INTRODUCTION

1. The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (hereinafter "the Commission," "the Inter-American Commission," or "IACHR") submits its Annual Report in compliance with Article 59 of its Rules of Procedure. In accordance with the provisions of said regulation, this report consists of an introduction and six chapters. The introduction outlines the progress made in achieving the objectives set forth in the American Declaration, the American Convention, and other Inter-American instruments on human rights, as well as the status of their ratification; the origin, legal basis, structure, and purposes of the Commission; and the mandates conferred on the Commission by Inter-American instruments on human rights, by the General Assembly of the Organization, and by other competent bodies.

2. The first chapter of the report covers the activities of the IACHR, including a list of the sessions held, activities conducted by the Commission with other OAS bodies and regional or global organizations, and those related to technical cooperation and follow-up on recommendations and impact.

3. The second chapter reflects the work carried out by the IACHR through its system of petitions, cases, and precautionary measures, friendly settlements, as well as its work before the Inter-American Court of Human Rights (hereinafter "the Inter-American Court," "the Court," or "IHR Court").

4. The third chapter covers the activities of the 11 thematic and country rapporteurships, work visits, requests for information, approved reports, and advocacy and training activities.

5. The fourth chapter contains two main parts: Chapter IV.A provides an overview of the regional human rights situation and the country-by-country outlook in the areas of democratic institutions, human rights, access to justice, citizen security, and equality and discrimination. This is complemented by the annual reports of the Special Rapporteur for Freedom of Expression and the Special Rapporteur for Economic, Social, Cultural, and Environmental Rights. Chapter IV.B contains special reports on States in which the IACHR has identified that the criteria established in paragraph 6 of Article 59 above are met: Venezuela, Cuba, and Nicaragua.

6. The fifth chapter of the Report describes the measures adopted to comply with the recommendations made in the country reports: Bolivia and El Salvador.

7. Chapter Six specifies the structure and personnel of the Commission; financial resources and budget execution; planning, resource mobilization, and project management; and technological advances implemented in 2024.

8. The work of the IACHR, reflected in this report, is conducted with the conviction that peacebuilding, as a central objective of the Charter of the Organization of American States (hereinafter "OAS"), the American Declaration of Human Rights (hereinafter "the American Declaration"), and the American Convention on Human Rights (hereinafter "American Convention"), is based on democracy and full respect for human rights, and constitutes a collective responsibility of the States. Through strong democratic institutions, States must guarantee citizen participation, social justice, and the peaceful resolution of conflicts, reducing the exclusion and inequality that have historically generated violence in the region. Likewise, respect for and protection of human rights strengthens the rule of law, prevents abuses of power, and ensures the dignity of all persons. When States act jointly and are committed to these principles, peace ceases to be merely the absence of war and becomes a sustained process of inclusion, equity, and regional cooperation aimed at the well-being and development of our societies.

9. At this historic moment, when our democracies face multiple challenges and both institutions and international order have been questioned, human rights stand out as a guiding light and beacon, a solid foundation upon which our citizens are supported and protected. In the face of uncertainty and political tensions, respect for human rights reaffirms the dignity of individuals, contributes to social cohesion, and legitimizes the actions of States. Thus, human rights constitute not only an essential normative framework, but also an indispensable ethical principle for sustaining democracy, promoting peace, and ensuring more just and inclusive societies in the region.

10. The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights reaffirms its commitment to working together with international organizations, States, and civil society to guarantee the promotion and protection of the human rights of all persons living in our region, thereby honoring the mandate conferred upon it and the trust placed in its work. It is precisely at critical moments, when challenges to democracy and the rule of law intensify, that the IACHR must strengthen its work, reinforce its actions, and redouble its efforts to effectively and responsibly fulfill its fundamental mission.

11. The year 2025 was marked by multiple challenges for the region, including the erosion of democratic institutions, the emergence of voices questioning the validity and legitimacy of human rights, increased restrictions and attacks against people in human mobility, and the deepening of limitations imposed by some States on spaces for social participation. Added to this is the resurgence of violence against dissent in contexts where authoritarian regimes are predominant, revealing a complex scenario that requires a firm, coordinated, and sustained response in defense of democracy, the rule of law, and human rights.

12. Added to these challenges is the climate emergency that is severely affecting the region and having devastating effects on its inhabitants, including displacement, disproportionately impacting people belonging to the most vulnerable groups. Furthermore, there has been increased questioning of women's rights, which were won after decades of struggle and sustained work, as well as of the progress made in eliminating violence and discrimination against LGBTI people. Similarly, the weakening of standards for the protection of Afro-descendants and indigenous peoples, built up over a long historical process, cannot and must not mean a setback in the guarantee of their rights or in the regional commitment to equality and human dignity.

13. Faced with this complex situation, the IACHR, despite funding challenges, conducted its work by strengthening its monitoring mechanisms, its case and petition system, its precautionary measures, and its friendly settlements, as well as through cooperation and advisory actions with States for the implementation of its recommendations and the design of public policies with a focus on human rights. Transparent, accessible, inclusive, and results-based management has enabled the Commission to present this Annual Report, which reflects the work undertaken during 2025.

14. In compliance with its mandates and the provisions of Article 59 of its Rules of Procedure, the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) presents this Annual Report, which comprehensively compiles the main actions conducted through its various mechanisms in implementation of its Strategic Plan 2023-2027 and the most relevant results achieved as the main body of the Organization of American States (OAS) for the period from January 1 to December 31, 2025.

A. Strategic plan 2023-2027

15. The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) implemented during 2025 its Strategic plan 2023-2027, approved at the 185th Regular Session of the IACHR, held in Washington, D.C., from October 24 to November 4, 2022. During this period, the IACHR made progress in the outlined implementation of the Plan by updating the strategic indicators, continuing to operate the protection and monitoring mechanisms, and adopting operational measures to sustain institutional management in a context of high demand and financial constraints. Efforts were also consolidated to strengthen preventive analysis capabilities and the use of technological tools that support the Commission's work in a regional scenario characterized by growing challenges to human rights and democratic institutionality.

16. The strategy of the 2023-2027 Plan continued to be developed in 2025 through nine strategic objectives covering 34 programs, aimed at achieving substantive changes in the greater enjoyment of human rights by all people in the hemisphere. These goals and programs are organized into three pillars, which have the following expected medium-term results. The first pillar corresponds to the mechanisms of Petitions and Cases, Precautionary Measures, and Follow-up on Recommendations, whose expected outcome is greater protection and defense of victims of human rights violations, with special attention on historically excluded groups. The second pillar relates to the mechanisms of Monitoring, Promotion, and Technical Cooperation, whose actions are aimed at achieving greater observance and guarantee of human rights in the hemisphere by States. And the third pillar is aimed at improving the institutional culture of the IACHR through the inclusion of gender, intersectionality, and diversity approaches and results-based management.

