From Torment to Tyranny

*Enhanced Persecution in Uganda
Following the Passage of the Anti-Homosexuality Act 2014*

20 December 2013 – 1 May 2014

"Every day we hear news that someone else has been victimised. I have never before seen our community hounded so persistently."

This report has been prepared by Sexual Minorities Uganda (SMUG) and the National LGBTI Security Team in response to the passing of the Anti-Homosexual Act 2014 by the Ugandan Government.

Sexual Minorities Uganda

SMUG is a not-for-profit network of Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual, Transgender and Intersex (LGBTI) human rights organisations. SMUG was set up on the 4th March 2004 to work towards achieving full legal and social equality for LGBTI people in Uganda. This would be done by incorporating all LGBTI organisations in Uganda to create one strong LGBTI community. It would then work on behalf of its member organisations, supporting and coordinating their activities and representing them through local, regional and international bodies or partners. SMUG has now developed into a network of 18 LGBTI member organisations in Uganda all working to advance the rights of LGBTI people and improve their welfare.

It is advocacy that has made SMUG an integral part of the human rights struggle in Uganda.

SMUG Vision: A liberated LGBTI community in Uganda.

SMUG Mission: To monitor, coordinate, and support member organisations to achieve their objectives aimed at the liberation of LGBTI people

Membership and Governance: SMUG represents all LGBTI people living in Uganda who belong to its member organisations. Our constituency is as diverse as Ugandan society itself. This implies that sexual and gender minorities in Uganda are of different tribes, cultures, sex and vary in educational background, economic class and creed. While this represents a great diversity in terms of educational and economic status, as well as gender identity and expression, our constituency is predominantly urban rather than rural.

The National LGBTI Security Team

The National LGBTI Security Team was re-constituted after the passing of the Anti-Homosexuality Act on 20th December 2013 due to the rising number of cases of violence and discrimination against LGBTI people in Uganda. The mandate of the team is to respond to such human rights violations against the LGBTI community. The Security Team covers cases beyond the membership of SMUG through a network of LGBTI organisations in Uganda.

Executive Summary

This report considers instances of persecution of the Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual, Transgender and Intersex (LGBTI) community in Uganda as recorded by Ugandan civil society organisations in the period of a little over four months after the Anti-Homosexuality Act (AHA) was passed by the Ugandan Parliament on 20th December 2013. The AHA was signed by President Museveni on 24th February 2014 and appeared in the official Uganda Gazette on 10 March 2014, when it entered into force. As this report establishes, a marked increase in instances of harassment and maltreatment can be traced back to the passing of the Act through Parliament. The reporting period under consideration is therefore between 20th December 2013 and 1st May 2014.

SMUG and the National LGBTI Security Team consider that all the human rights violations identified in this report amount to persecution, whether taken individually or collectively. The LGBTI community in Uganda is being targeted because they are LGBTI and the full force of the State, particularly the legislative and executive branches of government, is being used to hunt down, expose, demean and suppress Uganda's LGBTI people.

Uganda's anti-gay laws

Consensual sexual acts between adults of the same sex – even in private – have been criminalised in Uganda since British colonial rule.¹ Already persecuted by these old colonial laws, the AHA further criminalises the LGBTI community and their allies in Uganda through a number of draconian provisions. For example, the AHA creates new crimes, including: 'aggravated homosexuality',² carrying a life sentence; 'the promotion of homosexuality',³ carrying a five year sentence; and 'aiding and abetting homosexuality',⁴ carrying a seven year sentence.

In reality this means that simple everyday activities, such as renting a property to LGBTI people, running an organisation that promotes the health or human rights of members of the LGBTI community or living together as partners with someone of the same sex, have all become serious crimes under Ugandan law⁵. Under the AHA, two people of the same sex purporting to marry one another commit an offence which carries a life sentence.⁶

The passing of AHA has given permission to a culture of extreme and violent homophobia whereby both state and non-state actors are free to persecute Uganda's LGBTI people with impunity. These include violent attacks, arbitrary arrests, blackmail, evictions and a concerted effort to drive LGBTI civil society underground.

