

I. EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

1. Since the end of the Liberian Civil War in 2003, authorities have been slowly pursuing peacebuilding and reconciliation efforts, as well as a return to the rule of law.¹ Domestic violence and rape remain pervasive; rape and sexual assault are the most commonly reported violent crimes.² Strong laws and policies protecting women from gender-based violence exist, but leniency and corruption in government and in the Liberian National Police forces mar their enforcement.³ Most survivors cannot access available services.⁴
2. Female Genital Mutilation (FGM) exists in Liberia as an initiation ritual into the Sande secret society (with the Poro society as the equivalent for men and boys), which operates primarily in “the bush” (i.e. rural areas). A report from 2017 estimates that 200 million Liberian women and girls alive today, living inside and outside of the country, have undergone FGM, including 44 million girls age 14 years and younger.⁵ Outright discussion of FGM is taboo, and people who speak out against it face violence and death threats.⁶ The National Traditional Council, the main governing body for customary law, has pledged to end FGM, but statutory measures have failed.⁷
3. The rights of LGBTI individuals are severely compromised. Individuals experience hate speech, harassment, violence, and abuse.⁸ Many victims avoid reporting crimes to police for fear they will face arrest because of their gender identity or sexual orientation, or due to fear of discrimination and violence from their community or family.⁹ Liberian law does not criminalize homosexuality, although political leaders have introduced bills proposing to designate same-sex sexual relations a felony.¹⁰
4. Harmful practices, gender-based violence against women, and violence and discrimination based on sexual orientation and gender identity lead many men, women, and children to flee Liberia and seek refuge in the United States.¹¹ The Advocates represents hundreds of Liberian refugees seeking asylum. This report documents material The Advocates has compiled from interviews with Liberian asylum seekers between January 2011 and January 2018.¹²

II. BACKGROUND AND FRAMEWORK

A. 2015 Universal Periodic Review of Liberia

5. During the second cycle of Liberia’s Universal Periodic Review, the government accepted 147 recommendations and noted 39.¹³
 1. Criminalize FGM and other harmful practices

Status of Implementation: Accepted, Partially Implemented

6. The Government of Liberia accepted recommendations to adopt laws explicitly banning FGM and other harmful practices, to take all necessary steps to ensure its eradication, and to punish complicit officials in these practices.¹⁴ The legislature’s attempt to ban FGM failed and an executive order banning the practice expired after one year.¹⁵ Liberia has not implemented these recommendations.

2. End sexual and gender-based violence against women

Status of Implementation: Accepted, Partially Implemented

7. The government accepted recommendations to intensify efforts to further combat gender-based violence against women and build institutional capacity, as well as recommendations to improve access to justice for survivors.¹⁶ It also accepted recommendations to criminalize spousal rape and increase public awareness campaigns targeted at preventing gender-based violence against women and girls and domestic violence.¹⁷ The Penal Code still does not explicitly criminalize spousal rape.¹⁸ Liberia has partially implemented these recommendations.
8. Liberia accepted recommendations to sign the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW) but has not yet ratified it.¹⁹

3. End discrimination and violence based on sexual orientation and gender identity

Status of Implementation: Partially Accepted, Not Implemented

9. The Liberian Government accepted recommendations to condemn and combat discrimination based on sexual orientation and gender identity.²⁰ It noted recommendations to repeal existing discriminatory provisions and to take legislative action to eliminate discrimination and violence based on sexual orientation or gender identity.²¹ The Liberian Government noted recommendations to repeal articles in the Penal Code criminalizing consensual relationships between adults of the same sex.²²
10. During the interactive dialogue, the Liberian Government stated it is “not the policy of the State” to discriminate against LGBTI individuals, but affirmed its desire to “proceed with caution due to the religious and cultural climate” of Liberia before instituting any changes.²³ The Liberian Government has not implemented these recommendations.