17. Likewise, during 2025, the Executive Secretariat of the IACHR (SE/IACHR) monitored the 29 indicators set out in the Strategic Plan's monitoring and evaluation plan. These indicators made it possible to measure progress on a semi-annual basis through data recording instruments, baselines, and targets set for 2027. This process has ensured a transparent view of the implementation of the Strategic Plan and has facilitated the ongoing evaluation of the results achieved, on which detailed progress analyses were conducted and recorded in the 2024 Strategic Plan Progress Report and the first semi-annual report of 2025.

18. With regard to the first pillar of the Strategic Plan, sustained progress was made in 2025 in implementing the Case Prioritization Policy, with the continued classification of files and management of cases that were procedurally ready for decision. The implementation of Resolution 4/23 maintained the impulse to streamline the resolution of cases with structural impact and improve timely access to justice. During the year, processing continued to be expedited, and the number of admissibility and merits reports prepared and approved increased, as did the number of Commission decisions and the expansion of friendly settlement agreements. Of the 3,357 petitions received, 533 petitions (19.23%) were opened for processing. The pending portfolio went from 1,698 cases that were pending opening in 2021 to only 198 petitions. In terms of admissibility, 170 reports were approved, 96 for admissibility and 74 for inadmissibility. In addition, 25 new friendly settlement agreements were signed and 10 acts of acknowledgment of responsibility were held to dignify the victims and promote compliance with reparation measures. In turn, 19 friendly settlement agreements were approved and 32 opportunities for dialogue between the parties were facilitated. During 2025, 11 agreements reached full implementation, while 62 agreements showed progress in their fulfillment. Progress was made on 113 reparations measures (69 of which were fully implemented), 38 of which were structural in nature and 75 of which were individual in nature. Some examples of this structural progress were seen in cases in Argentina, with the consolidation of the National Registry of Inter-American System Decisions (provided for in the agreement in the case of José Luis D'Andrea Móhr); with the implementation of a national judicial training program on mental health (committed to in the agreement signed in the Senem de Buzzi case); and through the adoption of non-discrimination protocols in security forces (established in the agreement in the Octavio Romero case). In Brazil, the rural electrification projects committed to in the José Dutra da Costa case were also completed, improving the living conditions of communities affected by agrarian violence. And in Chile, structural measures were advanced for the restitution of indigenous lands through the hiring of legal teams, as well as the inclusion of indigenous representatives in environmental audits of hydroelectric projects (measures provided for in the Huenteao Beroiza case).

19. The defense of victims of human rights violations was strengthened through the approval of a historic number—132—merits reports concerning 21 States. Several of these cases involve historically excluded groups, and in 40 of the 132 cases, the Commission developed Inter-American standards with the potential for structural impact. These reports reflect the first exercise in implementing a prioritization policy aimed at achieving a prompter resolution of the most urgent and serious cases, or those which may have a structural impact by preventing the occurrence of new violations.

20. In order to address the need for justice and reparation, 33 cases were referred to the Inter-American Court of Human Rights, affecting at least 9,300 people. Likewise, with confidence in the willingness of States to implement the merits reports without having to submit them to the Court, 25 work meetings were held to obtain information on the progress made in cases in the transition stage and to support the parties in the dialogue. In turn, during this procedural stage, 491 decisions were adopted on the referral of cases or the granting of extensions to comply with the merits reports. As a result of these measures, the Commission decided not to refer eight cases to the Court and to proceed with their publication, given the substantial progress made in complying with the recommendations of said merits reports.

21. The Executive Secretariat of the IACHR also had a high percentage (71.1%) of precautionary measures evaluations received (1,969 requests) within a timely manner (less than 90 days after registration), which allowed for a more effective response to situations of risk affecting human rights defenders, journalists, indigenous communities, persons deprived of liberty, children and adolescents, and other groups in situations of special vulnerability. To follow up on precautionary measures in force, four on-site visits were conducted in Colombia, Guatemala, Brazil, and Honduras, and two public hearings were held on measures relating to ethnic communities in Colombia and persons detained and missing in the post-election context in Venezuela, further optimizing portfolio management through technical and bilateral meetings. These actions were complemented by the consolidation of the use of technological tools for the management of precautionary measures and by the progress made in special follow-up mechanisms, in close dialogue with OAS member states through regional meetings, presentations to political bodies, portfolio meetings, and other bilateral spaces that strengthened the effectiveness of the implementation of its recommendations.

22. In 2025, the Commission strengthened its monitoring of decisions through working visits aimed at gathering first-hand information, engaging in dialogue with state institutions, and advancing the implementation of its recommendations. These visits made it possible to issue preliminary observations and strengthen dialogue with national authorities, consolidating the technical cooperation needed to address risk situations identified by the monitoring mechanisms. The continuity of the special mechanisms for following up on recommendations is also worth noting. In Colombia, technical coordination with authorities and civil society was maintained to promote compliance roadmaps and organize portfolios with a focus on impact. In Chile, progress was made in preparing the follow-up report in the context of MESECH. In Bolivia, the second MESEG work plan was approved and the second follow-up report on the GIEI recommendations was finalized. For this report, the IACHR was able to verify significant progress in the implementation of structural recommendations and victim reparations in Bolivia regarding the events of 2019. Some examples of these measures are: the consolidation of the architecture of the comprehensive reparations policy for victims; the collection of official information for the creation of the National Victims Registry; activities to commemorate and dignify the victims of the events of 2019, which included commemorative events surrounding the Senkata and Sacaba massacres, as well as symbolic measures such as the declaration of November as the "month of remembrance" in different jurisdictions of the country; the creation of a Commission of Supreme Prosecutors to specifically monitor judicial proceedings related to the events of 2019 and the issuance of instructions aimed at strengthening the investigation plans of prosecutors in cases involving serious human rights violations by the Public Ministry and measures by the Judiciary to reinforce the control of legality over the actions of the Public Ministry and the Police, particularly through oversight reports aimed at ensuring speed and respect for procedural rights.

23. Likewise, the IACHR maintained active participation and close dialogue with the States and political bodies of the OAS and in international forums, providing specialized information on regional trends and structural challenges in the area of human rights. The Commission made 13 presentations to the Permanent Council, five to the CAJP, and one to the General Assembly, in addition to holding bilateral and portfolio meetings during the 55th General Assembly in Antigua and Barbuda, reflecting an approach based on dialogue with States and the search for solutions to structural problems.

