INTRODUCTION

This directory was created prior to the October 31, 1999 parliament elections for the purpose of providing a complete spectrum of Georgian political parties. Therefore, it was decided to include here not only the parties participating in parliamentarian elections, but all registered political parties.

According to the Ministry of Justice of Georgia, as of September 1, 1999, there are 124 political parties registered in Georgia. (79 parties were registered on September 26, 1998) In order to collect the material for this directory, ICCC distributed questionnaires to all 124 registered parties. 93 parties have been included in the directory, 31 parties failed to return the questionnaire. Some claimed they didn't have adequate time to respond, some of the parties have not been found at the addresses given by the Ministry of Justice and others just refused.

All of the information in this directory came from responses that were submitted by the political parties. The directory consists of three sections. The first section includes information about the 31 parties and blocs participating in the October 31, 1999 Partiament elections. In this section of the directory the parties are organised in the same order as they are to appear on the ballot. In the second section we present information about all other registered parties which will not be participating in the parliamenturian elections. In this section the parties are listed alphabetically. In the third section, we present information about local self-governing bodies that were elected as a result of the November 15 1998 local elections. There are 125 (Tollisi, Kutaisi, Batumi, Poti, Rustavi, 60 rayon, 60 city and town) local councils.

Section I

Overview of the October 31, 1999 Parliamentary Elections in Georgia

Elections of the Georgian Parliament of October 31, 1999, similar to elections of the Georgian Parliament of November 5, 1995, are regulated by the Georgian Constitution adopted in 1995 and the law of Georgia on the Parliamentary Elections adopted the same year. According to these regulations the Parliament of Georgia is elected for a four year term. Elections are held by mixed majority-proportional system. 235 MPs will be elected 150 MPs are elected by party lists on the basis of a proportional system and 85 MPs are elected according to single mandate election districts on the basis of majority.

Elections of Georgian Parliament of October 31, 1999 which are similar to elections of Georgian Parliament of November 5, 1995 are held in the entire territory of Georgia except Abkhazia and 8 election districts. Tskhinvali and Java election districts. Therefore, instead of 85 single-mandate election districts there are only 75. This means - only 75 MPs are elected by majority system. According to the article 59 of transitional provisions for the 1999 Parliamentary elections: "Before the complete restoration of the jurisdiction of Georgia in Abkhazia and before the necessary conditions are created for the elections of members of the Parliament of Georgia: a) Citizens elected from Abkhazia as a result of the 1992 elections who are members of the Parliament of Georgia by the time of the enforcement of this Law shall have their mandate as members of the Parliament extended."

There are 10 MPs in the present Parliament elected from Abkhazia in 1992

Despite much similarity in election legislation, this year elections differ from 1995 elections in several main points represented in Georgian constitution and election law. The Parliament of Georgia made amendments in the law on elections at the special session. The initiator of this amendment was Citizens' Union of Georgia.

These amendments have basically changed the rules the election commissions established. Before amendments, Parliament appointed a chairman and two members of CEC and Parliamentary parties appointed the other members. Five non-Parliament parties could together and appoint one member. There would be a minimum 23 members in CEC. According to new rules, CEC consists of 17 members for these elections, the president appoints four of them along with a chairman, with the Parliament agreement for a 5-year term. The Parliament of Georgia elects five members of CEC for a 4-year term, of them there should be no more than 3 Parliamentary majority representatives. Higher representative bodies of Abkhazia and Ajara's autonomous republies have the right to appoint one person each. Self-governing Bodies' Elections have this same right. The seven parties having the best results in 1998 can also appoint one CEC member each: 1. Citizens' Union of Georgia, 2. Union of Democrat Revival, 3. Labor Party of Georgia, 4. Socialist Party of Georgia, 5. National-Democrat party, 6. People's Party, 7. Union of Georgian Traditionalists

District and precinct commissions are established by the similar rule. CEC appoints chair men of district commissions and 6 members, and district commissions appoint 6 members of precinct commissions; besides the apriles noted above appoint members of district and precinct commissions.

The second main amendment in election legislation is a constitutional one. The 5% election barrier has been raised to a 7% election barrier. The initiator of this change was the National Democrat Party which got support from Citizens' Union of Georgia (although, Citizens' Union of Georgia had previously suggested to lower the barrier to 3%).

One more amendment to be underlined is the requirement for non-government organizations, that are willing to monitor elections, to pre-register with CEC ten days prior to elections. Registration conditions is delegated to CEC by the law. CEC adopted the decreemonitoring of elections should be done by non-government organizations, that: a) were established before January 1, 1998, b) regard monitoring of the election process as one of their goals and c) do not represent interests of any party candidate.

In order to participate in elections and be registered, a party must either collect 50,000 signatures of supporters, or be represented in the Parliament by an MP. A majority candidate must collect 1000 signatures, an MP does not need signatures.

CEC finished registration of candidates for October 31, 1999 elections on September 6.
42 parties and eight election blocs have been registered. Among those willing to participate in elections are parties that boycotted the 1992, 1995 and 1998 elections - so called "Zviadists" and the bloc "Round Table - Free Georgia". A certain part of "Zviadists" (about ten unregistered political parties led by Manana Archvadze, the spouse of ex-president of Georgia, Zviad Gamsakhurdia) still boycott this elections.

By October 1, 1999, 22 parties and 13 election blocs remain; the rest have refused to participate in elections. CEC annulled registration of some of the parties because of various reasons. Therefore, 31 parties and blocs are registered by October 18, 1999 with CEC.
