS PAOLI ITABORAHY¹ & JINGSHU ZHU²

“It was the best of times, it was the worst of times, it was the age of wisdom, it was the age of foolishness, it was the epoch of belief, it was the epoch of incredulity, it was the season of Light, it was the season of Darkness, it was the spring of hope, it was the winter of despair, we had everything before us, we had nothing before us, we were all going direct to heaven, we were all going direct the other way.”

Charles Dickens’ insight lingers on till today, when we are looking, with mixed feelings, at the world’s laws on LGBTI issues. Since the last edition of this report, we have been overwhelmed by loads of good news in some parts of the world. However, there are still more than one-third countries criminalising same-sex conducts between consenting adults in private. In many places, LGBTI people are still living under intensive situations of homophobia which is directly or implicitly sponsored by unfavourable state law.

Knowing the law is a very important part of any effective human rights work to counteract homophobia. Access to this knowledge is a particular challenge when it comes to LGBTI issues. This can be due to rapidly changing legal provisions, contradicting sources, and the inaccessibility of certain legal provisions in the public domain. The aim of this report is therefore to consolidate the latest research on a range of lesbian and gay legal issues all around the world, providing activists, lawyers, judges, academics, public officials, or anyone else interested in the subject with the most updated information.

This report has become an important tool for the defence of LGBTI rights throughout the years and it has been increasingly used and cited by a variety of media sources, NGOs, institutions, and most recently by UN agencies. This has only motivated us to keep improving its quality so it can produce useful resources and bring symbolic –and hopefully material - benefits to people's lives. After all, legal changes, particularly concerning LGBTI issues, generate further social and pedagogical effects, educating the society on the protection and promotion of the rights of such people.

The first part of the report presents a global overview of developments of LGB rights in a variety of legal matters: decriminalisation of consensual homosexual acts between adults; equalization of ages of consent for homosexual and heterosexual acts; prohibitions of discrimination based on sexual orientation in employment and constitutional bans as such; hate crimes based on sexual orientation considered as aggravating circumstance; incitement to hatred based on sexual orientation; prohibition of incitement to hatred based on sexual orientation; marriage and partnership rights for same-sex couples; and joint adoption by same-sex couples. Laws on gender identity issues are no longer included here since ILGA is producing a separate report exclusively on transgender rights.

The second part is comprised of a summary of countries that still maintain legal provisions criminalising same-sex sexual acts between consenting adults who engage in sexual activity in private. Laws related to such acts done in public, with minors, by force or otherwise outlawed are not included.

The compilation of this year's report followed the same methodological procedures introduced in the 2011 version. A call to ILGA members in more than 110 countries was made to collect the most accurate data, which were combined with news articles and material we have been collecting for the past year regarding LGB legal developments. For each new development, we first searched for the original text of the law in penal codes or other relevant legislation. If that was not available or not very clear, we then looked for other sources, such as official reports from governmental or non-governmental agencies, the UN or other international organizations. If these were not found, other types of sources, like scholarly writings, were used. Afterwards, the first draft was reviewed and discussed by an advisory group composed of LGBTI experts Kees Waaldijk (Leiden Law School/ The Netherlands),³ Robert Wintemute (King's College/UK), and with Renato Sabbadini and Stephen Barris.

In this edition, we have updated the legal situations in many countries and/or regions. In particular, we have added some recent positive changes that were not covered by the previous editions:

³ Kees Waaldijk has also contributed immensely to this report, providing a draft version of Legal recognition of homosexual orientation in the countries of Africa from March 2011, as well as his 2009 paper "Legal recognition of homosexual orientation in the countries of the world", which is available at: <http://hdl.handle.net/1887/14543>.

- Regarding prohibition of discrimination in employment: some parts of Philippines since 2003 up till 2013, Bolivia (2011), El Salvador (2010), Moldova (2012) and Uruguay (2004);
- Regarding hate crimes: Chile (2012), Georgia (2012) and Malta (2012); Honduras (2013)
- Regarding incitement to hatred: Malta (2012);
- Regarding same-sex marriage: Denmark (2012), part of Mexico (2010) and some parts of the United States (Maine in 2012, and Maryland and Washington in 2013); Uruguay (2013) and New Zealand (2013)
- Regarding same-sex couples offered most or all rights of marriage: some parts of the United State (Illinois and Rhode Island in 2011 Hawaii and Delaware in 2012, Colorado in 2013)
- Regarding same-sex couples offered some rights of marriage: Part of the United States (Wisconsin in 2009) and Poland (2012)
- Regarding joint adoption: New Zealand (2013)
- Regarding second-parent adoption: Slovenia (2012)

There are some other corrections and updates in several footnotes, including replacement of all dead links and addition of quotes of the original texts of the laws which were not written in English. The aim here is to avoid misinterpretation of such laws, as it happened previously with Benin. In past edition, Benin was placed under the Illegal category due to a misinterpretation of an unofficial English translation of the Penal Code. After reviewing other sources we realized that there was only a higher age of consent for same-sex sex.

We would like to thank ILGA member organisations and other scholars for their significant comments, suggestions and assistance. If you have any additional information or further sources not available in this report, please contact ILGA at information@ilga.org and we will investigate the matter.

The report has been researched and edited by Lucas Paoli Itaborahy and Jingshu Zhu. It is an updated version of the six annual editions of this report that were researched and compiled by Daniel Ottosson until 2010, by Eddie Bruce-Jones and Lucas Paoli Itaborahy in 2011, and by Lucas Paoli Itaborahy in 2012.

REFUGEE CONTEXT CONSIDERED

The ILGA Report on State-Sponsored Homophobia is a comprehensive outline of the legal status of same-sex sexual activity. However, it is very important to keep in mind that the question of legality of same-sex sexual activity does not determine the question whether people may be at risk of being persecuted in their countries of origin for engaging in such activity. Knowing that there is a difference between these two questions is vital for legal practitioners, policy makers and adjudicators in the refugee context.

The 1951 Refugee Convention defines refugees in Article 1(A) as those who:

“owing to well-founded fear of being persecuted for reasons of race, religion, nationality, membership of a particular social group or political opinion, is outside the country of his nationality and is unable or, owing to such fear, is unwilling to avail himself of the protection of that country; or who, not having a nationality and being outside the country of his former habitual residence as a result of such events, is unable or, owing to such fear, is unwilling to return to it.”

Criminalisation of same-sex activity may be relevant to the determination of risk of persecution in a number of ways. The imposition of criminal sanctions by the State in and of itself may constitute persecution (UNHCR 2002; 2008). Criminal laws prohibiting gay sex, whether or not regularly enforced, render sexual minorities vulnerable to extortion, exploitation and other forms of abuse at the hand of both state and non-state actors. Such criminal laws systematically contribute to a failure of State protection, by preventing victims of homophobic violence from seeking and being provided assistance. Furthermore, criminal laws of this kind, whether or not enforced, contribute to persecutory environments, by stigmatising LGBTI people through official means. However the absence of, or repeal of, criminal proscriptions absolutely must not be taken as establishing the reverse proposition. Lack of explicit criminalisation of same-sex sexual activity does not prevent LGBTI people from facing extreme violence. The absence of criminalisation does not demonstrate the absence of risk of persecution and/or sufficiency of state protection. The question of legality of gay sex is only one element, and cannot alone be taken as an answer to the question of risk of persecution based on sexuality.

ILGA has been given feedback that earlier incarnations of this report have been used in some refugee determination hearings as evidence that there is no real risk of persecution for lesbian or gay applicants from countries where either the law had been amended to decriminalise same-sex sexual activity or where there was no legal provision expressly criminalising the activity. This introduction urges readers of this document, in particular legal professionals, to think carefully and critically about its use in matters related to refugee and asylum claims. Specifically we urge readers to seek the most detailed, accurate and up to date country of origin information possible to place this information in context before use in any refugee determination.

MENA, THE MIDDLE EASTERN & NORTH AFRICAN REGION: TERRA INCOGNITA

This region covers the territory South of the Mediterranean Sea, West of the Persian Gulf, East of the Atlantic Ocean and North of the Sahara desert. In the past it has been part of the Ancient Egyptian, Assyrian, Babylonian, Phoenician, Carthaginian, Mauritanian and Numidian civilizations and empires. Since the seventh century, the Arab Muslim civilization has dominated the region and has strongly impregnated many other local cultures and languages, including those of the Tamazight (Berbers), Copts, Nubians, Kurds, Assyrians, Aramaics, Somalis and Afars. The 22 modern-day countries which make up the region (excluding Israel) are all members of the Arab League.

The MENA region is covered by two ILGA regions: Asia and Africa. ILGA welcomed six new organisations from the region at its last world conference in Stockholm in December 2012. Today there are 9 MENA members in ILGA's Africa region (7 from the Maghreb and 2 from the Nile valley, but none from the Horn of Africa) and 5 MENA members in ILGA's Asia region (4 from the Levant and one from the Gulf).

The main characteristic of MENA region today is its youth. Young people are in a quest for freedom and self-expression, after centuries of colonial rule and decades of post-colonial dictatorships. The “Arab Spring” revolution in Tunisia in 2012 rapidly spread to Egypt, Libya and Syria. There were also uprisings at the same time in Bahrain and Yemen but they were suppressed by government forces before they could effect any significant changes. Since the Arab Spring, there has been frequent violence and suffering in all of these countries.

RELIGIONS, RELIGIONS, RELIGIONS

Although the population of the MENA region is overwhelmingly Sunni Muslim, there are Shia Muslim¹, Christian and Jewish minorities, particularly in Lebanon, a small country whose population includes followers of no less than 18 branches of Islam, Christianity and Judaism. Syria, Iraq and Jordan also have sizeable religious minorities.

¹ The Shia (Arabic: شيعي, Shi'ah) represent the largest schismatic sect in Islam, accounting for 10-20% of the world's normative body of Muslims.[1] Adherents of Shia Islam are called Shi'ites or Shias. «Shia» is the short form of the historic phrase Shi'at al 'Ali (شيعة علي), meaning «followers», «faction», or «party» of Muhammad's son-in-law and cousin Ali, whom the Shia believe to be Muhammad's successor in the Caliphate. Source : Wikipedia.