24. With regard to the second pillar, in 2025 the IACHR strengthened its capacity to monitor the human rights situation in the region in a timely manner, through the systematic issuance of statements and follow-up actions in response to situations of risk and threats to democratic institutions. During the year, the application of the preventive approach was consolidated through continuous analysis of trends and early identification of factors that may affect democratic stability and the guarantee of human rights. Likewise, the development of the Argos artificial intelligence ecosystem was strengthened, which integrates multiple databases and allows for the generation of preventive reports and risk curves for the States of the region, contributing to the early detection of critical trends. This process improved institutional capacity to anticipate critical scenarios and guide timelier and evidence-based responses. The Commission responded promptly to emerging or critical situations in Brazil, Cuba, El Salvador, Haiti, Nicaragua, Peru, and Venezuela through its response and attention mechanisms, such as working visits, statements, hearings, and testimony-taking. The technical work of monitoring and analyzing the human rights situation in 32 countries in the hemisphere is compiled in reports for Chapter IV-A of the Annual Report for 2025: the special reports in Chapter IV-B of the Annual Report for 2025, regarding Cuba, Nicaragua, and Venezuela.

25. In addition, also as part of this monitoring, in 2025, the Commission prepared and presented four country reports with recommendations: the report "Venezuela: serious human rights violations in the electoral context"; the "Observations from the work visit to Panama" on persons in human mobility; the report on "Human Rights Situation in Guatemala"; and the report on the Situation of Freedom of the Press in Haiti. The IACHR also published three thematic reports "The situation of the rights of persons with disabilities in the Americas", "Violence against indigenous and Afro-descendant people on the Nicaraguan Caribbean coast"; and the Third Report on the "Situation of human rights defenders in the Americas". The Special Rapporteur for Freedom of Expression, for its part, presented the reports "Exile of Journalists and Freedom of Expression" and "Impact of Digital Surveillance on Freedom of Expression in the Americas"; while REDESCA published a report on "The Impact of Forest Fires on Economic, Social, Cultural, and Environmental Rights and Diversity" based on its visit to Bolivia, and released a report on the impact of flooding in Rio Grande do Sul, with recommendations for prevention, response, and redress. At the time of writing, the report on the human rights situation in Colombia and the report on disappearances in Mexico were being reviewed by the Commission and awaiting publication. Finally, the Commission promoted the Inter-American Human Rights System through 83 promotion activities that reached 12,487 people and 73 training activities with 5,737 participants from public authorities, civil society, and academia.

26. During 2025, several States in the region made progress in complying with recommendations issued by the IACHR in its country reports and through its monitoring mechanisms. These included judicial and administrative decisions aimed at strengthening the protection of human rights defenders and journalists, as well as reforms and actions that improved guarantees of judicial independence and access to justice in countries such as Argentina, where administrative actions were taken to strengthen environmental policies and the protection of human rights defenders; Colombia, which made progress in judicial and administrative measures related to transitional justice and the protection of communities at risk; and Mexico, which strengthened its search protocols and institutional mechanisms in response to the crisis of disappearances. In Brazil, progress was made in the areas of truth, memory, and justice with the identification of the remains of two victims who disappeared during the dictatorship—in follow-up to recommendations in the 2021 Country Report—and with the conviction of two former agents for acts of torture, specifically complying with Recommendation 87 of said report. In Colombia, the Constitutional Court confirmed the constitutionality of the Optional Protocol to the Convention against Torture (OPCAT), enabling the creation of a national prevention mechanism, in line with recommendations on torture prevention. In addition, the Special Jurisdiction for Peace issued its first judgments with its own sanctions for kidnappings and extrajudicial executions, in response to recommendations in the 2013 Country Report, including Recommendations 199.1 and 460.1. In Uruguay, the State improved the protection of the right to nationality by deciding to update the procedure for issuing passports to legal citizens, complying with recommendations on equality and non-discrimination.

27. As for the third pillar, during 2025, actions continued to be developed to improve inclusion and accessibility to the IACHR and to bring it closer to users, by expanding content in different languages and strengthening the use of accessible technological tools in public hearings, meetings, and digital platforms. Consultations of reports and communications in English, French, and Portuguese on the website grew by 86% in the first half of the year, from 120,828 to 224,209. More than 80,000 electronic and physical communications were handled, representing over double the number in the same period in 2024. The proportion of requests for precautionary measures submitted without intermediaries increased by two points, from 38.5% to 40.4%, reflecting greater accessibility. These measures indicate that the IACHR has made progress in reducing language and accessibility barriers, especially for people from the Caribbean and people with disabilities.

28. Likewise, the IACHR consolidated improvements in its institutional systems, highlighting the expansion of GAIA's functionalities, with the automatic notification of 55,972 documents and the improvement of existing tools such as e-vote, Axios, Zyra, GL, and the implementation of new technological aids such as databases and AI models with applications such as Argos to incorporate data science into risk and trend analysis in context and human rights monitoring. These efforts were complemented by internal adjustments aimed at optimizing institutional management, strengthening collaborative practices, and sustaining the Commission's technical operations in the context of financial limitations.

29. During 2025, the Executive Secretariat of the IACHR continued to promote actions aimed at strengthening the work environment and institutional cohesion, within the framework of the Co-Labora Program and internal talent management processes. Throughout the year, integration activities, operational alignment sessions, and training and feedback opportunities were held, which contributed to consolidating collaborative practices, improving internal communication, and strengthening work planning in a context of high demand and financial constraints. These efforts made it possible to move forward in creating a more stable, participatory, and results-oriented organizational environment, strengthening the team's capacity to sustain the Commission's technical operations and fulfill its institutional mandates.

30. Finally, the Commission presented the 2024 Annual Report and the progress report on the Strategic Plan for the first half of 2025 to the political bodies of the OAS; and also to donors, with the delivery of 37 interim or final reports on program implementation and results, 35 financial reports, and 14 staff reports to donors, demonstrating a clear commitment to transparency and accountability to member states and their donors. One project was externally audited with a clean opinion, which supports transparency in the use of resources.

31. Everything implemented in 2025 and presented in this Annual Report was made possible thanks to the support of Member States, Observer States, and various donor institutions, whose contributions were decisive for the implementation of the Strategic Plan 2023–2027 and for strengthening the mandates of the IACHR. The Commission is especially grateful for the contributions of Canada, Costa Rica, Mexico, Panama, and the United States, as well as the support of the European Commission, France, Ireland, Monaco, the Netherlands, Norway, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, and the Basque Agency for Development Cooperation. It also acknowledges the valuable support of the United Nations Refugee Agency (UNHCR) and partner organizations, including the Arcus Foundation, the Ford Foundation, the Pan American Development Foundation (PADF), and the Foundation for the Americas. These contributions were essential to sustaining the Commission's technical operations, promoting a preventive approach, strengthening the protection system, and expanding the institutional capacities of the IACHR in the context of high demand and financial restrictions.