B. Domestic Legal Framework

11. Liberia’s formal statutory law is modeled after Anglo-American common law and governs the State and non-traditional sectors.²⁴ Liberia’s customary law is grounded in unwritten cultural practices of Liberia’s indigenous peoples.²⁵
12. The Liberian Constitution of 1986 establishes the legal framework for the protection of human rights and the promotion of justice. All persons, regardless of their race, gender, beliefs, place of origin, or political opinion are born with inalienable rights (Art. 11), including the freedom of thought and religion (Art. 14), as well as the rights to life, liberty, property, and justice (Art. 20).²⁶ Any laws or customs inconsistent with the Constitution are legally void (Art. 2).²⁷
13. Article 14.74 of the Liberian Constitution criminalizes “Voluntary Sodomy” and “deviate sexual intercourse.”²⁸
14. On January 19, 2018 outgoing President Ellen Sirleaf Johnson issued an executive order on domestic violence temporarily criminalizing performing FGM on minors and nonconsenting adults.²⁹ In Liberian law, executive orders bind for only one year, and Sirleaf’s order has therefore expired.³⁰ The legislature eliminated from the Domestic Violence Bill a provision that would have banned FGM after some lawmakers asserted that FGM is a “cultural” matter that takes place outside households.³¹

15. In 2019, the legislature passed the Domestic Violence Act, thereby criminalizing acts of violence including: physical, sexual, economic, emotional, and psychological abuse; spousal violence; and violence between other forms of intimate partners.³²

III. IMPLEMENTATION OF INTERNATIONAL HUMAN RIGHTS OBLIGATIONS

Right or area 2.1. Acceptance of international norms

16. As noted in paragraph 8, Liberia has not yet ratified the Optional Protocol to CEDAW.³³

Right or area 6. Human rights education and training

17. As discussed below in paragraphs 22, 34, and 35, police enforcement of the 2019 Domestic Violence Act is lax, and judges lack training on how to interpret and apply the law.³⁴

Right or area 9. Racial discrimination

18. Members of ethnic or religious groups that prohibit FGM are sometimes kidnapped and forced to undergo FGM by relatives or neighbors who belong to ethnic groups that subject their own members to FGM.³⁵

Right or area 12.5. Prohibition of torture and cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment

19. FGM is a form of torture, and its practice in Liberia involves prolonged torture. For example, an aunt took a thirteen year old girl to the bush, where elders tied her to a tree and subjected her to FGM. The elders left her there bleeding for three days and she still suffers complications.³⁶

Right or area 13. Right to liberty and security

20. Police target and harass people based on sexual orientation or gender identity, contributing to underreporting of crimes against the LGBTI community.³⁷ A client’s family arranged for a rebel leader to rape and forcibly marry her to “correct” her sexuality. After she continued to have relationships with women in secret, her husband conspired with her family to “teach her how to be with a man” to orchestrate further rape. Her family disowned her and sends death threats despite her fleeing the country.³⁸
21. As described in paragraphs 24 and 27 below, police are often indifferent to and sometimes participate in harassment of people based on their sexual orientation or gender identity. Many victims flee, fearing further harassment or violence after police inform the harassers of the police report.³⁹
22. As described in paragraphs 26 and 33–35 below, survivors of gender-based violence against women lack legal redress. The 2019 Domestic Violence Bill lacks funding and authorities are not fulfilling its victim-services provisions.⁴⁰

Right or area 14.2. Freedom of thought, conscience and religion

23. In some cases an individual or family may object to FGM on religious grounds, but secret societies nonetheless commit kidnappings and subject women and girls to FGM. One

client who objected to FGM on religious grounds is fearful of returning to her ancestral village.⁴¹ When she and her daughter returned to the village for a funeral, family members attempted to kidnap her and her daughter to subject them to FGM.⁴² Multiple clients describe relatives of their spouses attempting to kidnap their children through trickery or intimidation.⁴³

Right or area 14.5. Freedom of association

24. LGBTI activists maintain low profiles due to death threats and violence.⁴⁴ A client who spoke out against an attack on a prominent gay rights activist experienced verbal and physical threats, including threats from two men who he believes were plain-clothes police officers. The same two men robbed the client's employee of his phone and computer. The client contacted the police on multiple occasions but received no help or protection.⁴⁵