¹ Section 145 of the Ugandan Penal code: any person who 'has carnal knowledge of any person against the order of nature; [...] or permits a male person to have carnal knowledge of him or her against the order of nature, commits an offence and is liable to imprisonment for life'. Section 148 punishes acts of 'gross indecency' and carries a punishment of 7 years in prison: Penal Code Act 1950 (Cap 120)

² Section 3 AHA

³ Section 13 AHA

⁴ Section 7 AHA

⁵ The offence of 'Homosexuality' is found in Section 2 of the Act and makes illegal: 'touching' another person with the intention to commit the act of 'homosexuality'. This provision is so wide and ambiguously drafted that even a small gesture of intimacy such as holding hands or kissing could, in theory, be seen as a basis for prosecution. Under section 4 of the Act, landlords, LGBTI groups and AIDS clinics could find themselves facing prosecution for 'supporting' or 'encouraging' an individual to engage in acts of homosexuality.

⁶ Section 12 AHA

Rise in persecution

In the period covered by this Report there have been 162 reported incidences of persecution perpetrated against Ugandan LGBTI people, which Sexual Minorities Uganda (SMUG) and the National LGBTI Security Team have been able to verify through extensive civil society networks. In reality, this is probably only the tip of the iceberg. Most incidents of harassment or intimidation, for example, are not reported and there may have been other serious cases which SMUG and the National LGBTI Security Team have not been alerted to or have been unable to verify.

Direct comparisons with the same four-month period in 2012 to 2013, for example, are difficult as the collation of cases in the past was not done on a month-by-month basis. That said, a simple comparison of the statistics in this reporting period with the total number of cases reported to SMUG through the same channels in 2012 and 2013 is telling. In 2012, 19 cases were reported; in 2013 only 8. The 162 cases reported since 20th December 2013, therefore, represent an increase of between 750% and 1900% on previous years, an increase which can only be explained by the passage of the AHA and the virulently homophobic atmosphere this has engendered in Uganda.

Cases in this report

The cases relied upon in this Report are based upon personal testimony directly reported to and/or identified by SMUG and the National LGBTI Security Team (the Security Team). While it also draws on newspaper reports, these have not been included as standalone ‘cases’. The statistics in this report represent only those victims of persecution with whom SMUG and/or the Security Team have been in direct contact, and who have supplied their names and verified their identities.

Where verification has not been possible, cases have not been included, however serious the allegations may be. For example, whilst instances of the murder and torture of LGBTI people have been reported in this period, these have only been included here if they have been verified independently. In the interest of accuracy, as well as accountability, only those cases the circumstances of which have been fully determined without need for speculation have been relied upon in compiling the statistics.

Reported incidents of persecution have been collected in four ways:

1. Information collected through the National LGBTI Security Team: the outreach team visits victims, interviews witnesses and responds to emergency situations as and when they occur.
2. Reports collected via network organisations: people directly affiliated by membership, association or registration report incidents, which are then referred to SMUG by the member organisation.⁷
3. Individual case reporting: cases are directly reported to SMUG by individuals within the network, or individuals are referred to SMUG by friends or others who know of the services SMUG offers. SMUG then provides an emergency response, visits victims and collects information through direct interviews.
4. Media report monitoring: SMUG closely monitors the Media, and when new incidents are reported, where possible SMUG follows up by contacting directly those named as victims. Once verified, these cases are counted and can be included in the report.

All cases included in this Report have been cross-referenced against one another by an independent researcher. This is to ensure, as best we can, that the final figure of 162 is as accurate as possible.

⁷ See the description of SMUG’s activities above

That said, as has already been emphasised, there may be many further examples of persecution that are not included.

The AHA has created a climate which encourages persecution

On Tuesday 25th February 2014, the day after the AHA was signed by the President, the Ugandan tabloid Red Pepper printed the names of 200 individuals currently residing in Uganda it claimed were LGBTI. The headline ran 'EXPOSED: Uganda's Top 200 Homosexuals Revealed'. The tabloid continued with 'Inside the Bahati⁸ Homosexuality Law' and proceeded to 'out' 200 people, leaving them open to harassment, abuse and attacks.

A number of other Media outlets have similarly exposed LGBTI people in this way and fomented a climate of fear, hatred and violence. Hello Uganda, a sister publication of Red Pepper, and Tiger FM, a local Ugandan radio station, have both revealed people's sexuality. While this could effectively constitute 200 separate incidents of intimidation, the only cases that have been collated into the statistics for this Report are where the individual concerned has reported directly to SMUG that they have experienced further persecution as a result of Media exposure. That said, it is worth taking note of these cases as they contribute to our understanding of the wider persecutory environment enabled, and indeed given impunity, by the passage of the Anti-Homosexuality Act.