Many of the countries of the MENA region have legal systems based on sharia Islamic law, and many of their constitutions explicitly designate Islam as the state religion, even though non-Sunni-Muslim minorities account for up to 40% of their populations. The conflict between Sunni and Shia Muslims has been going on for centuries most obviously today in Iraq and Syria. The Shia are the religious minority most discriminated against in the region: for example many are denied entry to Egypt and, despite forming the majority of the population of the island state of Bahrain, they are subject to an oppressive minority Sunni Muslim regime. Sadly, violent homophobia seems to be the only issue that unites all the majority and minority religions in the MENA region.

“IT WAS ONLY ATTEMPTED RAPE...”

All the religions in the MENA region encourage a patriarchy where women are oppressed and treated as second-class citizens, requiring the permission of their husbands, fathers or brothers to engage in the most basic day-to-day activities. The preservation of their virginity, evidenced by their hymens, upholds their personal honour and that of their male relatives, regardless of the behaviour of these men.

When a 10-year-old girl called Wiam was attacked and disfigured with a sickle in 2013, the Moroccan daily newspaper Al-Massae reassured its readers: “it was only attempted rape, the girl is still a virgin”.⁽²⁾ A year before, on 10 March 2012, a 16-year-old girl called Amina Fillali committed suicide after being forced by her family to marry the man who had raped her, as encouraged by Article 475 of the Moroccan Penal Code. Once again, women’s rights are undermined by the status and privileges given to men by legislation.

Since the Muslim Brotherhood-dominated government assumed power in Egypt, sexual harassment and abuse of women, and rape have increased dramatically. Hania Moheeb and Yasmine Al-Borhamy were among the first courageous victims to speak publicly about their experiences of being gang-raped during a protest at Tahrir Square in Cairo. Their testimonies were widely reported and a new collective called OpAntiSH has been formed in Cairo to fight against sexual harassment and assaults and to directly intervene to prevent assaults by mobs.

Female Genital Mutilation (“FGM”) is another severe issue facing women in the MENA region, particularly in Egypt, Sudan and Yemen. Its fundamental aims are to destroy female sexual pleasure and to control female sexuality.

The Gulf States remains the most backward part of the region in terms of women's rights. In the Gulf region ⁽³⁾, Kuwaiti women are considered to be the most emancipated, following changes in the law in May 2005 allowing them to vote and to stand as candidates in parliamentary and local elections. In neighbouring Saudi Arabia, women are not allowed to drive, nor to hold passports or identity cards without the consent of their fathers, husbands or brothers. In a surprise move in January 2013, King Abdullah of Saudi Arabia appointed 30 women to the previously all-male consultative "Shura" Council which has 150 members. In May 2013, the first ever campaign against domestic violence was held in Saudi Arabia.

2 <http://internationalpoliticalforum.com/in-morocco-being-raped-is-not-the-end-of-the-story/>

The average number of female members in the national parliaments of the MENA region is 11.7%, but this is changing. For example, while only 7% of the members of the Algerian parliament elected in 2007 were women, at the 2013 general election, 145 women were elected, representing 31% of the 462 members.

FRUSTRATION

A depressing mix of conservative religious teaching, tradition, social order and ignorance has made any discussion of sexuality completely taboo in the MENA region. Only a few individuals have dared to talk about it with their families or community elders. Sex is strictly regulated under the sacred bond of marriage. For example, in April 2013, the Algerian police arrested many young girls who were walking in the street accompanied by boys in Algiers and Constantine and forced them to undergo virginity tests in hospital ⁽⁴⁾.

Control of female sexuality revolves around the hymen. In some parts of Algeria, Morocco and Tunisia, the bride's deflowering on her wedding night is proudly celebrated: the blood from her hymen is wiped onto a white cloth which is then exhibited to the wedding's guests, showing that her family's honour is intact. Brides whose hymens are found to be already broken on their wedding nights bring dishonour on their families and annulments or divorce follow.

The general mood of hysteria surrounding sexuality in Saudi Arabia was evidenced by the story widely reported in the media in April 2013 about the deportation by Saudi police of three male citizens of the United Arab Emirates. They were arrested at the Jenadrivah Heritage and Culture Festival in Riyadh for being "too handsome" and thus a threat to the honour and virginity of local women.

A direct result of the lack of any discussion of sexuality and of any sex education in schools is the frustration of young people in the MENA region, where they make up over 70% of the total population. This frustration feeds high levels of sexual harassment, rape, paedophilia, FGM and the forced marriage of pre-pubescent girls (for example in Yemen).

³ "Women and Global Human Rights". Webster.edu. Retrieved 2012-10-10

⁴ Les policiers trop occupés par la virginité des algériennes pour courir après les corrompus « Algerie-focus »

Gender separation is enforced, making it almost impossible for boys to have sexual relationships with women before marriage. The rising age at which people are getting married in the MENA region means that many of them find alternatives to “normal” sex that will preserve women’s hymens, the most popular of which is heterosexual (and homosexual) anal sex.

In this context, being feminist is as political and courageous as being an LGBTI activist. Inspired by Tunisian women who started to organize in the late sixties, feminist organisations are well-consolidated in Algeria, Palestine, Egypt, Bahrain, Iraq, Lebanon and Syria where they inspire the LGBTI struggle together with other human and legal rights organizations.

COMMUNITY-BUILDING IN AN EVER-HOSTILE ENVIRONMENT

If we examine the history and literature of the MENA region, homosexuality has been present and illustrated for centuries. Examples include the Epic of Gilgamesh (around 1700 BC) in Mesopotamia (now Iraq), the homoerotic poems of Abu Nawas and stories and paintings by many other artists. Documentary evidence suggests that, in the past, homosexuality was often more socially accepted than it is nowadays, when most inhabitants of the MENA region consider it a sin and an abomination.

Homosexuality has never been criminalised in only a few of the MENA region’s countries (i.e. Bahrain, Djibouti, Jordan and Palestine), and it still incurs the death penalty in Mauritania, Sudan, Saudi Arabia, Yemen and Southern Somalia. In a further 11 countries, mostly former British and French colonies, it can lead to lengthy imprisonment. In Arabic, the most common words used to describe homosexuals are “shodoud” (“pervert”) and “lewath” (“sodomy” which always refers to “deviant” or “unnatural”), and so it is no surprise that most Arabic media still depict same-sex relationships very negatively. Homosexuality is largely seen as a threat to heterosexuality, to defined roles for men and women (“binarism”) and to social order in general, because it challenges the restriction of sex to procreation and emphasises the pleasurable and satisfaction-giving aspects of sex, rather than its purely reproductive function.

The MENA region is a minefield for human-rights activists. Where does one start? More or less all basic human rights are breached regularly in almost all the MENA region countries! The struggle of LGBTIQ people in the region is unique in that it faces multiple sources of repression. The struggle is not limited to gaining recognition for sexual minorities but to gaining the right to exist and to have basic human rights recognised and protected. As activists, we are struggling against occupation, racism, sexism and harassment, and for freedom of expression, freedom of association and basic human rights as individuals.

In many countries, the police prevents public meetings or discourse and so the internet has taken over as the main area for self-expression. Online activism has spread throughout the region, especially in those countries with the most oppressive regimes, such the Gulf states. Many LGBTIQ individuals have started blogs to speak out and to share their experiences and daily lives. Forced to “pass for straight” in public and only able to be gay online, they have to lead double lives. Some have managed to organise themselves into groups such as Abu Nawas (Algeria), Bedayaa (Egypt/Sudan) and Arab Gay Pride ⁽⁵⁾, which unites many bloggers across the MENA region.

Helem, which fights for the protection of LGBT people in Lebanon, started in 1998 as an online group, and developed into an underground group, which applied to be recognised by the Lebanese Interior Ministry in 2004. Aswat in Palestine started as an online mailing list for women in 2002, and evolved just a year later into an association which held regular meetings for members. Aswat celebrated its 10th anniversary under the name of “Nasheetta” (“female activist”) on the International Day Against Homophobia (“IDAHO”) on 17 May 2012.

These associations have inspired and encouraged the formation of other, similar groups and have contributed to positive cultural change by creating Queer words in Arabic. The best examples are “Mithy” (“gay”), “Mithya” (“lesbian”), “Motahawel, Motahawela” (“trans men and trans women”), “Mozdawej, Mozdawaja” (“bisexual men and women”), “al moyol al jinsy” (“sexual orientation”), “Thunaeya” “Thunae” (“intersex people”) and “Ahrar al jins” (“queer”), positive term which they are striving to have used by the media. In early May, the Lebanese TV station Jadeed TV reported that Marwan Charbel, the Lebanese Interior Minister, had declared that the government “is against lewat” (“sodomy” and “unnatural”). This led to the minister being wittily nicknamed “Mr So-Natural”.

In the Western MENA region, community-building has been closely linked to HIV/AIDS prevention initiatives. An HIV/AIDS prevention campaign among male prostitutes in Morocco began in the early 1990s. A regional HIV/AIDS prevention campaign brought together 20 gay activists and allies from Morocco, Algeria, Tunisia and Lebanon in Casablanca in 2003 and Rabat in 2006. Representatives of mainstream HIV/AIDS prevention organisations such as ALCS (Morocco), APCS (Algeria), ATL (Tunisia), SIDC (Lebanon) and Helem (Lebanon, the only community organisation involved) gathered to identify needs and design programme strategies organised by the International HIV/AIDS Alliance.

Since 2007, UNDP and UNAIDS have used their networks of regional offices to pioneer ground-breaking work: reaching out to religious leaders, judges, police officers, journalists and young people and funding work and research among men who have sex with men in Djibouti, Sudan, Oman, Yemen and Syria, to name but a few.

Many other LGBT groups saw the light in the years that followed and their activities at local, national, regional and international levels were big successes. Since the re-launch of IDAHO in 2005, Helem has organised the “I exist” visibility campaign, which developed in 2012, into the “I vote too, the law must protect me” campaign ⁽⁶⁾. Since 2007, “TenTen” a national LGBTIQ day has been held in Algeria, where supporters are invited to light candles symbolising the end of isolation among the LGBTIQ community. Photos of the TenTen candles were taken in every district of the country and then published in an online album. On TenTen Day in 2012, ⁽⁷⁾ the two main campaigning groups in Algeria, Alouen and Abu Nawas collaborated.