32. In summary, 2025 was a key year for the advancement of the 2023–2027 Strategic Plan, marked by progress in results across all three pillars. The prioritization policy continued to show concrete results in streamlining processes and structured management of requests, cases, and precautionary measures. At the same time, the Commission consolidated a more robust preventive approach by developing analytical tools, integrating dynamic information sources, and applying risk assessment methodologies, which strengthened its capability to identify critical patterns, anticipate risks to democratic institutions, and guide early actions. The year was also marked by a significant increase in the institutional response to threats against defenders, journalists, and other particularly vulnerable groups, as well as closer coordination between preventive monitoring and the protection decisions adopted by the Commission. Efforts to promote an inclusive, accessible, and results-oriented institutional culture were also intensified, along with the optimization of internal systems in a context of financial constraints. The advances achieved during 2025 demonstrate sustained progress toward the goals of the 2023–2027 Strategic Plan and consolidate the impact and responsiveness of the IACHR in protecting and promoting human rights and democratic institutions in the region.

33. The IACHR expresses its deep gratitude to those who inspire and sustain the Commission's work: petitioners, victims, and human rights defenders in increasingly complex and adverse contexts. Their perseverance, resilience, and trust in the Inter-American system continue to be the driving force behind the Commission's commitment to advancing in the protection and promotion of human rights in the Americas. In a year marked by significant challenges to democratic institutions and civic space, their work reaffirms the importance of the Inter-American system and guides the Commission's efforts to strengthen its protection mechanisms and respond in a timely manner to the needs of those who need it most.

B. Progress Achieved

34. Pursuant to Article 59 of its Rules of Procedure, in Chapter IV.A of this report, the Commission offers a descriptive overview of the human rights situation in the region, highlighting the main trends, progress, and challenges in the area of human rights based on the crosscutting themes and topics prioritized in its Strategic Plan. In this section, the Commission pinpoints the most significant progress observed in the member states in 2025. The actions documented stand out for being designed to promote and protect individuals' human rights in accordance with the international obligations undertaken by the States and contained in the American Declaration on the Rights and Duties of Man, the American Convention on Human Rights, and other inter-American instruments on the subject.

35. Each year, the IACHR highlights a series of measures, policies, practices, and programs adopted by the States of the Americas as examples of progress and/or best practices that reflect compliance with inter-American human rights standards. It should be noted that the information brought to light here stems from an overview of the human rights situation in the countries referenced, which may be consulted in detail in Chapter IV.A of this report, where the sources used can be found.

36. The measures identified in this chapter have been broken down into three groups: The first encompasses crosscutting and intersectoral issues that have a multidimensional impact on human rights protection guarantees and includes actions taken by the States to strengthen democratic institutions, transparency and access to information, access to justice and judicial independence, human rights institutions, and citizen security. The second group concerns measures implemented by the States to protect priority populations in situations of vulnerability or that have historically faced discrimination. Lastly, the third group pertains to actions taken to enhance public policies having to do with memory, truth, and justice, as well as the search for missing persons.

37. With regard to progress made in strengthening democratic institutions, it is important to note the regulations for the Comprehensive Protection Plan aimed at guaranteeing the exercise of politics in Colombia. At the outset of the pre-election cycle, the Office of the Ombudsperson developed strategies for risk prevention, monitoring, and activation of protection pathways for at-risk candidates. In the case of Ecuador, the National Assembly passed reforms to the Elections and Political Organizations Act aimed at preventing and punishing violence against women in politics.

38. In the fight against corruption, Mexico has instituted both the Sistema Integral de Denuncias Ciudadanas [Comprehensive Citizen Complaint System] (SIDEC) for administrative offenses committed by public servants and the Sistema de Ciudadanos Alertadores Internos y Externos de la Corrupción [System of Internal and External Citizen Corruption Alerts]. In Guatemala, the National Commission against Corruption has been working to prevent illegal practices, improve public integrity, and foster transparency. In Honduras, the State launched "Sistema-130," which makes it possible to report public administration-related irregularities. A Presidential Commission on Transparency and Anti-Corruption was established in the Dominican Republic to integrate and coordinate government strategies pertaining to prevention, access to public information, audits, and recovery of illicitly obtained assets.

39. As to democracy as a system of government, Grenada enacted the Oath of Allegiance Acts, which amended the oath set out in the Constitution by striking references to the monarch. This means that, upon assuming office, public officials are able to swear an oath of allegiance consistent with the State of Grenada's democratic institutional framework.

40. Regarding access to justice and judicial independence, the Dominican Republic created a Ministry of Justice. The Ministry will serve as a planning, leadership, coordination, and execution body, as appropriate, for formulating and enforcing State anti-crime policies; working both functionally and administratively with the justice system; judicially and extrajudicially representing the State and the government; and coordinating the national human rights system and the correctional/prison system.

41. In Bolivia, the Supreme Court of Justice (TSJ), the Judiciary Council, and the Agro-Environmental Court held the First Interinstitutional Dialogue on Judicial Reform. This initiative corresponds to recommendations made by the IACHR in its most recent country report. Additionally, the Plurinational Constitutional Court (TCP) put an end to the extension of judicial authorities' terms, given that they serve beyond the six-year term without the possibility of being reelected, a situation that was subject to geographic monitoring by the IACHR. Brazil moved forward with the launch of the "Jus.br" portal, which centralizes judicial services on a digital platform, thereby simplifying access and boosting transparency. Also noteworthy was the Cooperative Itinerant Justice program in the Amazônia Legal, which brought judicial services to remote regions and ancestral territories. Canada passed Bill C-40—the Miscarriage of Justice Review Commission Act—which establishes an independent commission to streamline judicial processes and review, investigate, and decide on criminal cases that should be returned to the judicial system due to possible miscarriages of justice. In El Salvador, the Supreme Court of Justice (CSJ) created a Specialized Unit in the Criminal Court for Cases of Hate Crimes against Vulnerable Groups to ensure gender-based analyses. The CSJ also developed a "Protocol for Assistance to Women and Children Victims of Violence" to reduce secondary victimization, standardize assistance, and improve institutional coordination, with a focus on equality and trauma-informed care.

42. In the Caribbean, Antigua and Barbuda's Magistrate's Code of Procedure Act, which allows for pretrial detention hearings to be conducted on any virtual platform or using any electronic communication mode available to the court, is significant. The IACHR also appreciates Dominica's decision to reintroduce "night court," which would ensure greater flexibility and better access to the courts. For its part, St. Kitts and Nevis approved an amendment to the Judge Alone Trials Act to modernize and strengthen the judicial system by clarifying procedures concerning when single-judge trials become mandatory. Along the same lines, St. Lucia amended its Criminal Code and Supreme Court Act to provide for single-judge trials in an effort to make the judicial system more efficient and address its case backlog by allowing for expedited hearings.

43. With respect to measures to strengthen human rights institutions, the Judiciary's National Racial Equity Pact and the establishment of protocols for trials with a racial and gender perspective in Brazil are noteworthy. Honduras increased the budget of the Secretariat for Human Rights (SEDH) by 70% between 2022 and 2025. Suriname launched the National Child Ombuds Institute (KOS), an independent institution to protect children's rights, which will conduct investigations and make recommendations in this area. And Uruguay introduced the Sixth National Action Plan for Open Government 2025-2029, which was developed through a participatory process and is aimed at, among other things, boosting transparency, access to public information, accountability, and citizen participation.