A further issue not addressed by these statistics, but which is of crucial importance, is the impact of the AHA on the health and wellbeing of LGBTI people in Uganda. HIV/AIDS outreach programmes and the provision of healthcare to people in the LGBTI community are both under threat as a direct result of the Act which criminalises 'aiding and abetting' homosexuality. It is early days, but it seems likely that HIV infection rates, for example, will rise as a result of the Act, which makes it difficult for LGBTI people to come forward for testing.

The statistics

Part 1 of this report considers incidences of violence against LGBTI people in Uganda since the passing of the AHA. Of the 162 cases reported, 30% involved an element of violence, where victims found themselves subject to one or more of the following forms of violent act:

- | | |
|--|------------------------------|
| ▪ Physical Threats and Risk of Violence: | 15% of Reported Cases |
| ▪ Violent attacks: | 15% of Reported Cases |
| ▪ Kidnap: | 4% of Reported Cases |
| ▪ Torture: | 2% of Reported Cases |

Part 2 considers instances of Intimidation. Of the 162 cases reported, 41 % involved an element of intimidation, often by State agents such as the police, where victims found themselves subject to one or more of the following acts intended to intimidate:

- | | |
|-------------------------|------------------------------|
| ▪ Arrests: | 10% of Reported Cases |
| ▪ Blackmail | 8% of Reported Cases |
| ▪ Non-Physical Threats: | 4% of Reported Cases |
| ▪ Press Intrusion: | 18% of Reported Cases |
| ▪ State Persecution: | 8% of Reported Cases |

⁸ David Bahati MP first introduced the Bill that led to the AHA in 2009.

Part 3 considers the economic and financial impact of the AHA. Of the 162 cases reported, 50% involved some loss of property, income or home:

- | | |
|------------------------------|------------------------------|
| ▪ Loss of Physical Property: | 6% of Reported Cases |
| ▪ Loss of Income: | 5% of Reported Cases |
| ▪ Removal from Home | 42% of Reported Cases |

Part 4 considers the psycho-social effects of persecution. Of the 162 cases reported, 25% involved asylum, family rejection or suicide:

- | | |
|------------------------------------|------------------------------|
| ▪ Suicide: | 2% of Reported Cases |
| ▪ Seeking Asylum: | 15% of Reported Cases |
| ▪ Being Disowned by their families | 7% of Reported Cases |

More than half of the reported incidents collected in this document (101 of 162) indicate that the victims have been subjected to more than one serious human rights violation.

Part 5 of this report examines ways of improving the situation for LGBTI people in Uganda and the organisations that seek to support them through a series of practical recommendations.

Names or identifying details have not been included for reasons of security. For more information about individual cases, contact Sexual Minorities Uganda (SMUG):

01 Reports of Violence against LGBTI People in Uganda

1.1 Physical Threats/Risk of Violence

“He said people knew I was a homosexual, and he could not guarantee my safety, they could come and kill me at any time. When I left, people were staring, whispering. I did not realise the danger I was in.”

A gay man living in Uganda

Out of the 162 cases recorded between 20th December 2013 and 1st May 2014, 24 included reports of physical threats. The individuals concerned faced substantial risk of an immediate physical attack.

Of those 24 cases, ten people reported that the threat of physical violence occurred following exposure in the press. Three members of the Ugandan LGBTI organisation ‘Hi 5’ were exposed as gay by the Media. They were evicted from their property and compelled to leave the country following concerns for their safety. A further ten of those 24 people reported being evicted from or forced to leave their homes. Four people who reported being threatened or at risk of violence went on to say that they were physically attacked.

1.2 Attacks

24 of the cases reported involved someone being physically attacked. 67% of those cases included at least one other complaint of persecution: five people reported being arrested; one victim reported to SMUG that she was attacked, arrested and had her home burnt down to the ground; four people reported having to leave their homes, including a 17-year-old boy who said that his parents had beaten him severely and threatened to contact the police in order to have him arrested for being gay, before being thrown out of his home.

1.3 Kidnap and Torture

Six of the cases reported involved instances of people being held without their consent for a prolonged period of time (kidnap). There were four reports of torture, where the physical abuse was also carried out over an extended period. Anecdotal evidence suggests that torture is becoming so routine that a ‘torture house’ has been established, designed specifically to terrorise LGBTI people. Three gay men were kidnapped and taken to this house by a group of people who initially claimed to be police officers. The victims were subjected to sustained physical abuse and were told that they needed to be taught a lesson in ‘how to be a man’. In another reported incident, a man was tricked into entering a house by his friend. Once inside, he was tortured and his property was stolen.