The arrest, humiliation and torture of 52 gay men in Cairo during the so-called “Queen Boat affair” on 11 May 2001 is commemorated by a week of activism leading to May 17th, Egyptian Day Against Homophobia ⁽⁸⁾ since 2012. The “Love for All” campaign in Morocco is the most recent addition to these visibility campaigns.

An offshoot of Helem Banat, the women-only group Meem attracted much international attention when it published in 2009 Bareed Mistajil (“Express Mail”), a book telling the stories of 41 lesbian, bisexual, transgender and queer women, a hidden reality in the region. Meem is the letter “m” in Arabic and is an abbreviation of Majmouaat Mou’azara Lil-mar’a al-Mithliya (“support group for lesbian women”)

Trans-sexuals in the MENA region face double discrimination, not only from the general public but also from within the lesbian and gay communities, which accuse them of presenting a bad image to the outside world. Their visibility also makes them, especially female trans-sexuals, easy targets for rapists. Often, they have been raped by police officers, for example in Kuwait⁹, the only country in the region where transvestism is a criminal offence (article 198 of the Penal code amended in 2007).

The memoirs of Randa the Trans is a rare example of a book which sheds light on the hardship suffered by transgender women in the region. The book’s author, an Algerian activist, was forced to flee to Lebanon and is now living in Sweden.

The advent of international satellite television channels has been enormously useful in challenging the prevailing mentalities in the region. Programmes broadcast by Lebanese satellite TV stations such as LBCTV, have helped to spread a more positive image of the LGBT community throughout the region and have revolutionised the quality, neutrality and positivity of content of other programmes which talk about LGBTIQ people. Some regional newspapers have published very positive articles, such as the coverage of the 2012 TenTen Day by the Algerian Al-Watan and the Moroccan Hesspress. However, many journalists continue to feed the social myths and received ideas that LGBTIQ people are sick or deviant. The most homophobic newspaper in the region is undoubtedly Al-Jarass in Lebanon.

In 2013, a Tunisian opposition party leader was arrested in the Sheraton Hotel in Tunis ⁽¹⁰⁾ and charged with sodomy, which is outlawed by Article 230 of the Tunisian Penal Code. Many similar arrests have been made in the region recently. In May 2013, the Casablanca police arrested many individuals and charged them with homosexuality, but the arrests were not reported in the media. On May 4, the Algerian newspaper daily Al-Khabar reported that a court in Oran had sentenced two men to a short term of imprisonment for stating that they were “married” on Facebook. ⁽¹¹⁾ In a move never seen before in Algeria, a Salafist group then called for their execution.

In 2012, the Lebanese press reported the arrest of 36 men in a cinema in Beirut following earlier reports that the cinema was a venue for gay sexual encounters. The arrested men suffered anal examinations but protests from Helem, Meem and other Human rights organisations led the Lebanese Medical Association to ban this practice thus depriving the Lebanese police of its most humiliating tool against the gay community.

The lack of visibility of LGBTIQ activists and community representatives in the MENA region has encouraged outsiders to act as “saviours” and to talk to the international media on their behalf. Examples include Amna Araf ⁽¹²⁾ and the London based Israeli-linked Gay Middle East group ⁽¹³⁾. Individual activists, LGBT and human-rights groups from the MENA region endorsed a statement criticizing GayMiddleEast.com for its “unwelcome and unsolicited intervention; co-optation of Arab voices; violations of the Palestinian civil society call for Boycott, Divestment and Sanctions (BDS) and pinkwashing Israel”. Under this term, they resent the practice of depicting Israel as a gay paradise with a positive attitude to LGBTIQ issues, while ignoring the political struggle of the Palestinians. Some LGBTIQ Palestinians seeking asylum in Israel have been blackmailed by the Israeli Secret Service who threatened to out them to their families if they did not cooperate.

¹² Amina Abdallah Arraf al Omari was a fictional character or hoax persona created and maintained by American Tom MacMaster

However, there is an increasing amount of Queer media in the region, both online and in print, including titles such as Baraa, Mithly, Bekhsoos and Lebanese Media Monitor in Lebanon; LeXo Fanzine in Algeria, Mawaleh in Syria; My Kaly in Jordan; Ashtar and Qadita in Palestine; Aswat in Morocco (not to be confused with the Palestinian gay women group) which launched the “Love for all” campaign and published photos of LGBT slogans in the main Moroccan cities and My Gay Day in Tunisia, which created the “Minister of Human Rights, I too am human!” campaign in response to the declaration by Minister Samir Dilou that the right to be homosexual was not a human right. ⁽¹⁴⁾

The similar social conditions faced by activists across the region has fostered a strong sense of solidarity among individuals and organisations. The bringing together and empowering of LGBTIQ communities in the region is mainly undertaken by two regional organisations, which network with human rights, women’s rights and HIV/AIDS awareness organisations to create alliances. Regional gatherings have been held in each of the last three years which provide opportunities for more than 160 activists in different fields in 17 countries to share their experiences, create new strategies, network and support each other.

I never cease to be amazed by the courage of activists and organisations in the region in continuing their activities in the face of considerable threats, or even by risking their lives, to change hearts and minds in their countries and to create safer societies for individuals with non conforming sexual orientation and gender identity and expression. Many of them (including myself) have been, and will be, forced into exile by the threat of violence and torture if they are not willing to remain silent. There is so much more to say about LGBTIQ activism in the region but I do not in any way wish to jeopardize the efforts of my courageous colleagues and their allies.

LGB RIGHTS GLOBAL OVERVIEW

The year in brackets refers to the year when the reform came into force.
If no year is stated, either there has never been any regulation in the relevant area or no information could be found about the year the law took effect.

Homosexual acts legal (113 countries)

Africa	Benin ¹ , Burkina Faso, Cape Verde (2004), ² Central African Republic, Congo, ³ Chad, Côte d'Ivoire, Democratic Republic of Congo, Djibouti, ⁴ Equatorial Guinea, ⁵ Gabon, Guinea-Bissau (1993), ⁶ Madagascar, Mali, Niger, ⁷ Rwanda, ⁸ South Africa (1998)
Asia	Bahrain (1976) ⁹ , Cambodia, China (1997), ¹⁰ East Timor (1975), most parts of Indonesia, Israel (1988), Japan (1882), Jordan (1951), Kazakhstan (1998), Kyrgyzstan (1998), Laos, Mongolia (1961), ¹¹ Nepal (2008), ¹² North Korea, Philippines, South Korea, Taiwan (1896), ¹³ Tajikistan (1998), Thailand (1957), Vietnam, as well as the West Bank (1951) in the Occupied Palestinian Territory

² The 2004 Penal Code does not criminalise homosexual acts. Until it came into force, article 71 of the previous code of 1886 provided for 'security measures' for people who habitually practice 'vice against the nature'. Text of the new Penal Code is available at: www.mj.gov.cv/index.php?option=com_docman&task=doc_download&gid=38&Itemid=66.

⁴ See Djibouti Penal Code of 1995, available at: <http://www.djibouti.mid.ru/doc/UK.htm>.

⁶ Articles 133-138 on sexual offences in the new Penal Code of 1993 do not seem to criminalise homosexual acts more than heterosexual acts (Text of the law is available at: www.rjcplp.org/RJCPLP/sections/informacao/legislacao-nacional/anexos/gb-codigo-penal/downloadFile/file/GuineBissau.CodigoPenal.pdf).

⁷ The 1961 Penal Code with admendments up to 2003 is available at: <http://www.unhcr.org/refworld/docid/47fb8e642.html>.

¹⁰ In 1997, the "crime of hooliganism" was abolished in the Criminal Law. Although controversial, the 1997 Criminal Law is often deemed as a sign of decriminalization. See Xiao-fei, Guo "Did China Ever Decriminalize Homosexual?" Law and Social Development 4 (2007): 008. Homosexual acts are also legal in all Chinese associates: Hong Kong (1991) and Macau (1996).

⁴² Benin has a higher age limit for homosexual acts. Since a 1947 amendment of article 331 of the Penal Code of 1877 the first paragraph of article 331 has fixed a general age limit of 13 for sex with a child of either gender, but the third paragraph has penalised any act that is indecent or against nature if committed with a person of the same sex under 21 (text of the amendment is available at: www.legifrance.gouv.fr/jopdf/common/jo_pdf.jsp?numJO=0&dateJO=19471123&pageDebut=11567&pageFin=&pageCourante=11569).

⁴³ According to art. 331 of the Penal Code (as amended in 1947), the age of consent is 13 for heterosexual sex, but "anyone who has committed an indecent act or an act against nature with an individual of the same sex younger than 21 years, will be punished with imprisonment of six months to three years and with a fine of 4 000 francs up to 1 000 000 francs." The text of the Penal Code (inherited from France) has been published by the Ministère de la Justice (République du Congo, Brazzaville) in the book Codes d'Audience – Recueil de codes et textes usuels (Paris: Éditions Giraf, 2001); art. 331 can be found at p. 218.

According to Scott Barclay, Mary Bernstein, and Anna-Maria Marshall (Queer mobilizations: LGBT activists confront the law. NYU Press, 2009: 128), the age of consent for homosexual sex was raised from 15 to 21 in 1969.

¹²⁷ On 29 January 2009, the Constitutional Court ruled in favour of giving cohabitating same-sex couples the same rights offered to unmarried heterosexual couples (which enjoy most rights of marriage). See: <http://www.corteconstitucional.gov.co/relatoria/2009/c-029-09.htm>. On another decision of 26 July 2011 the Court recognized same-sex couples as family entities and ordered the Congress to legislate on the matter of same-sex marriage until June 20th 2013. In case they fail to do it, same-sex couples will be granted all marriage rights automatically. AFRICA

Political and State-Sponsored Homophobia on the increase in the last decade

Over the last ten years, the focus on equal rights, law reforms, community cohesion, diversity, families and migrations for Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual, Trans and Intersex (LGBTI) Africans has gone from bad to worse. The possibility for legal liberation on the grounds of sexual orientation and gender identity has been further thrown into chaos. This assessment is a universal representation of the lives of LGBTI people in Africa, including South Africa with its enviable constitution on same-sex rights.

Human Rights defenders across Africa have faced serious threats to their lives, and many have fled the continent to safety in Europe and America. Many of those who represent “the face of the faceless and the voice of the voiceless” are scattered abroad. This bears painful consequences for activism in Africa and for activists in the Diaspora.