44. With respect to national human rights institutions, Chile set up a Presidential Advisory Commission to Strengthen the National Human Rights Institute (INDH), which concluded with 44 recommendations that include granting constitutional status to the INDH, ensuring its financial autonomy, clearly separating governance and management functions, and improving its accountability and citizen participation mechanisms. For its part, the Office of the Ombudsperson in Paraguay regained its "A" accreditation with the GANHRI in 2025, which formally reinforces its status as a national human rights institution in accordance with the Paris Principles. Noteworthy in The Bahamas is the creation of a Parliamentary Human Rights Committee to advise the government on human rights and ensure legislative compliance with international obligations. Likewise, Argentina's Congress moved forward in its internal process to elect a National Ombudsperson after 16 years of vacancy and put together a shortlist for the appointment of a new head of the Office of the Ombudsperson for the Rights of Children and Adolescents.

45. Regarding citizen security, Antigua and Barbuda acceded to the CARICOM Arrest Warrant Treaty, which provides for State cooperation in the arrest and surrender of requested persons for criminal prosecution in the jurisdictions of the States Party to the treaty.

46. Significant decreases in homicide rates were recorded[1] in the States of The Bahamas, Belize, Dominican Republic, Honduras, Jamaica, Mexico, St. Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, and Trinidad and Tobago. With respect to St. Kitts and Nevis, passage of the Gangs (Prohibition and Prevention) (Amendment) Act to tackle organized crime is also noteworthy. This law broadens definitions, introduces new offenses, and clarifies procedures for combating gang-related crime. Barbados passed the Criminal Proceedings (Witness Anonymity) Act to conceal the identity of witnesses in criminal trials through the remote delivery of evidence, the use of screens or voice modulation, and the redaction of personal details from witness statements. Colombia implemented the Strategy against Multiple Crimes, which coordinates institutional capabilities for special, intelligence, and judicial operations against criminal organizations. In addition, the Total Peace policy moved forward in creating a body for "contribution to the truth" and "guarantees of non-repetition" comprised of 16 peace promoters from the former United Self-Defense Forces of Colombia.

47. Additionally, in terms of institutional strengthening for public security, the creation of the National Police Human Rights Directorate in the Dominican Republic is noteworthy. Chile created and put into operation the Ministry of Public Security, which is responsible for the policy direction of the Carabineros and the Investigative Police, as well as for coordination of the national security system.

48. With regard to the second set of actions aimed at protecting prioritized populations in situations of vulnerability or that have historically faced discrimination, the Commission takes note of measures adopted to ensure the universal, indivisible, and interdependent nature of human rights, taking the principles of equality and non-discrimination into consideration. Particularly noteworthy are the measures that seek to mitigate any actions that might aggravate human rights violations or structures of discrimination and violence against a range of persons, groups, and collectives in the hemisphere.

49. As far as human rights defenders are concerned, Brazil's Ministry of Indigenous Peoples held dialogues with the Program to Protect Human Rights Defenders, Communicators, and Environmentalists of the Ministry of Human Rights and Citizenship's (PPDDH/MDHC) in an effort to strengthen protection measures for indigenous leaders under threat. In Chile, the Protocol for the Protection of Human Rights Defenders entered into force. This Protocol is designed to coordinate the State response to threats or violations against human rights defenders. Ecuador reported that it had developed a protocol for protecting human rights defenders who take part in criminal prosecutions as victims or witnesses that includes differentiated gender, ethnic-cultural, and collective approaches. In the case of Guatemala, the IACHR welcomed the development of the Public Policy for the Protection of Human Rights Defenders in Guatemala 2025-2035, which is aimed at complying with the judgment of the Inter-American Court of Human Rights in the case of Human Rights Defender et al. v. Guatemala.

50. Regarding the situation of the rights of indigenous peoples, the IACHR highlights the judgment handed down in Guatemala that sentenced the state agents responsible for the rape of six indigenous (Achí) women—which occurred in 1983 during the internal armed conflict—to 40 years in prison. The judgment acknowledged the systematic use of sexual violence as a weapon of war against indigenous women. For its part, the Mexican government announced the Indigenous Education Program, which looks to address the education gap, which is most prevalent among indigenous populations. Brazil established a 30% quota for indigenous and Afro-descendant candidates in competitive processes for positions in the federal government. Canada established an Indigenous Advisory Council to work with the Major Projects Office and to address the overrepresentation of indigenous persons in the federal prison system. It also developed the first federal Indigenous Justice Strategy, which includes measures to expand culturally relevant justice services and support the creation of indigenous-run community corrections programs and healing shelters to promote restorative justice and reduce recidivism. In Colombia, the IACHR welcomed a presidential decree that strengthens the right to self-determination by creating a legal framework for the creation of Indigenous Territorial Entities (ETIs) with specific jurisdictions, funding capacity, self-governance, and planning. Colombia also reported progress in implementing the Ethnic Chapter, the Comprehensive Rural Reform, crosscutting differentiated approaches, and reparations processes.

51. With respect to women's rights and to the measures adopted by States to eradicate all forms of violence, the IACHR recognizes that Brazil has included the crime of sexual harassment in the Military Criminal Code and amended the Criminal Code to exclude the age of the assailant as a mitigating factor in cases of sexual violence. Mexico reformed its criminal laws to incorporate a gender perspective in the determination of self-defense and criminalized vicarious violence. Costa Rica also passed legislation in this regard and ratified International Labor Organization (ILO) Convention 190 on the elimination of violence and harassment in the workplace. Ecuador passed the General Regulations for the Organic Law on Accompaniment, Transformative, and Comprehensive Reparation for the families of victims of femicide/gender-based violent deaths, which list the forms of reparation, including a fund for the victims' families. In the Dominican Republic, the new Criminal Code criminalized femicide, harassment, non-consensual dissemination of intimate material, and economic and property violence in the family domain. Panama passed both Law 474, which increases penalties for rape and other crimes related to sexual violence, and Law 478, which includes digital crimes such as the dissemination of non-consensual intimate images. The Caribbean has seen progress in Saint Lucia, which launched the National Inter-Agency Task Force on Gender-Based Violence to institutionalize coordination and partnerships among sectors to address this problem. Additionally, The Bahamas has a new Independent National Unit within the police force that is comprised of officers who provide victims with counseling, immediate assistance, information, and emotional support when reporting acts of violence.