A member of ‘Youth on the Rocks’ – an NGO providing assistance to gay men living with HIV in Uganda

02 Intimidation of the LGBTI Community

“Then with the newspaper story they had proof... We are Muslims - they said I was disgusting, that I had shamed the whole family... I have nowhere to stay. Last night I slept in a bar. I am so stressed I have thought this week of committing suicide.”

2.1 Arrests

The report identifies 17 cases of arrests in Uganda during this period. This can be compared with just one case in 2013 and none in 2012. In one instance two young Ugandans were charged with sodomy. The men were subjected to intrusive and degrading medical tests; both being forced to undergo forensic anal examinations in order to determine whether they had been penetrated. According to reports, testing of this nature is being applied increasingly to gay men who have been arrested in Uganda (see bibliography). Two other men, whose cases are included in this report, will become the first to face trial since the passing of the AHA, after it was decided that there was enough evidence to proceed with prosecutions.

2.2 Blackmail

There have been 13 reported incidents of blackmail (attempts to coerce a victim into giving money) since the passing of the AHA. One trans-woman described going to meet with a man who claimed he was interested in her romantically. When she arrived her phone was stolen and she was not allowed to leave. The man attempted to blackmail her for money. After negotiating her release she went to report the incident to the police. The police called the woman ‘homosexual’ and also demanded money, threatening her with arrest.

2.3 State Persecution

In the period covered by this report there have been 13 incidents of State persecution: where police use their power to intimidate LGBTI individuals. Many LGBTI groups have also reported incidents of plain clothes officers watching their buildings and parking in the driveways of members’ houses to find information which could lead to prosecutions. On 3 April 2014, the Walter-Reed Project, a not-for-profit AIDS foundation working in Uganda, was raided by police. As a result the United States Embassy took the decision to shut down the project, consequently depriving many Ugandans of access to anti-retroviral medication and condoms. Following the closure, SMUG has found that 30 HIV/AIDs LGBTI clients who were receiving support from the shelter, many of whom had been evicted from their houses, are now suffering without access to medication. In another case, the authorities prevented a refugee law project from accessing prisons and refugee camps, alleging that they were promoting homosexuality.

2.4 Media Intrusions and Non-Physical Threats

Of the 29 cases reported involving the 'outing' of people by the press, each one included reports of further persecution. For example, two people lost their jobs; ten people were physically threatened (including one man who received death threats and another who fled the country); three people have been blackmailed; and two physically attacked.

In 7 cases non-physical threats to reveal a person's sexuality to the community, to the police, or to the press were reported. The consequences of someone's name being leaked to and by the press are serious. Not only do they stand a risk of being arrested, they may also face physical attack, threats, blackmail and eviction.

03 Loss of Property, Home or Income

"They took me into the jail for two months and they tortured me to a severe extent. They asked me to reveal other groups of gays and give them names. But I didn't tell, and they continued the torture every day... They beat me and beat me to every part on my body..."

A gay man living in Uganda recalling his time in prison

3.1 Loss of Home

Of the 29 reported incidents of Media intrusion, 20 people had to leave their homes as a result of being exposed (Fig.1). In total 68 people have reported being evicted from their home which equates to over 40% of all reported cases (Fig.2). As already noted, the AHA introduces wide criminal provisions that punish those 'aiding and abetting homosexuality' with up to 7 years in prison. In one case, it was reported that a landlord wrote to his tenant saying:

"You are a wonderful woman as well as a tenant who hasn't given me any trouble over rent whatsoever."

As a result of the passing of the AHA, he would have to evict her:

"Due to what is going on in the country, and your way you and your friends behave, I am sorry but I think you are a depraved person who I can no longer tolerate in my house. I also cannot fight against the government."

3.2 Loss of Property and Income

Eight people reported losing their main source of income, with ten others reporting the theft and destruction of their personal property. One woman recorded her concern about the potential destruction of community music equipment which was in her possession. Others have taken to hiding their property in the homes of LGBTI allies for safe keeping.

Evictions (Fig. 2)

04 Psycho-Social effects of the AHA

“I am tired of this life, honestly...I feel like poisoning myself.”

A Ugandan Refugee staying in Kenya

“He was like, ‘does this shop look gay to you?’... I couldn’t swallow for two weeks. My face was swollen.”