Thirty-six countries in Africa have laws criminalizing homosexuality, some with the death penalty, and many more with harsh jail sentences. By far, it's the continent with the worst laws on the books when it comes to homosexuality and other sexual minorities, a phenomenon which is in part rooted in bad colonial-era laws and political situations, religious autonomy, strong negative belief in cultural and family values, and the evil of patriarchy.

POLITICS AND STATE-SPONSORED HOMOPHOBIA

More than 50% of African governments have taken action and steps to formally criminalise same-sex unions. There is an increased awareness of homophobia in the continent with many African media adding to the furore. Nonetheless, anti-gay laws in Uganda are now weakened due to human rights opposition and Malawi witnessed the presidential pardon of a gay couple.

In March 2011, at the second recall at the United Nations Assembly in Geneva on the Joint declaration to decriminalize homosexuality, the number of African countries who signed rose from six to eleven including Gabon, Sao Tome and Principe, Mauritius, Central Africa Republic, Cape Verde, Guinea Bissau, Angola, South Africa, Seychelles, Rwanda and Sierra Leone, thirteen countries abstained and twenty-eight opposed Joint Statement on Sexual Orientation and Gender Identity (SOGI).

The popularity of gay rights and advocacy for the social status of same-sex relationships have provoked politicians and governments in Africa to react. Recent cases of criminalisation of same-sex relationships have worsened a situation already characterized by harassment, humiliation, extortion, arbitrary arrests, judicial violence, imprisonment, torture, hate crimes and honour killings on the grounds of sexual orientation and gender identity all over Africa. These abuses are happening whether we like it or not, whether we admit it or not. Every year, there are numerous cases of hate crimes towards LGBTI people and LGBTI advocates working to deliver more justice. The abuse is escalating.

AFRICAN LGBTI ASYLUM SEEKERS

In the last five years, there has been a sharp increase and terrible concerns for many fleeing persecution in their own countries, the number of LGBTI migrants fleeing to foreign countries have increased, and the attitude towards asylum seekers based on sexual orientation and gender identity (SOGI) in some cases have largely been shameful. Many have been met with many challenges and horrendous outcomes. Attention is drawn to people fleeing Cameroon, Senegal, Nigeria, Gambia, Liberia, Sierra Leone, Uganda and Tanzania (to mention just a few) due to the nations' political leaders and the forceful introduction of anti-gay legislations and failure to repeal discriminatory laws. We are dealing with cases of African LGBTI seeking asylum as far as Australia, North America and Western Europe, we believe that the international community on migration equality could foster a better reception under international law and give credence to the cases of those marked with discrimination based on SOGI.

TRADITION/CULTURE

Homosexuality in Africa has been blamed on Western European influence and colonialism. It has also been blamed on the radical intervention of technology, but homosexuality has been present in the African culture throughout history. In many African societies, it is not uncommon to acknowledge same-sex relationships. Unfortunately, modern sceptics are ignoring factual history. African leaders believe that behaviours deviating from the normal gender roles are phases that the children encounter and can be addressed only through ensuring regulatory laws to prevent the unknown and unacceptable sexual behaviours.

Historically, Africa has always been the friendliest and most tolerant continent, homosexuality and same-gender behaviours dating back to time before colonialism and the intervention of religion. The arrival of colonialism contributed to the mass hatred and also the influence of religious fundamentalism has contributed to the debased argument for homophobia. Christianity teaches a faith that encourages “Love thy neighbour as thyself”; sadly, this concept has been abandoned for the sake of “hate missions” propelled by the religious leaders, such examples can be found in many places in Africa: Botswana, Uganda, Nigeria, Malawi, where the Churches, Mosques and other popular religious communities are aiding and abetting their governments to pass laws that would criminalise homosexuality and some as far as the death penalty.

The LGBTI African communities have defied oppression and discrimination both at home and abroad, in the last 12 months alone, there has been a public celebration of the first African Zulu gay wedding in South Africa, another gay couple of Ugandan origin married in Sweden, gay men and women continue to step out in politics as in the case of David Kuria in Kenya, LEGABIBO in Botswana is currently challenging its government in the court of justice and more African gay men took part in the Mr Gay Africa competition 2012.

Social network has played a crucial and formidable role in enhancing visibility for the Africa communities. Pan Africa ILGA and several other institutions collaborated to represent Africa on SOGI issues at Oslo Human Right conference 2013 with a catalogue of SOGI breach and contravention on the continent.

IMPLICATIONS FOR SEXUALITY, HIV/AIDS & HEALTH

The struggle against HIV/AIDS is also undermined by criminalization of same-sex relationships. The Human Rights Committee has noted that laws criminalizing homosexuality “run counter to the implementation of effective education programmes in respect of HIV/AIDS prevention” by driving marginalized communities underground. A finding supported by UNAIDS: Former president of Botswana Festus Mogae and UN Special Envoy for HIV/AIDS in Africa Elizabeth Mataka have spoken out firmly and forcefully against criminalization of homosexuality in Africa. African LGBTI people have been struggling to have access to public health services, the level of double discrimination faced being fuelled by state-sponsored homophobia.

Over the past twenty years, there has been a growing recognition of the relativity of sexual norms and of the difficulties of accepting Western conceptions of sexuality in Africa, including gay rights and public recognition of same-sex families.

- An implication in our view is that homophobia is “deep-rooted” in culture, religion, music and law. Expressions of homosexuality are repressed by condemning homosexuals, their families and friends.

- Mocking, shame, ostracism, scorn, violence and prayers for salvation are reported means of keeping homosexuals in the closet or making them “normal.” Some homosexuals respond to this stigmatization by moving away from their countries, communities, families; others build supportive networks outside their communities; while others struggle to keep it a secret by “pretending to be heterosexuals”.
- Same-sex loving people often lead multiple secretive lives, men or women on the Down Low, also known as DL. Men who have sex with men (MSM) often do not admit they are gay or bisexual; these are largely married men.
- Homosexuality is often aligned with occultism.
- Many African governments have no mandate or projected plans to include Lesbians, Gays, Bisexuals and Trans in sexual health provisions and services.
- Inaccurate media publications, unethical reporting, dubious and negative publicity on matters of HIV and homosexuality in Africa need to be addressed to change attitudes.

THE WAY FORWARD/RECOMMENDATIONS

- Legal and policy reform is urgently needed on all these fronts to legally reinforce same-sex relationships, the legal status of same-sex love and the full protection of human rights in the context of HIV/AIDS.
- Address underlying prejudices and discrimination through education programmes in schools and community dialogue to help create a more supportive environment for same-sex unions
- Promote media training, explicitly designed to discourage attitudes of discrimination and stigmatisation towards sexual reproductive health and rights and same-sex relationships, especially in respect of HIV/AIDS. Encourage the media to adopt ethical rules of conduct that prohibit disclosure of confidential patient information.

We hope that in sharing this brief overview, we give a clear understanding of the issues of same-sex relationships, LGBTI human rights in Africa and their implications for sexuality and HIV/AIDS.

Liberation is within reach

THE STING OF CRIMINALIZATION CONTINUES TO BITE BUT THE LIBERATION AND MORAL CITIZENSHIP IN THE UNIVERSE OF EQUALS IS WITHIN REACH, KEEP WALKING

Continued criminalization of homosexual sex conduct in 38 of 54 African countries¹⁴³ and the introduction of stiffer laws in some of these countries¹⁴⁴ continue to occasion discrimination, persecution and asylum flight for many Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual, Trans, Intersex and Queer (LGBTIQ) individuals across Africa¹⁴⁵. This is in spite of the holding by the African Commission on Human and Peoples Rights in Zimbabwe Human Rights NGO Forum vs Zimbabwe that discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation was against the African Charter on Human and Peoples Rights (ACHPR)¹⁴⁶ which more than 98% of African states are party to¹⁴⁷.

Additionally, more UN treaty monitoring bodies continue to recognize sexual orientation as a protected ground from non discrimination with UN agencies such as the UN Human Rights Council in 2011 asking states that criminalize homosexual sex conduct to repeal sodomy laws in order to curb discrimination on the ground of sexual orientation. There have also been legislative strides on the equality of marriages in France, the United Kingdom and American states such as New York and Uruguay. There are also ongoing judicial hearings on equal marriages in Chile and USA.

These international efforts run in parallel against many legal, political and cultural hurdles to equality within many African states who are party to the ACHPR and major UN human rights treaties. Illustratively, continued criminalization of homosexual sex in 38 of 54 African states, introduction of sodomy laws in Burundi, stiffer same sex relationship penalties in Liberia, Uganda and Nigeria¹⁴⁸ and political and religious rhetoric in Kenya are some of the factors accentuating discrimination and hindering equality for LGBTIQ.

Further, diplomatic ties of aid to 'gay rights' by western allies to African countries have perpetuated greater homophobia in Africa with 'gays' being viewed as the stumbling block to access public welfare funding for health, education, shelter and other basic public amenities tied to western funding.

It must be mooted from the foregoing that the legal and political space for LGBTIQ persons in Africa has shrunk in the last one year, however, there are gains towards strengthening equality inclusive of LGBTIQ persons. For example, in the last few years, countries like Botswana, Mozambique, Mauritius and Seychelles have introduced legislation that forbids discrimination in employment on the basis of sexual orientation. Kenya has also been taking strides to implement a constitution passed in 2010 which has sweeping equality provisions, the Kenyan government has also bought, branded and distributed free condom lubricants to gay clinics across the country, slow but valid recognition. Ugandan activists have been prosecuting state officers for violating their right to assemble. Within the last two years, there has been a surge of LGBTIQ equality players strategizing on incrementally using locally available legal provisions and mechanisms to achieve equality. While this can be attributed to modeled equality championing from the West, there is also a regional awakening by African equality players seeking more equality reforms from their three arms of government.

I suggest through observatory learning and practice, that activists in African are slowly learning two things: One, decriminalization might be achieved through aristocratic judicial institutional avenues but culture, politics and religion might present draw backs and thus shrinking the space to enjoy the new found freedoms. So they have started training state agents, civil society, informal workers, trade unions and allied professional associations on diversity and inclusion and many other public dialogue programs. Two, and of focus in this paper is that while criminalization of homosexual sex conduct occasions human rights violations, there is no law limiting the application of fundamental rights and freedoms to homosexuals. The significance of the ruling in Victor Juliet Mukasa and Yvonne Oyoo vs. the Attorney General of Uganda has finally silted. The valiant spirit of David Kato and his compatriots in the case of of Kasha Jacqueline, Pepe Onziema & David Kato vs. Giles Muhame and The Rolling Stone Publications Ltd¹⁴⁹ speaks to many across the continent.