52. In terms of measures to promote equality, protection, and non-discrimination, Bolivia passed both legislation prohibiting, without exception, marriages and unions of persons below the age of 18, and a law for the protection of the sexual integrity of children and adolescents in digital environments. Canada signed the Inter-American Convention on the Prevention, Punishment, and Eradication of Violence against Women (Convention of Belém do Pará), thereby reaffirming its commitment to the advancement of women's rights. Guatemala reformed the Law on the Penitentiary System and the Criminal Code to prevent and punish the trafficking of girls and adolescents in the prison system. Guyana increased the budget for the Women and Gender Equality Commission by 10.5% with respect to 2024 and 42.3% with respect to 2020. Honduras incorporated a gender budget classifier into the 2025 General Budget. The reinstated National Gender Council of Uruguay introduced the National Public Policy for Gender Equality 2025-2030, with 90 committed measures for mainstreaming the gender perspective in public management and planning. In the Caribbean, Antigua and Barbuda's Directorate of Gender Affairs (DOGA) is spearheading the development of a National Policy on Gender and Social Inclusion and has finalized a Plan of Action against Gender Violence. Barbados passed the Family Leave Act, which introduced statutory paternity leave to promote full and equal parental involvement in child rearing and extended maternity leave to 14 weeks.

53. With regard to measures to protect and guarantee sexual and reproductive rights, Ecuador's Constitutional Court issued a judgment acknowledging the obstetric violence suffered by an adolescent girl in a situation of human mobility and reaffirmed the State's duty to guarantee dignified, safe, and respectful medical care. In Haiti, the creation of a specialized judicial unit for prosecuting mass crimes and sexual violence and the decriminalization of abortion in the new Criminal Code in cases of rape, incest, or danger to the physical or mental health of the woman are noteworthy. Likewise, in Chile, Ministry of Health Decree No. 22 of 2024, which recognizes the right to voluntary termination of pregnancy on three grounds, entered into force.

54. As far as women's political participation is concerned, the first woman president of the Republic of Suriname, the highest position in the country, was elected. A woman was also elected Prime Minister of Trinidad and Tobago. The Bolivian Ministry of Justice and Institutional Transparency adopted the "Protocol on Assistance in Cases of Harassment and/or Political Violence against Women," which seeks to guarantee timely assistance and effective protection of women's political rights. It is worth noting that women elected to the Plurinational Legislative Assembly account for 52.4% of seats. Finally, in Colombia, a campaign to achieve parity in the high courts is being considered, with a recommendation that lists for the election of magistrates to the Council of State and the Supreme Court of Justice, as well as the Constitutional Court, be comprised exclusively of women.

55. With respect to measures to protect the rights of persons in the context of human mobility—including migrants, refugees, stateless individuals, internally displaced persons, and victims of trafficking—the IACHR notes the end of the detention of migrants in 10 Canadian provinces. In Guatemala, the Commission notes the introduction of the "Return Home Plan" for the sustainable reintegration of Guatemalan returnees. Mexico implemented the México te abraza [Mexico Embraces You] policy; under it, shelters have been set up in the states of Mexicali, Baja California, and in Reynosa and Nuevo Laredo, Tamaulipas, offering services like food, medical care, and support for reintegration into the labor market. Uruguay extended its Arraigo [Roots] Residency Program, the objective of which is to offer the option of regular status and access to rights to 20,000 asylum seekers. The program is based on the Inter-American Principles developed by the IACHR and fulfills commitments made at the Global Forum on Refugees (2023) and reinforces the principles of the Los Angeles Declaration on Migration and Protection (2022). Chile implemented the "Women in Mobility" project, which looks to provide comprehensive services to women in situations of mobility who experience gender-based violence while staying in temporary shelters. In the Caribbean, the IACHR notes the progress made in the implementation of the agreement on the full free movement of persons signed between Barbados, Belize, Dominica, and Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, within the framework of the Caribbean Community (CARICOM). The agreement guarantees the right of nationals of the four States to enter, move freely, and reside in each other's territories, while ensuring equal access to economic, social, and cultural rights in the host State, including the right to work.

56. As to statelessness, the Dominican Republic reported on the exemption from payment of fees for requests for the transcription of records for issuance of identity and voter cards.

57. With regard to combating and addressing the scourge of human trafficking, the Commission highlights efforts in the area of cooperation. For example, Antigua and Barbuda formalized its participation in the CARICOM Arrest Warrant Treaty, which is designed to facilitate cooperation in the surrender of persons wanted in another member state for different types of crimes, including trafficking in persons. Bolivia and Peru signed a Binational Roadmap to enhance bilateral cooperation, including the creation of an immediate response team, an early warning mechanism at borders, and task forces comprised of police, prosecutors, and immigration authorities. The Commission also takes note of bilateral commitments between Peru, Ecuador, and Bolivia aimed at building the capacity of justice operators and strengthening criminal prosecution strategies and victim protection. Canada developed an optional international reporting template in collaboration with the United Kingdom and Australia to support the streamlining of information across jurisdictions.

58. As far as institutional strengthening to combat trafficking is concerned, the Commission recognizes a number of initiatives in Guyana, e.g., advocacy activities, a storybook, four different QR codes to report trafficking-related concerns, and a Guide for Victims based on the 2023 C-TIP Act. In Argentina, the Ministry of Justice moved forward with the "National Program to Provide Comprehensive Reparations to Victims of the Crime of Trafficking in Persons," which provides for economic restitution and compensation for victims of trafficking and exploitation. Similarly, the Commission recognizes the first judgment in Honduras to include reparations for victims of human trafficking. In Guatemala, the reform of the Law on the Penitentiary System and the Criminal Code provides for a registration and oversight system for children and adolescents who enter detention centers as visitors, as a way to prevent trafficking. In the Dominican Republic, the National Plan of Action against Trafficking in Persons and Migrant Smuggling 2025-2028 was adopted in an effort to prevent, protect, and prosecute the crime of trafficking. In addition, the Law on Migrant Smuggling and Trafficking in Persons was amended to, among other things, ensure that the crime is not subject to statutes of limitation.

59. In terms of rescue, the Commission takes note of the efforts of Trinidad and Tobago's Counter Trafficking Unit (CTU), which led to the recovery of 30 individuals. The IACHR also recognizes the collaborative actions involved in "Operation Rescue," carried out in Chile, which led to the identification of trafficking routes, the dismantling of organized crime organizations, and the recovery of 2,122 human trafficking victims.

60. Regarding the rights of children and adolescents and the commitment to international legal cooperation and guarantee of their effective protection, the Commission notes that Argentina deposited the instrument of ratification and Guyana passed the Law on International Measures for the Protection of Children, which incorporates the 1996 Hague Convention on Jurisdiction, Applicable Law, Recognition, Enforcement and Co-operation in Respect of Parental Responsibility and Measures for the Protection of Children into domestic law. The Commission also notes the judgment, in Guatemala, issued by the Seventh Criminal Judgement Court, concerning the fire at the Hogar Seguro Virgen de la Asunción in March 2017, in which 41 girls died and another 15 were seriously injured. In that ruling, six former officials were sentenced to prison terms ranging from 6 to 25 years for the crimes of abuse of children and adolescents, breach of duties, abuse of authority, and manslaughter. The Court also called for a special closed-door hearing to establish reparations, safeguarding the victims.

