UNHCR in Colombia

March

UNHCR, the UN Refugee Agency, is in Colombia since 1997, supporting the State and communities in the prevention of forced displacement, the protection of refugees, asylum-seekers, internally displaced persons (IDPs), stateless persons and host communities, as well as advancing durable solutions.

In a context marked by renewed intensification of the internal armed conflict and increasingly complex dynamics of violence—compounded by mixed movements and a drastic reduction in humanitarian funding—UNHCR maintains a robust operational footprint across the country. Working with partners, civil society, communities, institutions and the private sector, UNHCR promotes tailored and local responses that connect humanitarian action, development and peace consolidation.

With a solid presence in 14 locations strategically positioned in border areas, conflict-affected territories, and major urban centres, UNHCR extends its reach through 15 fixed and four mobile Information and Orientation Points (PAOs). This network is further complemented by a remote chatbot service and the work of partners and allies operating on the ground.

Context

Colombia is at the epicentre of human mobility crisis in the Americas. Despite the 2016 Peace Agreement and ongoing negotiations under the Government’s “Total Peace” policy, the internal armed conflict has intensified in several regions, triggering new forced displacement, confinement and protection risks.

In 2025, forced displacement and confinement affected more than 430,000 people, with particularly severe impacts in regions such as the Catatumbo (Norte de Santander), La Guajira, Chocó, Cauca, Bolívar, Antioquia, Nariño, and other territories along the Pacific coast.

Violence perpetrated by non-State armed actors continues to drive acute protection risks. Mobility restrictions limit access to essential services and livelihoods, while the recruitment and use of children and gender-based violence further compound vulnerabilities. In contexts of limited State presence, these factors disproportionately affect Indigenous and Afro-Colombian communities, as well as Venezuelan refugees.

Colombia has a pivotal role in safeguarding regional stability. While northbound movements through the Darién Gap dropped sharply in 2025, growing reverse movements from Central and North America emerged, including children and adolescents exposed to serious protection risks. The adverse effects of climate events and disasters aggravate the situation of forcibly displaced people.

Xenophobia, disinformation and political polarization intensified in the lead-up to the 2026 elections, generating additional challenges to social cohesion and access to rights.