Collectives are organizing towards using regional legal mechanisms such as the African commission on human and peoples' rights and the east African court of justice to enhance equality. This vibrancy among lawyers and NGO activists towards judicial avenues is a good precondition that nurtures change. It is further strengthened by the fact that more and more queer persons, especially the emerging urban youth, are becoming more confident to cash their public trust with state officers demanding equal concern for all.

These regional constellations when viewed together with equality developments in the west continue to entrench civic dispositions among African LGBTI individuals to put their governments to account. Just like the Arab uprising, it reinforces duty to more individuals to participate in realizing change towards an egalitarian society. These developments continue to spur hope that believes in the butterfly effect of liberation across countries however slow the wave surges. Of greater significance is that when these developments are reported in public media, they enhance civic education among public that gay is human and human is sovereign as to dignity and rights. International equality politics have also imbued defiance towards cultural sovereignty resulting to proud ownership of native gay words like shoga in Kenya and Kuchu in Uganda. Whenever equality features in news, the news have reportedly humanized many struggling questioning queer teens in their villages with understanding that they are not alone and that someone is fighting for their confused human self. Because equality unites nations, cultures identities and peoples.

Decriminalization of homosexual sex conduct must and shall be achieved in Africa, the questions of when finds answer in incremental litigation. Besides lobbying and advocating for acceptance, respect for difference and decriminalization, LGBTIQ Africans are learning the value of actively engaging their third arms of government in incremental litigation towards protecting the already available human rights in their national constitutions. There is a growing conscious process of learning, consulting, observing and utilizing local judicial and quasi judicial mechanisms (in parallel to other mechanisms) towards combating discrimination on the ground of sexual orientation.

In the coming year or two, my legal crystal ball predicts litigation in many African courts on fundamental matters like the freedom of association (most African LGBTI organizations have been denied registration by their governments), the right to education (when students suspected of engaging in homosexual sex are expelled from learning institutions when those who engage in heterosexual sex are not expelled), freedom of assembly (due to denial of assembly permits/break of meetings as seen in Uganda), private prosecution of violence, blackmail and extortion (when police fail to follow up) , and; protection from discrimination on the ground of sexual orientation (for example when persons are dismissed from work on account of their sexual orientation) and many others.

The incremental litigation approaches being undertaken and those planned will have many benefits: they will increase levels of civic awareness and disposition among the public; they will build a body of judicial evidence on patterns of discrimination targeting homosexuals, such judicial evidence will carry immense guiding value during decriminalization suits; This process promises to build equality law through judicial law making powers especially in the commonwealth, and a vibrant social justice movement through amicus curiae.

The call is to activists and equality workers. To build partnerships with strategic government agencies and civil society, to dare risk but with valiant caution, to keep engaging duty bearers without relent and to celebrate victories however small. The sting of criminalization continues to bite but the liberation and moral citizenship in the universe of equals is within reach, keep walking.

Sexual relations between consenting adult persons of the same sex in private are not prohibited as such. However the Law on the Combating of Prostitution, and several articles of the Penal Code, have been used to imprison gay men in recent years.¹⁶³

Law 58/1937 promulgating The Penal Code:

Article 98(f): “Detention for a period of not less than six months and not exceeding five years, or paying a fine of not less than five hundred pounds and not exceeding one thousand pounds shall be the penalty inflicted on whoever exploits and uses the religion in advocating and propagating by talk or in writing, or by any other method, extremist thoughts with the aim of instigating sedition and division or disdaining and contempting any of the heavenly religions or the sects belonging thereto, or prejudicing national unity or social peace.”¹⁶⁴

Article 269 bis: “Whoever is found on a public road or a traveled and frequented place inciting the passersby with signals or words to commit indecency shall be punished with imprisonment for a period not exceeding one month. If the felon recurs to committing this crime within one year of the first crime, the penalty shall become imprisonment for a period not exceeding six months and a fine not exceeding fifty pounds. A ruling of conviction shall necessitate placing the convict under police supervision for a period equal to that of the penalty.”¹⁶⁵

Article 278: “Whoever commits in public a scandalous act against shame shall be punished with detention for a period not exceeding one year or a fine not exceeding three hundred pounds.”¹⁶⁶

Law 10/1961 on the Combating of Prostitution:

Article 9: “Punishment by imprisonment for a period not less than three months and not exceeding three years and a fine not less than 25 LE and not exceeding 300 LE [...] or one of these two punishments applies in the following cases:

(a) Whoever lets or offers in whatever fashion a residence or place run for the purpose of debauchery or prostitution, or for the purpose of housing one or more persons, if they are to his knowledge practicing debauchery or prostitution.

These laws differ from the federal law, as most of these prohibit also sexual relations between women. ¹⁹⁴

The states which have adopted such laws are: ¹⁹⁵

Bauchi (the year 2001), Borno (2000), Gombe (2001), Jigawa (2000), Kaduna (2001), Kano (2000), Katsina (2000), Kebbi (2000), Niger (2000), Sokoto (2000), Yobe (2001) and Zamfara (2000).

According to Waaldijk (2011) ¹⁹⁶, both in 2006 and 2009, a legislative proposal has been introduced to further criminalise homosexuality. The ‘Same Gender Marriage (Prohibition) Bill’ received approval in the House of Representatives of Nigeria in January 2009, and among other things would make it a crime for people of the same sex to live together ¹⁹⁷. Apparently, that bill did not succeed in becoming law.

ASIA

ASIA IS BECOMING MORE LGBTI FRIENDLY. CHANGE IS NOT DRAMATIC. BIT BY BIT. INCREMENTAL.

In 2009 the Delhi High Court ‘read down’ section 377, the colonial era anti-homosexual criminal law. It could no longer apply to sexual activity by consenting adult males. The national government was content to do nothing – let the section fade away without any appeal, without any embracing of gay ‘human rights’. But religious zealots made sure there was an appeal to the Supreme Court. After more than a year from the apex court hearing we are still waiting a decision.

Meanwhile the Singapore version of the gay sex prohibition has been challenged in two cases. In April, 2013, the first decision upheld the law as representing moral views in Singapore. There will be an appeal. Discriminatory criminal laws are gone in Hong Kong, but survive in other former British colonies – Bangladesh, Brunei, Malaysia, Myanmar, Pakistan, Sri Lanka – and in parts of Central Asia.

LGBTI visibility remains low. But now there is an out gay man elected in Tokyo and another in Hong Kong. The pioneers were an elected lesbian in Osaka and a trans-woman in greater Tokyo. Hijra are running for office in a couple of campaigns in India. Some have been local mayors in the past, and one a member of a state assembly.

Taiwan remains the only jurisdiction in Asia that prohibits employment discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation. But at least three local governments now have such laws in the Philippines.

Public gay pride events are a bit more common. The “Pink Dot” in Singapore has become world famous, as a clever way around the laws prohibiting public demonstrations. Let’s all meet in the park, have a picnic, wear pink. The result is an annual publicity shot of a thousand pink people gathered together. In Vietnam people tied rainbow ribbons and flags to their motor bikes and roared around Hanoi in a colorful non-demonstration. That broke the ice, and official pride events have followed. Head to Hanoi for the next one, August 2 and 3, 2013. Phuket and Pattaya in Thailand still have “pride” events, but Bangkok gave up on any parade years ago (been there, done that). There are still bitter memories of the forced closure of the pride parade in Chiang Mai four or five years ago. Lots of pride parades in India these days – I’ve lost count.

Trans can get document change in many jurisdictions now. They can marry in their chosen sex (usually under restrictive conditions) in China, Indonesia, Japan, Singapore, South Korea, Taiwan, and at least parts of central Asia. Hong Kong will change personal identity documents, but not the birth certificate, which governs marriage rights there. A court challenge lost at trial and on appeal – but is now before the final court of appeal.

Foreign governments and funders are increasingly LGBTI friendly in Asia. The UN Development Program, together with other partners, including US AID, launched a “Being LGBT in Asia” program late in 2012, building on programs and studies that have in the past been driven by health agendas.

In 2012, to worldwide rainbow applause, the Minister of Justice in Vietnam said they really should move to open up marriage if they were serious about human rights. A long process of consultations and discussions on a number of reforms to family law is currently underway. We could see either civil unions or marriage in Vietnam in 2014. And the same issue is hot in Taiwan and Thailand at the moment. A committee of the Thai parliament held four regional hearings on a proposal for equal partnership rights in the early part of 2013. One of these days, there will be a breakthrough. Which country will lead? The horse race at the moment features Nepal, Taiwan, Thailand, and Vietnam. Place your bets!

Myo Min has returned to Myanmar from exile, and the new organization is Color Rainbow, with freshly opened offices in Yangon. 25 sparkling young delegates from Myanmar were at the ILGA Asia conference in Bangkok in March, 2013.

For years I have lamented the lack of “out” figures in my beloved Thailand. But now there are three popular out pop stars! Wow! That’s a change. And two great Tom-Dee movies over the last couple of years that got mainstream distribution. And four magazines with mainstream distribution, including the fabulous “Tom Act” lifestyle mag.

a. In the case where the person against whom the crime has been committed is not yet eighteen years old.

In Afghan legal terminology “pederasty” appears to refer to intercourse between males regardless of age. The fact that pedophilia or sexual relations with persons under the age of consent falls under subsection 2(a) of article 427 indicates that this is the case. Terming sexual acts between adult men “pederasty” has previously not been uncommon; this occurred for example in the translations of the Criminal Codes of Albania (1977) and Latvia (1933), and in the old Russian legal tradition a “pederast” usually referred to a male who had anal intercourse with another male, regardless of age.²¹²

In most of India, the Indian Penal Code is applicable.

Section 377. Unnatural offences. Whoever voluntarily has carnal intercourse against the order of nature with any man, woman or animal, shall be punished with imprisonment for life, or with imprisonment of either description or a term which may extend to ten years and shall also be to fine.