61. As to the protection of children and adolescents, the Commission notes that Brazil launched the publication "Crianças, Adolescentes e Telas: Guia sobre Uso de Dispositivos Digitais" to promote the mindful use of digital devices by children and adolescents. In Canada, a hotline for reporting child sexual abuse and exploitation was launched, as was the Arachnid Project which offers digital tools for scanning the Internet for child sexual abuse materials (CSAM). Likewise, in Honduras, the First National Report on Social Media Risks for Children and Adolescents uncovered the dangers faced by this population group, including cybercrime, recruitment for trafficking, online harassment, and "digital addictions." Suriname moved forward with the creation of the National Commission on Combating Child Labor (NCUK), which was established to develop interdepartmental policies against child labor, with a special focus on eliminating the most serious forms of child labor in the country. In addition, Bolivia, Grenada, and Uruguay passed legislation to raise the minimum marriage age to 18, to better protect children and adolescents, in keeping with international and inter-American human rights standards. Lastly, the Paraguayan Ombudsperson's Office began receiving complaints filed directly by children and adolescents.

62. With regard to the rights of persons deprived of liberty, a series of measures taken to improve conditions in detention centers stands out. In The Bahamas, for example, construction began on a new high- and medium-security correctional center designed to enhance security and expand opportunities for rehabilitation. Brazil's Federal Supreme Court banned humiliating body searches of visitors to prisons. The Colombian Ministry of Justice and Law's circular temporarily makes open cells available for pregnant and breastfeeding women. Ecuador opened a polyclinic at the Guayas No. 1 prison in Guayaquil, which houses nearly 20% of the country's detainees. The Commission welcomed the commutation, in the United States, of federal death sentences for 37 of the 40 people on death row at the end of December 2024. Among those were four individuals who were beneficiaries of precautionary measures granted by the IACHR. The Commission also hails the implementation of the General Protocol on Conjugal Visits in Detention Centers under the auspices of Guatemala's General Directorate for the Penitentiary System. The Commission notes the institution of a mental health program at His Majesty's Prison in Saint Vincent and the Grenadines that seeks to address mental health needs through structured interventions within the prison system. A new Centralized Community Safety Centre was opened in Castries, Saint Lucia, with cells designed for temporary custody in an effort to reduce overcrowding at police stations and improve the treatment of persons in temporary custody. The Commission also takes note of the State's proposal to decommission the Port of Spain Prison in Trinidad and Tobago after 268 years of operation.

63. In terms of actions to promote social reintegration and alternative measures, judicial decisions by Chile's Supreme Court that provided for house arrest in place of a prison sentence for an incarcerated woman with multiple chronic diseases, as well as approval by the Gendarmerie of guidelines to safeguard the rights of pregnant prisoners and nursing babies are noteworthy. For its part, the Commission welcomes the steps taken by Barbados to expand access to higher education in the prison system, including for prison staff, in cooperation with the University of the West Indies. In Jamaica, 10 inmates completed university programs in collaboration with the University of the Commonwealth Caribbean and Stand Up for Jamaica. Similarly, the Commission appreciates the opening of the first prison maternity ward in Mexico at the Women's Social Reintegration Center in Nuevo Leon, as well as the introduction of the "Art for Freedom" brand to market the work of the Center's inmates, which benefits both them and their families by generating income. In Panama, an interinstitutional team reviewed the files of incarcerated persons to ascertain who had served two-thirds of their sentence or suffered from chronic illnesses, leading the release of approximately 6,000 individuals. The Dominican Republic launched a pilot plan for the first "national prison cadaster" to collect, record, and update information on the prison population, prison infrastructure, and the system's resources. Similarly, Uruguay conducted the second National Census of Persons Deprived of Liberty and instituted a National Literacy Plan for incarcerated individuals. The Commission appreciates the collaboration between His Majesty's Prison and the Saint Kitts and Nevis Defense Forces, which offers training to inmates in automotive mechanics, welding, and agriculture, and includes supervised construction projects. Finally, note was taken of the opening of the Central Resocialization Center in Suriname, which coordinates reintegration programs that include apprenticeships, financial education, anger management, and psychological support.

64. With respect to combating torture, Bolivia's Office of the Ombudsperson offered human rights and torture-prevention training activities to approximately 3,900 police officers. For its part, Mexico published the National Program to Prevent and Punish Torture, pushed by civil society, to comply with a ruling handed down by Mexico City's Tenth Collegiate Court on Administrative Matters.

65. Regarding measures to protect the human rights of people of African descent and combat racial discrimination, Bolivia's Office of the Ombudsperson created the Ombudsperson's Observatory on Racism and Discrimination and worked with the Supreme Electoral Tribunal and the National Committee to devise measures to prevent racism and hate speech in the 2025 electoral process. Brazil approved the Anti-Racism Strategy Action Plan for Health 2025, which includes mandatory reporting of sickle cell anemia and creates technical support bodies. The Management Committee for the National Policy for Territorial and Environmental Management Quilombola (PNGTAQ) 2025-2027 was also established. For its part, the Supreme Court of Justice rejected the notion of "reverse racism," holding that the crime of racial slander does not apply to offenses directed at non-Afro-descendants "by reason of color," thereby reinforcing the specific legal protection of that construct. The Commission further welcomes actions taken to reduce the overrepresentation of Afro-descendants and indigenous peoples in Canada's criminal justice system through the Black Justice Strategy's Implementation Plan and the Federal Indigenous Justice Strategy. Colombia reported the creation of the Special Harmonization Program for reintegration using an ethnic and gender approach. The United States Department of Justice sued the county of Houston, Georgia over an electoral system that would undermine the vote of people of African descent. Similarly, the Minneapolis City Council approved a police oversight and reform agreement following investigations into discriminatory practices in the wake of the George Floyd case. Guatemala reported progress in incorporating guidelines for ethnic disaggregation and service provision, as well as the addition of "Afro-descendant/Creole/Afro-mestizo" classifications in the National Report of the Montevideo Consensus 2024 and other public policy instruments. Paraguay's National Council of Afro-descendants (CONAFRO) initiated steps to coordinate public policies; the National Secretariat of Culture prepared the Institutional Strategic Plan 2025-2029; the Ministry of Public Defense promoted a National Network for the Rights of Indigenous Peoples; and the Directorate for the Defense of Indigenous Peoples was created hand-in-hand with experts in indigenous culture.

66. The Caribbean welcomed the Second International Decade for People of African Descent (2025-2034) while the regional agenda for reparations for slavery and colonialism was renewed in cultural and youth forums. In Belize, the "Belize Kriol Dictionary" app was launched free of charge for schools and the public to spread the native language. UNESCO granted Jamaica a certificate recognizing the Revival Pilgrimage to Watt Town as Intangible Cultural Heritage of Humanity, given that revivalism is a popular religious expression that integrates elements of African and other cultures. Saint Vincent and the Grenadines reported progress in cultural rights and memory initiatives linked to Garifuna heritage. The schools in Fancy incorporated daily lessons in the Garifuna language. In addition, the State announced the purchase of Baliceaux Island, a historically pivotal site for the Garifuna people, with plans for preserving and honoring Garifuna memory. In Suriname, the official standardization of the writing systems for Sranan, Sarnami, Okanisi (Ndyuka), and Saamaka marked a milestone in the recognition and standardization of Suriname's four national languages.

