Communications in Gaza are heavily disrupted with little internet service

From CNN's Rachel Wilson

Gaza has faced frequent disruptions in communications and three near-total blackouts since Israel began to expand ground operations on October 27.

Hospitals in the north of Gaza — including the enclave's largest, Al-Shifa — are struggling to report their conditions from the inside with little internet service available or electricity. Humanitarian agencies have expressed concerns for the safety of the medical staff and difficulties providing care.

Communications in Gaza are heavily disrupted with little internet service

The Palestinian Health Ministry in Ramallah lost contact with hospitals in northern Gaza over the weekend amid Israeli attacks and was unable to update casualty figures until Monday.