Explanation - Penetration is sufficient to candidate the carnal intercourse necessary to the offence described in this section.²²⁷

In 2009, Section 377 of the Indian Penal Code was given a more limited interpretation by the Delhi High Court, lifting the ban on same-sex sexual activity among consenting adult men.

However, in the Indian state of Jammu and Kashmir, the Indian Penal Code is not applicable, but rather the Ranbir Penal Code (adapted from the Indian Penal Code) is applicable. Since the judgment of the Delhi High Court applies only where the Indian Penal Code is applicable, it does not change comparable provisions in Jammu and Kashmir. Therefore, Section 377 of the Ranbir Penal Code remains in effect, prohibiting same-sex sexual activity. If Section 377 of the Indian Penal Code is struck down by the Supreme Court, then the corresponding provision in the Ranbir Penal Code will be automatically struck down as well – following precedents of the case Jankar Singh v State.²²⁸

Article 108: Sodomy is sexual intercourse with a male.

Article 109: In case of sodomy both the active and the passive persons will be condemned to its punishment.

Article 110: Punishment for sodomy is killing; the Sharia judge decides on how to carry out the killing.

Article 111: Sodomy involves killing if both the active and passive persons are mature, of sound mind and have free will.

Article 112: If a mature man of sound mind commits sexual intercourse with an immature person, the doer will be killed and the passive one will be subject to Ta’azir of 74 lashes if not under duress.

Article 113: If an immature person commits sexual intercourse with another immature person, both of them will be subject to Ta’azir of 74 lashes unless one of them was under duress.

Chapter 2: Ways of proving sodomy in court

Article 114: By confessing after four lashes to having committed sodomy, punishment is established against the one making the confession.

Article 115: A confession made before receiving four lashes (to having committed sodomy) does not involve punishment of “Had” but the confessor will be subject to Ta’azir (lesser punishments).

Article 116: A confession is valid only if the confessor is mature, of sound mind, has will and intention.

Article 117: Sodomy is proved by the testimony of four righteous men who might have observed it.

Article 118: If less than four righteous men testify, sodomy is not proved and the witnesses shall be condemned to punishment for Qazf (malicious accusation).

Article 119: Testimony of women alone or together with a man does not prove sodomy.

Article 120: The Sharia judge may act according to his own knowledge which is derived through customary methods.

Article 121: Punishment for Tafhiz (the rubbing of the thighs or buttocks) and the like committed by two men without entry, shall be hundred lashes for each of them.

Article 122: If Tafhiz and the like are repeated three lashes without entry and punishment is enforced after each time, the punishment for the fourth time would be death.

Article 123: If two men not related by blood stand naked under one cover without any necessity, both of them will be subject to Ta’azir of up to 99 lashes.

Article 124: If someone kisses another with lust, he will be subject to Ta’azir of 60 lashes.

²³¹ Text of the law in English is available at: http://mehr.org/Islamic_Penal_Code_of_Iran.pdf.

Article 125: If the one committing Tafhiz and the like or a homosexual man, repents before the giving of testimony by the witnesses, his punishment will be quashed; if he repents after the giving of testimony, the punishment will not be quashed.
 Article 126: If sodomy or Tafhizis proved by confession and thereafter he repents the Shariajudge may request the leader (Valie Amr) to pardon him.

Part 3: Lesbianism

Article 127: Mosaheqeh (lesbianism) is homosexuality of women by genitals.
 Article 128: The ways of proving lesbianism in court are the same by which the homosexuality (of men) is proved.
 Article 129: Punishment for lesbianism is hundred (100) lashes for each party.
 Article 130: Punishment for lesbianism will be established vis-a-vis someone who is mature, of sound mind, has free will and intention.
 Note: In the punishment for lesbianism there will be no distinction between the doer and the subject as well as a Muslim or non-Muslim.
 Article 131: If the act of lesbianism is repeated three lashes and punishment is enforced each time, death sentence will be issued the fourth time.
 Article 132: If a lesbian repents before the giving of testimony by the witnesses, the punishment will be quashed; if she does so after the giving of testimony, the punishment will not be quashed.
 Article 133: If the act of lesbianism is proved by the confession of the doer and she repents accordingly, the Sharia judge may request the leader (ValieAmr) to pardon her.
 Article 134: If two women not related by consanguinity stand naked under one cover without necessity, they will be punished to less than hundred (100) lashes (Ta'azir). In case of its repetition as well as the repetition of punishment, hundred (100) lashes will be hit the third time."

After the American invasion in 2003 the Penal Code of 1969 was reinstated in Iraq. This code does not prohibit same-sex relations.²³² However, various reports have shown that self-proclaimed Sharia judges have sentenced people to death for committing homosexual acts and that militias frequently have kidnapped, threatened and killed LGBT people. For example in August 2009, Human Rights Watch published a report documenting a wide-reaching campaign of extrajudicial executions, kidnappings, and torture of gay men that began in Iraq in the beginning of 2009.^{233 234 235 236}

All sexual acts outside of heterosexual marriage are banned in the United Arab Emirates.²⁵⁴ However, whether sodomy is punished with death penalty remains in dispute. The Arabic text of article 354 is ambiguously phrased and can be translated in different ways. Some sources indicate that the article punishes rape of a woman or forced sodomy with a man, while others indicate that it punishes rape on women and sodomy between men.

The semi-official translation used by attorneys in the Emirates states that “any individual who forcibly compels a woman to carnal copulation or a man to sodomy” is punished by death.²⁵⁵ In a German parliamentary report the article has been translated as follows: “Irrespective of the provisions of the Act on Delinquent and Vagrant Juveniles, any person who forcibly engages in sexual intercourse with a woman, or a homosexual act with a homosexual, shall be punished with the death penalty. Coercion shall be recognised if the condemned person was fourteen years of age at the time of the commission of the offence.”²⁵⁶ Sofer, on the other hand, means that the article can be translated differently; “Whoever commits rape on a female or sodomy with a male”.²⁵⁷ Amnesty International, finally, considers article 354 to apply to rape only, and not to consensual same-sex acts. However, the organization states that the “Zina” provision according to Sharia law, punishing sexual acts by married persons outside of marriage by death, could possibly apply in the UAE, although it is not aware of any such death sentences for consensual same-sex conduct.²⁵⁸

Apart from federal law, consensual sodomy is criminalised in the emirates of Dubai and Abu Dhabi. Article 80 of the Dubai Penal Code punishes sodomy with a penalty of up to 14 years imprisonment, while article 177 of the Abu Dhabi Penal Code punishes such acts with a penalty of up to ten years imprisonment.²⁵⁹

EUROPE

Moves towards criminalization in Europe

While the general trend around legal and policy developments in Europe continues to point towards greater recognition of LGBTI people, there have been some negative developments in the last year that require attention. For the first time in decades homophobic legislation has been enacted by or tabled in a number of parliaments.

Northern Cyprus is the only place in Europe which still criminalises same-sex sexual relationship between consenting adults, but in April 2013 the government put forward a proposal to parliament to legalise homosexuality by amending the Criminal Code.

RUSSIA AND THE REGIONAL AND FEDERAL ANTI-PROPAGANDA LAWS

In March 2012, the Governor of St. Petersburg, Georgy Poltavchenko, signed the law prohibiting the so-called 'propaganda of sodomy, lesbianism, bisexuality, transgenderism and paedophilia to minors' (the 'Anti-Propaganda Law'). The law defines propaganda as "the targeted and uncontrolled dissemination of generally accessible information, which can damage the health, moral and spiritual development of the under aged." The legislation does not define the terms 'bisexualism' or 'transgenderism' leaving room for different interpretations. Any public mention of homosexuality may be considered as an administrative offense.

Also in March 2012, the initiative of a federal ban of 'propaganda of homosexuality' to the Duma. The voting in the first reading took place in January 2013 and the second reading is scheduled for later in the summer.

By the end of 2012, six other regions had enacted legislative provisions similar to the law adopted in St. Petersburg, namely Kostroma, Novosibirsk, Samara, Bashkortostan, Magadan, and Krasnodar. This means that following the developments of this year, the number of Russian regions with homophobic laws reached nine in total.

Also, the Moscow City Duma passed a law banning "all forms of sexual propaganda to minors". The provisions adopted by the different regions are on the whole similar, some only refer to homosexuality while others also mention “sodomy, lesbianism, bisexuality and transgenderism”. Some regional laws also provide for higher levels of fines up to 500,000 rubbles (approx. €12,500). Most of the regional laws follow the same model, with the exception of Bashkortostan where no fine is imposed on people considered as offenders under the new law.

The laws have since been used to ban prides in St. Petersburg and several other places in Russia.

UKRAINE AND THE PROPOSED LAW AGAINST PROMOTION OF HOMOSEXUALITY

The Draft Law 8711 prohibiting the so-called ‘promotion of homosexuality’ that was introduced to the parliament 2012 would criminalise any positive depiction of same-sex relations in public if adopted.

In May 2012, the Committee of Freedom of Speech and Information had recommended the adoption of the bill. The initial voting for the Bill scheduled for July was postponed and in October the Ukrainian parliament voted with an overwhelming majority to support the Bill.

The second hearing of the Bill has been postponed for a later date due to the elections in the parliament at the end of the year. Various human rights organisations, official representatives of the European Union, the Council of Europe, the UN and the OSCE, the Ukrainian Ombudsperson and the official representative of the Ukrainian Foreign Ministry as well as several politicians and public figures have condemned the bill.

If passed in the second hearing and signed by the President, the Bill will amend existing laws on ‘the protection of morals’, media and publishing, as well as the Criminal Code making any public mentioning of homosexuality a criminal offense. This would effectively limit the freedom of speech of mass media and criminalise LGBT human rights work in Ukraine.

In reaction to the adoption of the Bill 8711 prohibiting ‘promotion of homosexuality’ in its first reading, the European Commission has stated that Ukraine’s proposed anti-gay law would jeopardise prospects of visa liberalisation with the European Union. On behalf of the Commission, Štefan Füle, Commissioner for Enlargement and European Neighbourhood Policy, stated that “such legislative initiative stands in contradiction to the requirements of the relevant benchmarks of the [EU-Ukraine Visa Liberalisation] Action Plan”.