4.1 Family Abandonment

Since 20th December 2013 there have been eleven reported cases of people being disowned by their families and subsequently being asked to leave home. Whilst most of these cases involved someone being told to leave home by family members, family abandonment includes all those cases where a primary concern of the people involved was rejection by their family on the basis of their sexuality. The majority of those affected have been teenagers between the ages of 17 and 19; three of whom reported being attacked before they were thrown out. One man reported being attacked by his family after being discovered with his partner in the family house.

4.2 Asylum Cases

There have been 25 reported instances of LGBTI Ugandans seeking asylum since the passing of the AHA. This figure includes two key LGBTI human rights defenders.

Many people have fled to neighbouring Kenya. Kenya’s National Gay & Lesbian Human Rights Commission has noted around 20 cases of Ugandans seeking asylum in Kenya in the past two months. This is a large increase from the previous year where the NGO noticed only around five such cases. One LGBTI Ugandan asylum seeker recalled an incident when he was attacked in the refugee camp. He could not seek help from the police because homosexuality remains criminalised in Kenya.

In a number of the cases reported to SMUG those seeking asylum have been exposed to some additional element of violence after leaving Uganda. Some reports indicate that asylum seekers have resorted to transactional sex in order to survive, rather than return to Uganda where they would certainly face further persecution.

4.1 Suicide

There were four cases of suicide involving LGBTI people reported to SMUG in the period up to 1st May 2014. One involved a 17-year-old boy who killed himself on 3rd April by swallowing rat poison and overdosing on pills. Reports vary as to the number of attempted suicides. One report claims that at least 17 LGBTI Ugandans have attempted to commit suicide, with the majority of those being under the age of 25. In February it was reported that there were eight suicide attempts within a two week period alone.

Observations and Recommendations

1. Dialogue with members of parliament and cabinet ministers.

Increased dialogue with politicians is incredibly important in securing the long-term goals of SMUG and the Security Team, including and especially the decriminalisation of consensual same-sex sexual conduct. Dialogue can help promote understanding of sexuality issues and create an atmosphere in which LGBTI groups can discuss issues with local politicians without fearing some form of violent or criminal reprisal.

2. Legal support to those people currently facing criminal prosecution.

There are a number of LGBTI Ugandans currently in prison and facing prosecution. Resources must be made available in order to launch successful appeals, make bail payments, and settle cases before reaching court.

3. Housing support and visas for LGBTI Ugandans facing persecution.

SMUG has requested that embassies provide asylum protection to those LGBTI Ugandans who are in urgent need of sanctuary. Many LGBTI Ugandans are routinely facing threats of physical violence, are being attacked, intimidated by the press, public and police, are having their property stolen or destroyed and are facing severe emotional trauma. At present, many are seeking refugee status in countries which themselves criminalise consensual same-sex sexual conduct (for example, Kenya). This is an undesirable situation for those seeking safety from anti-gay laws and homophobic attitudes.

4. Support to the LGBTI groups operating in Uganda.

Support for the 18 LGBTI organisations operating in Uganda is woefully inadequate. Those who have been made homeless and need help, since the passing of the AHA in particular, have increased the workload of these groups. While a number of LGBTI people have been relocated for their own safety, it is crucial that those remaining in Uganda receive support. Members of LGBTI groups have been chased from their houses, their property has been destroyed and they themselves are in urgent need of legal and medical support. Re-strengthening LGBTI groups, improving infrastructure and security (see below) as well as providing additional resources will help secure two primary aims: providing support for those being persecuted in Uganda, and providing a basis from which anti-gay laws and attitudes can be fought.

5. Providing security to the LGBTI community in Uganda.

Many LGBTI groups have gone underground in the wake of increasingly aggressive and confrontational conduct of supporters of the AHA. A number of LGBTI support groups and advocacy organisations have been placed under surveillance by the police and risk being attacked. So that they can continue to work, the security concerns of LGBTI groups must be addressed. Without additional support, these groups will not be able to function efficiently, and their invisibility will effectively silence the crucial debate on the human rights of LGBTI people in Uganda.

6. Building synergies with non-LGBTI entities.

More than 26 organisations that SMUG was working with before the AHA came into force have subsequently withdrawn most of their support to the LGBTI community, with a significant impact on the LGBTI human rights agenda. While there is hope that these organisations will be willing to work with SMUG again in the future, it is of crucial importance that LGBTI organisations are able to make alliances with mainstream NGOs; it is through them that the LGBTI community in Uganda is able to communicate effectively with government and also educate the general population on LGBTI issues.