Right or area 16. Right to an effective remedy, impunity

25. Widespread perceptions of police and government support for secret societies deter people from reporting FGM.⁴⁶ A client's husband heard from his family that if his daughter did not join the Sande society, the family would ostracize him and subject him to voodoo. When the family came for the daughter, the client hid her. In response, an aunt beat the client. The husband received a letter from village elders purporting to fine him and saying that both the client and her daughter would be taken and forced into the Sande society. The client never told police because she believes some police support the Poro and Sande Societies, and she feared police would tell people in her husband's village anything she reported.⁴⁷
26. Police fail to respond effectively to domestic violence.⁴⁸ A client demanded a divorce after learning her husband had been a fighter in the Liberian civil war and had another wife. In response he beat her, shot her in the leg, and confined her to the house. After the initial attack, he frequently beat and raped her. After he discovered she had tried to call a lawyer, he beat her again and confined her to just one room of the house. She escaped to a church, but the husband's bodyguards brought her back to him. After a neighbor reported the abuse to the police, police officers came to the home, but they left without doing anything. Once when she ran away, her husband beat her in public. After four years of violence, she was finally able to secure a visa and flee to the United States.⁴⁹
27. Also, as shown in paragraphs 20–21 and 24, people who face violence and discrimination based on sexual orientation or gender identity, and people who speak out in favor of LGBTI rights, do not receive protection from law enforcement.⁵⁰

Right or area 24. Right to health

28. Knives used in FGM can transmit blood-borne diseases such as HIV and Ebola.⁵¹ One woman described seven women and girls dying from Ebola after a single Sande society initiation ceremony.⁵²
29. Medical treatment of victims of FGM is insufficient.⁵³ Complications from infections or blood loss frequently cause death.⁵⁴ Multiple survivors describe ongoing pain and the inability to become pregnant or give birth.⁵⁵

Right or area 29.1. Discrimination against women

30. In some communities, women who have not undergone FGM face stigma and the label of “Kpolo wa,” which translates as “sinner.”⁵⁶

Right or area 29.2. Gender-based violence

31. The National Traditional Council, the highest customary law authority, has agreed to eliminate FGM in its customary law system.⁵⁷
32. Nonetheless, FGM is practiced with impunity. Most FGM kidnapping charges never make it to court.⁵⁸ Police often refuse to arrest and charge Poro and Sande society members for their attacks and harassment of people who oppose or resist FGM.⁵⁹
33. As noted in paragraph 22 above, the Domestic Violence Act lacks the infrastructure, funding, and training necessary for enforcement.⁶⁰
34. The legal response to sexual violence and gender-based violence against women has fallen short. The government established a specialized court for cases of sexual violence (Court E), set up two shelters for victims of gender-based violence against women, and collaborates with a network of NGOs to provide comprehensive health and legal services for victims.⁶¹ Although infrastructure exists, the limitations of the justice system lead many survivors of gender-based violence against women, especially in rural areas, to pursue redress through the customary or traditional legal system.⁶² The Women and Children’s Protection Section of the Liberian National Police reported that 50% percent of domestic violence cases are abandoned due to lack of evidence.⁶³
35. Prosecutors rarely prosecute rape and other gender-based violence crimes perpetrated against women, and of cases prosecuted, few result in convictions.⁶⁴ A 2016 United Nations report found that only 2% of gender-based violence cases in Liberia resulted in a conviction of the perpetrator.⁶⁵