HUNGARY'S NEW DEFINITION OF FAMILY

In January 2013, a new Constitution entered into force. It does not specifically list sexual orientation as a ground in the prohibition of discrimination clause, and thus sexual orientation and gender identity are only implicitly covered under 'other status'.

The new constitution also restricts the definition of marriage as a union between a man and a woman. Additionally, the new Family Protection Act also came into force that defines the family unit as heterosexual and states that preparing for family life should be part of the school curriculum.

LATIN AMERICA AND THE CARIBBEAN

When Latin American “Cosmic race” starts to lead LGBTI issues

JOSÉ VASCONCELOS CALDERON WROTE “THE COSMIC RACE. MISSION OF THE IBEROAMERICAN RACE” IN 1925. HE DESCRIBED THE LATIN AMERICAN POPULATION AS THE FIRST “RACE OF SYNTHESIS IN THE GLOBE” HAVING THUS THE POWER TO TRANSFORM THE WORLD.

Human Rights are innate to human beings, and they should apply equally and universally without discrimination. But how often human rights are no more than human desires! Nevertheless human rights are not for governments to bestow upon citizens, but rather something all human beings are entitled to for the sole fact of their existence. But how often many States deprive their populations (or part of them) of such rights because of traditional prejudices! In this sense, one can say that whereas the fight for equal rights in legislation has been a battle against segregationist laws on the basis of race, gender, sexual orientation, gender identity or other condition, the fight for equal rights in everyday life has been a battle against prejudices and so-called traditional cultural values based on such prejudices.

José Vasconcelos Calderon wrote in 1925 a philosophical essay called “The Cosmic Race. Mission of the Iberoamerican Race” where he described the Latin American population as the first “race of synthesis in the globe” having thus the power to transform the world.

Nowadays Latin America, at the international level, is among those leading the efforts to abolish segregationist laws against people on the basis of sexual orientation or gender identity, and it is leading the way in the promotion of LGBTI equality to the point that many laws or judicial decisions adopted here can be considered more advanced than those of other continents. We will point out here (I) some examples of these advanced laws or decisions, while at the same (II) we will draw the attention to fundamentalist forces, particularly of religious nature, like political movements associated to some evangelical churches, which are working to obstruct, reverse or impede such advancements and to make LGBTI population and its gains invisible again.

I. Some countries of Latin America are going far beyond other continents with regard to the legal recognition of gender identity. The Argentinean Gender Identity Law of 2012 permits to legally change name and sex of a person by means of the issuance of a new birth certificate recognizing his/her inner perception of gender identity. This procedure is made before the Civil Registry Officer by simple request of the person, without the need to present any evidence of hormone therapy, gender reassignment surgeries, medical or psychological reports, or any other proof, except for the simple will of the person to be legally considered of a certain sex and have a certain name. The Registrar Officer has no power to object this petition because it fully depends on the will of the petitioner. The procedure takes about ten working days and the person receives then a new birth certificate, a new identity card and passport, and may request for the change of all other documents issued on the previous name and sex. This procedure may also be initiated by persons under legal age with the participation of their parents. And gender identity recognition may be requested by foreigners legally residents of Argentina, provided however that they cannot achieve the recognition of their identity in their countries.

Other countries are following this example. In this regard, the Uruguayan Gender Identity Law of 2009 is now applied more easily, although it requires –as in the case of Mexico City- a judicial decision. Chile and Ecuador had approved in first discussion in their respective Congresses, a draft Gender Identity Law. And there is a similar initiative in Costa Rica.

In the absence of a Gender Identity Law, some judicial decisions have recognized the full legal identity of trans people without the need of a surgical reassignment in Chile, Bolivia, Brazil and Bolivia. On their side Colombia and Ecuador permit the free change of name –not sex- of any person by means of a simple administrative request.

As far as sexual orientation is concerned, several countries in Latin America recognize equal rights for same-sex couples and their families. In this regard, Argentina, Uruguay and Mexico City allow egalitarian marriage, co-maternity, co-paternity and joint adoption, while Colombia, Ecuador and Brazil recognize equal rights to all couples. These rights were recognized by means of Judicial Decisions of the Constitutional Court of Colombia and the Federal Supreme Tribunal of Brazil. Colombia is currently discussing in the Congress egalitarian marriage.

Other countries such as Bolivia have criminalized homophobia and other still have criminalized hate crimes, as in Costa Rica.

II. However, things are not so beautiful everywhere, not even in the above-mentioned countries. The religious fundamentalists are very active in the whole region. In Brazil a racist and homophobic religious leader was elected to head the Human Rights Committee of the Congress, where he is trying to reverse all the improvements. In other countries few or no improvements have been achieved in order to get equal rights and opportunities, as in the case of Peru and Venezuela in South America and most of Central America and in the Caribbean countries. In Venezuela the recognition of gender identity of trans population is valid only for those born before 1977, as since 1998 no request of recognition of gender change has been granted. I believe these contradictions in the continent are somehow unrelated to the notions of left or right, so often used to explain support or lack of support to LGBTI equal rights.

In conclusion, we have strong signs that the “cosmic race” is proposing new and original solutions with regard to LGBTI rights. We are becoming a model for LGBTI rights in the world. We are even proposing to eliminate the mention of gender in legal documents, as it serves only to grant or deny rights to some persons, as before was the case for the mentions of race or religion. Is there an original cosmic answer to LGBTI struggles on its way?

However, despite these advances, there are also signs of a much stronger and coordinated fundamentalist movement, with the implication that advancements might be more difficult to achieve in the future.

NORTH AMERICA

Advances must be viewed against the steady decline of key social and economic indicators

In the past year North American groups, organizations and individuals dedicated to LGBTI rights have been part of a significant acceleration in our struggle to advance basic human rights for lesbians, gays, bisexuals, intersex, trans and two-spirited peoples* of North America.

This change of pace is widely welcomed. Realistically however, current advances must be viewed against the backdrop of austerity-driven economic planning and the steady decline of key social and economic indicators affecting North America's LGBTI communities and particularly our most marginalized members.

Observers note that unequal and widening wealth distribution is developing hand in hand with public policy that dramatically undermines workplace organizing for the defence of human rights, and modifies public education systems to be increasingly stratified and disadvantaged by racism and economic injustice.

While public harassment of lesbian, gay and bisexual people appears to be decreasing in various urban centres hate crimes are reported to be on the increase across Canada. Violence aimed specifically against trans women from racialized communities is known to have increased dramatically. Across the United States these attacks are 16 times that of the national rate.

Within Canada, a variety of government-funded community and health services for under-employed and poorly housed trans people have been among the first to be cut by cash-strapped government departments facing austerity-driven public policy.

After years of concerted community pressure in a number of provincial jurisdictions of Canada laws have been enacted:

- to end discrimination of trans persons based on gender identity. (Similar legislation is in its final days of debate at the national level.)

* North American indigenous peoples who are LGBTI identify as "two-spirited".

- to curtail violence against LGBTI youth and to combat homophobic / transphobic harassment and teen suicides.

It is extremely encouraging that there have been a healthy number of Canadian provincial education departments establishing pre-service teacher training on the rights of sexual minorities and an increasing number of police authorities calling on our national LGBTI organization, Egale Canada, to set up in-service anti-homophobia and anti-transphobia training for frontline officers.

Across the United States regionally-based LGBTI activists are now broadening their agenda to include work for racial justice, adoption rights, and equal housing opportunities. In the past year, during the run-up to presidential and state elections many LGBTI organizations developed strong alliances with NGO's working to stop the introduction of fraudulent regulations in the voting process, aimed at barring elderly, young, racialized and transgender voters. Several of these proposed regulations were resoundingly defeated in states across the country.

Much legislative reform campaigning remains state-based, with the exception of the United States Supreme Court case hearing on California's infamous Proposition 8 which restricted marriage rights to heterosexual Americans. The Supreme Court is also examining the issue of the 1996 national Defense of Marriage Act which does not require states to recognize marriages from other states and currently prevents federal recognition of LGBTI relationships. This case also includes a hearing on the constitutionality of denying marriage to LGBTI couples.

Finally, during the course of this year a key public policy tool which has become an increasingly dangerous threat to the rights of sexual minorities has taken root across the region. So-called "Right to Work" legislation established in southern US states is now being rolled out by conservative governments at the provincial, state and national levels across the industrial heartland of North America.

The introduction of such legislation contravenes workplace rights established by the International Labour Organization and related international covenants in the past 60 years. Key human rights are eliminated by this legislation. Once such laws are enacted homophobia, transphobia and other forms of discrimination have been increasingly used as a tool to weaken collective rights of assembly, the right to representation and the validity of collective bargaining as a guaranteed tool for negotiating safe, harassment-free and discrimination-free conditions of work.

Despite welcome reforms to laws and the positive impact of changing public opinion on the human rights of sexual minorities in North America, it is widely noted that the broad social forces that impact the daily lives of LGBTI people across the continent remain in place.

The State of Same-Sex Marriage in the United States

The United States is not united in its position on same-sex marriage. However, several recent developments indicate growing support for LGBT legal equality. In fact, on May 9, 2012, President Barack Obama became the first United States President to endorse same-sex marriage when he said, “At a certain point, I’ve just concluded that for me personally it is important for me to go ahead and affirm that I think same-sex couples should be able to get married.”

Currently, nine US states and the District of Columbia have legalized same-sex marriage, including Massachusetts (2004), Connecticut (2008), the District of Columbia (2009), Iowa (2009), Vermont (2009), New Hampshire (2010), New York (2011), Maine (2012), Washington (2012), and Maryland (2013). The Rhode Island Senate passed a marriage equality bill in 2013, which Governor Lincoln Chafee said he would sign. This would make Rhode Island the tenth US state to legalize same-sex marriage. Several other states have introduced marriage-like civil unions or registered partnerships – California (1999), New Jersey (2006), Oregon (2008), Colorado (2009), Nevada (2009), Wisconsin (2009), Illinois (2011), Rhode Island (2011), and Delaware (2012). On the other hand, 38 states prohibit same-sex marriage by statute or state constitutional amendment.

Recent legal cases raise the issue that prohibitions against same-sex marriage are unconstitutional, based primarily on the Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment, guaranteeing equal treatment under the law, and the Full Faith and Credit Clause of the Constitution, which ensures that judicial decisions in one state are recognized in other states. The legal status of same-sex marriage, however, remains contentious.