Right or area 36. Human rights defenders

36. Human rights defenders who oppose FGM face reprisals and threats of harm. One client, after being forced to undergo FGM, became a nursing assistant and warned girls and women of the risks of FGM. Villagers came to her house, threatening to take her to the bush and silence her. She quit and moved to Monrovia, but villagers tracked her down and beat her. She fled to the United States, fearing her daughter would be kidnapped and subjected to FGM.⁶⁶ Another client survived FGM and village elders told her if she revealed what the Sande society did she would be killed. Despite their threats she spoke out and subsequently received death threats. She found snakes placed inside her house and was forced to drink poison. Elders later kidnapped her and burned her leg and foot with a hot iron.⁶⁷ Another client spoke out against FGM founded a well-known group to oppose the practice. Men kidnapped him along with a colleague. The kidnappers attacked them, beat them, and threatened their lives. The client fled Liberia for his life.⁶⁸ A Liberian journalist fled the country after publishing an article about FGM and the Sande society.⁶⁹ One client became an anti-FGM activist after her friend told her she was the sole survivor of an initiation class of eight. The client founded an anti-FGM group on Facebook. She fled Liberia due to threats against her and her children.⁷⁰

37. Authorities have failed to prosecute multiple cases of arson perpetrated against human rights defenders.⁷¹

IV. RECOMMENDATIONS

38. This stakeholder report suggests the following recommendations for the Government of Liberia:

- Criminalize FGM by statute and cooperate with the National Tribal Council to ensure enforcement of FGM bans in rural areas.
- Ensure prosecution of domestic violence and gender-based violence cases in the Liberian judiciary by providing courts and prosecutors with the resources necessary to obtain evidence and to hire legal staff to bring cases to trial without overload.
- Ratify the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women.
- Explicitly criminalize spousal rape.
- Ensure law enforcement conducts prompt and thorough investigations of any reports of harassment, arson, or violence based on sexual orientation or gender identity or targeting human rights defenders supporting LGBTI rights.
- Ensure law enforcement conducts prompt and thorough investigations of all reports of violence, harassment, kidnapping, and arson targeting people who speak out against FGM or who refuse FGM. Establish independent investigation and prosecution mechanisms to ensure that police officers who are complicit in kidnappings or harassment of FGM objectors are held accountable.
- End impunity for Sande and Poro society members who engage in kidnappings, murder, harassment, arson, and other forms violence to engage in or promote the practice of FGM.
- Dedicate substantial resources toward a national awareness-raising campaign focusing on the Domestic Violence Act. Collaborate with women's non-governmental organizations to train local law enforcement to conduct investigations and carry out other duties under the Domestic Violence Act.
- Stand by previous pledges to eliminate institutional discrimination and violence against LGBTI people and their defenders by working with LGBTI civil society groups.
- Decriminalize same-sex sexual relations between consenting adults.
- Ensure immediate and ongoing high-quality medical and psychological treatment for all victims of FGM to treat the physical and psychological effects of the practice.

⁶¹ Report of the Working Group on the Universal Periodic Review, (September 25, 2015), U.N. Doc. A/HRC/30/4/Add.1, ¶49. Also available online at <https://documents-dds-ny.un.org/doc/UNDOC/GEN/G15/217/44/PDF/G1521744.pdf?OpenElement>. The SGBV Crimes Unit of the Ministry of Justice oversees the prosecution of SGBV crimes at Criminal Court "E," the specialized court for sexual offenses, and also at the circuit courts in the Justice and Security Hubs 1, 2, and 3 regions. Additionally, the Unit provides support to survivors and their families, including access to medical treatment, psychosocial services, temporary protective shelter at safe homes, education and empowerment packages, and start-up grants for small business and farming activities.

⁶³ U.S. Department of State, Country Reports on Human Rights Practices, "Liberia 2018 Human Rights Report" (March 13, 2019), referencing Rape and Domestic Violence. Also available online at <https://www.state.gov/wp-content/uploads/2019/03/Liberia-2018.pdf>.

⁶⁴ U.S. Department of State, Country Reports on Human Rights Practices, "Liberia 2018 Human Rights Report" (March 13, 2019), Referencing Rape and Domestic Violence. Police are not trained to deal with domestic violence despite the new bill causing many crimes to be improperly managed or to go unnoticed. Jurists also have been given no training on how to handle the new laws in court, leading to improper trial procedures.