The same-sex marriage debate in the United States began in 1990 when the Hawaiian Department of Health denied marriage licenses to three gay couples. The couples sued and lost in 1991. The case was appealed in 1993, when the Hawaiian Supreme Court held that denial of marriage licenses to same-sex couples was unconstitutional and again in 1996, with the Circuit Court’s ruling that prohibiting same-sex marriage violated the state’s equal protection clause. In 1998, Hawaiian voters passed Constitutional Amendment 2, allowing the state legislature to ban same-sex marriage. The Hawaiian Legislature did not recognize same-sex marriage, but had, in 1997, passed legislation allowing same-sex couples to benefit from some marriage-like rights. This case led President Bill Clinton to sign the Defense of Marriage Act (DOMA) in 1996, which restricted the use of “marriage” and “spouse” to legal unions between one man and one woman in federal law. Section 3 of this policy prevents same-sex couples from benefiting from over 1,110 federal marriage benefits, including being able to file joint federal taxes, inheriting Social Security survivor benefits, sponsoring a partner's immigration visa, deferring federal property taxes on a deceased spouse's estate, and so on.

On March 27, 2013, the Supreme Court of the United States heard arguments about the constitutionality of DOMA in United States v. Windsor. Edith Windsor, the widow and executor of the estate of her late spouse, Thea Clara Spyer, would have avoided $363,000 in federal estate taxes if their 2007 marriage in Toronto, Canada, which was recognized by New York state law, had been federally recognized. Windsor's suit sought a declaration that DOMA was unconstitutional. When she brought the suit in 2010, the official government position was to support DOMA and the restriction of marriage to one man and one woman; the Bipartisan Legal Advisory Group of the House of Representatives filed a petition to defend DOMA and urged dismissal of Windsor's case in 2011. The District Court denied the motion, holding that DOMA was unconstitutional. In total, eight federal courts (including the First and Second Circuit Court of Appeals) have found DOMA unconstitutional. The Obama administration has also decided not to enforce DOMA, but this does not resolve the legal restrictions in DOMA.

The Court has not rendered its ruling on this matter, but statements by the Justices during the March arguments suggest the Court may find DOMA unconstitutional. Justice Anthony Kennedy was concerned that the federal law intrudes on states' rights to regulate marriage and that the more than 1,100 federal rights of marriage meant that the federal government was "intertwined with citizens' daily lives." Many gay rights activists and lawyers use the argument that laws like DOMA violate the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments' guarantee of legal equality, but many Justices did not seem convinced by this argument, particularly Justice Antonin Scalia, when he said "I'm curious, when did it become unconstitutional to exclude homosexual couples from marriage? 1791? 1868, when the 14th Amendment was adopted? Sometime after Baker, where we said it didn't even raise a substantial federal question? When did the law become this?"

Justice Scalia's comment is referring to the status of gays and lesbians in the legal system and the fact that gays and lesbians are not a "protected class" under the Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment, which ensures that state laws treat individuals similarly in similar circumstances and conditions. The Court relies on a three-tiered approach when deciding if a group can qualify for this most stringent legal protection. Most challenges to constitutionality are decided using the "rational basis test" – that is, a discriminatory policy is arbitrary or irrational and serves no legitimate state need. The rational basis level of scrutiny has been used in most LGBT cases brought to the Court. When homosexual sodomy was decriminalized in Lawrence v. Texas 539 US 558 (2003), Justice Sandra Day O'Connor argued that criminalizing homosexual sodomy, but not heterosexual sodomy, did not pass the rational basis test because it made sodomy criminal only when engaged in by homosexuals, but not by heterosexuals.

The next stringent level of judicial review is intermediate-level judicial scrutiny. This level of review requires the state to prove that differential treatment under the law is substantially related to some state interest. The Court discussed intermediate scrutiny in Romer v. Evans 517 US 620 (1996), when it struck down a Colorado state amendment that would have prevented sexual orientation from being included in any anti-discrimination legislation in Colorado. The Court found that this policy did not protect a legitimate state interest because it was motivated by a desire to harm a politically unpopular group.

The most stringent level of judicial scrutiny, strict scrutiny, requires the state to show that different treatment under the law serves a necessary state interest and is used in cases when a claim is made by a protected group. To be classified as a protected group, the group must meet specific criteria, such as having "obvious, immutable, or distinguishing characteristics," being politically powerless, and having a history of discrimination. Different legal treatment by categories such as race, religion, and national origin are protected and cases involving these groups are subject to strict scrutiny. The classification of sexual orientation as a protected class has been difficult, in part, because gays and lesbians may not be perceived as politically powerless and the evidence of immutable characteristics or persistent discrimination have not been compelling, according to the Court. When the Court makes its decision on United States v. Windsor, it could decide that gays and lesbians are a protected group. If so, the US government would have to prove that violating the Fifth Amendment's guarantee of equal protection for same-sex couples who are legally married under the laws of their state serves an important and necessary state interest. However, based on the discussion during the March arguments, it seems most likely the Court will make its decision using the rational basis test – that is, determine if same-sex couples are being treated differently than heterosexual couples for no legitimate state interest.

The Court heard arguments on another significant case regarding same-sex marriage on March 26, 2013 in Hollingsworth v. Perry. In this case, a lesbian couple, Kristin Perry and Sandra Stier, and a gay couple, Paul Katami and Jeffrey Zarrillo, sued California state officials after being denied marriage licenses in 2009 on the basis that California's Proposition 8 violated their Fourteenth Amendment right to equal protection under the law. Proposition 8 amended California's Constitution such that "only marriage between a man and a woman is valid or recognized by California." The statements in this case provide no clear evidence of how the Court will rule. Unlike the DOMA case, which concerns federally granted rights, this case involves a state-level matter of defining marriage; that point makes this case problematic because regulating marriage has historically been a state right, not a federal responsibility. Justice Kennedy wondered if "the case was properly granted" - if the Court had jurisdiction to hear Hollingsworth at all. Justice Scalia, however, argued that the Court had already "crossed that river;" they had already agreed to hear the case. If the Court decides it should not hear the case, the Ninth Circuit Court ruling striking down Proposition 8 as unconstitutional would prevail; alternatively, the Court could overturn the Circuit Court's decision (if the backers of Proposition 8 did not have "standing" - that is, they did not properly show that their personal legal interest had been violated by overturning Proposition 8). It is likely that the Court will make a decision on this case. And yet, if they do render a decision, it is unclear what impact it will have on the state of same-sex marriage in the United States. The Court could find that same-sex couples have the right to marry, it could deny same-sex couples the right of marriage, or it could decide this is a state-level issue.

No matter the outcome of both these cases before the Supreme Court, they indicate a growing concern with the state of same-sex marriage in the United States. Activists and lawyers on both sides of this issue argue passionately about the economic costs and consequences of marriage, the affect of parental marriage on children, the moral orientation towards homosexuality, and more. But for same-sex couples seeking relationship recognition, these are not simply legal or scholarly arguments. These are lived experiences of inequality.

Australia: failed promises

ANTI-DISCRIMINATION

The Federal government has abandoned the anti-discrimination consolidation bill, despite the Liberals indicating they did not see LGBTI inclusion as a hurdle to the bill, due to the numerous limits and exemptions, especially religious ones, according to the Liberal party dissenting report. Consequently the Sex discrimination (Lesbian Gay Bisexual Transgender and Intersex) amendment bill has been introduced and seems likely to be passed into law in the June sitting of the Australian federal parliament. The submission period and committee stage will run for four weeks, closing on the 26 of April for the senate enquiry.

Where the proposed consolidation bill was quite tight on exemption, moving the majority of LGBTI provisions from that bill into the sex discrimination act means that LGBTI will be matched with those exemptions already existing in that act. The result is that LGBTI people will be subjected to new exemptions.

The sex discrimination act does not contain provisions against vilification. The move to the sex discrimination act will give us much weaker protections than those proposed in the consolidation bill, however it does propose anti-discrimination protection in Australian federal law for the first time and for Intersex for the first time in the world.

MARRIAGE EQUALITY

Two Marriage equality bills were put to the federal parliament, however, both failed. Both bills were nearly true equality bills in that they proposed a marriage should be between two consenting adults. Interestingly the issue of marriages between two people was consistently raised as a hot button issue for LGBTI both in the senate hearings (again Gina Wilson participated in those on behalf of Intersex and LGBTI) and in the mainstream media. Such marriages are already recognised in Australia when they are legally performed overseas and the family Court of Australia has adjudicated in the dissolution of many. All of those marriages are between heterosexual couples being wed within the traditions of one of the world's largest religions

It is confounding that such unions are projected by parliament and mainstream press as “the slippery slope” and the worst aspects of LGBTI people seeking marriage equality when, In Australia at least, it is a mainstream heterosexual issue.

STATE BASED MARRIAGE

The Australian constitution places the issue of marriages within the ambit of the federal government. The states have the funded task of registering unions on the federal government’s behalf. The federal government in 2004 amended the marriage legislation to make certain unions could only be between a man and a woman, according to their birth certificate categorisation.

Given that limitation, it is thought that the constitution allows states to make laws concerning marriage, provided they do not infringe federal powers. Some constitutional lawyers have suggested that if the States bring into being “same-sex “ marriage acts they can stand constitutionally, so that two kinds of marriage might be possible in Australia, a federal and a state version.

State-based marriage bills have been put or are imminent in Tasmania, Victoria, South Australia, West Australia, New South Wales and the Australian Capital Territory. Gina Wilson has been closely involved in these bills and has put submissions to all of them and attended hearings in respect of them. She observed that the original bill put to the Tasmanian legislature was flawed and these flaws have been repeated by the other States following that state’s lead.

BISEXUAL, TRANS AND INTERSEX ISSUES

Bisexual issues are not addressed in the proposed bills, since the push to legalise multi-partner marriages has been rejected by many LGBTI organisations.

Trans individuals are already allowed to marry under federal heterosexual law, but must end any existing marriage to prevent contradicting the marriage definition. For Intersex, neither the federal or state laws addresses Intersex people’s issues, e.g. intersex unfriendly legal precedent and birth certificate and passport issues.

So far all so-called marriage equality bills, including the recent one from the UK, will lead to anything but equality. Gina Wilson notes the UK bill like the Australian bills does not address bisexual rights, trans rights or intersex rights to marriage.