67. As to the rights of lesbian, gay, bisexual, trans, gender diverse, and intersex (LGBTI) people, progress in Chile took the form of the first National Institute of Statistics (INE) survey designed to generate data on sexual and gender diversity, as well as the SENCE-municipalities Diverse Network Pilot, aimed at helping trans people obtain positions in municipal care programs through coordination among different public institutions. Colombia approved CONPES 4147: National Policy for Guaranteeing the Rights of the LGBTIQ+ Population and made progress with respect to a trans voting protocol and the issuance of documents containing a "non-binary" category. The Commission recognizes the appointment of a trans woman as Uruguay's Secretary of Human Rights.

68. At the judicial level, the Constitutional Court of the Dominican Republic declared Articles 210 of the National Police Code of Justice and 260 of the Armed Forces Code of Justice unconstitutional; these articles punished members of the police and military with up to two years in prison for engaging in sexual relations with persons of the same sex. The Court stated that such provisions violated equality, human dignity, privacy, and free development of personality. The Eastern Caribbean Supreme Court ruled that sections 132 and 133 of Saint Lucia's Criminal Code criminalizing sodomy and gross indecency were incompatible with a number of constitutional rights protected by the Bill of Rights in St. Lucia's Constitution. For its part, Suriname's Constitutional Court ordered the government to register the marriages of two same-sex couples in the records of the Central Bureau for Civil Affairs (CBB).

69. The IACHR also takes other judicial precedents into consideration, including the Brazilian Superior Court of Justice ruling that authorized the use of gender-neutral markers on identity documents and the extension of the Maria da Penha Law to same-sex couples and transgender women and transvestites by the Federal Supreme Court. Meanwhile, the Criminal Appeals Chamber of the Province of Buenos Aires in Argentina upheld the life sentence for aggravated murder due to hatred of the victim's gender identity in the case of Tehuel de la Torre. Chile's Constitutional Court rescinded a law that prevented the funding of hormone therapies for trans persons under 18 years of age and authorized changes of name and registered sex for trans persons under 14 years of age. A ruling by Colombia's Constitutional Court made it possible for trans persons to change their names without the need for notarial documents and extended breastfeeding-related rights regardless of gender. The Supreme Court of Costa Rica recognized co-parenting leave for diverse families. Ecuador's Constitutional Court ordered the Ministry of Education to develop support protocols for trans children. In the United States, a court order in California blocked the enforcement of three executive orders limiting health services for LGBTI people. Meanwhile, a Wisconsin Supreme Court decision called for a ban on conversion therapy. Similarly, in Mexico, the Chiapas and Tamaulipas state legislatures passed reforms to ban conversion therapy. Likewise, Mexico's Supreme Court of Justice invalidated a provision of the state of Guerrero's Criminal Code that exempted families that forced their sons and daughters to attend conversion therapy from criminal liability.

70. Regarding the rights of persons with disabilities, in The Bahamas, the National Commission for Persons with Disabilities (NCPD) received a budget increase to expand programs such as life skills training, independent living initiatives, and free accessible transportation. In Barbados, the Rights of Persons with Disabilities Act was passed, addressing education, employment, healthcare, and transportation, while strengthening legal protections for persons with disabilities. In Brazil, the introduction of accessible communications services for people with hearing impairments in hearings and other judicial proceedings is worth noting. In Colombia, the Law for the Prevention and Care of Mental Disorders and Illnesses was passed. Costa Rica published the School Mental Health Plan and enacted Law 10725, which guarantees immediate psychological care for persons at risk of suicide. In El Salvador, inclusive voting measures were implemented, e.g., the use of Braille and typhlological envelopes, in an effort to guarantee accessibility and adaptive voting centers. Panama made advances in its National Strategic Plan on Disability (PEN) 2025-2029. Paraguay passed Law 7371/2025, which provides for a comprehensive framework for the protection, inclusion, and exercise of legal capacity of persons with disabilities. Suriname adopted the National Policy Plan for Persons with Disabilities 2025-2030, which focuses on government building accessibility, traffic adjustments, and facilities for receiving and guiding persons with disabilities.

71. With respect to the rights of older persons, and in particular, matters related to pensions, Chile made progress with the entry into force of a new pension reform designed to improve the system's solvency and equity, including gradual increases to the Universal Guaranteed Pension (PGU) and the creation of both a Social Security system funded by employers and an Autonomous Pension Protection Fund to administer the new social security system. In Colombia, the National Public Policy on Care was approved, with specific actions for this group. Also noteworthy is the passage of the Law for Strengthening Welfare and Social Organizations for Older Adults in Costa Rica, which aims to address, intersectionally, the conditions of vulnerability faced by this population, and which identifies older adults in a situation of abandonment as targets for state intervention. The launch of Mexico's Salud Casa por Casa strategy, designed to provide home healthcare to older adults, reportedly included a census of 8.9 million older adults in an effort to develop tailored health plans. In Uruguay, the Banco de Previsión Social's Observatory on Old Age, Aging, and Social Security was launched. The Observatory aims to strengthen existing social security policies and generate inputs that make it possible to innovate in this area. Finally, the IACHR welcomed the fact that Saint Kitts and Nevis became a State Party to the Inter-American Convention on Protecting the Human Rights of Older Persons upon depositing its legal instrument of ratification on May 28.

72. As to the third group of measures, the Commission highlights a series of actions taken to advance policies and practices pertaining to memory, truth, and justice in the region. Brazil rectified the death certificates of victims of the military dictatorship to officially reflect the violent cause of their deaths. Brazil further delivered these documents to the victims' relatives; held ceremonies to apologize as a form of symbolic reparation; and transferred ownership of the Casa da Morte in Petrópolis, with a view to transforming it into a memorial. Additionally, a collection of documents related to the military dictatorship was discovered at the former Forensic Institute of Rio de Janeiro. Chile created a Memory Sites Unit, a National Memory Archive, and a Memory Sites Social Program. In addition, 15 new sites were declared historical monuments, and 22 identifying plaques were put up throughout the country. Approval was also given to expropriate land at the former Colonia Dignidad to establish a memory site and for handover of the former "Discoteque" building so it can be converted into a memory site. In Colombia, the Special Jurisdiction for Peace issued its first two restorative judgments, one in sub-case 001, concerning hostage-taking and grave deprivation of liberty by the FARC-EP; and the other, in the Costa Caribe sub-case of Case 003, having to do with murders and disappearances illegitimately labeled as combat casualties. The rulings established penalties of up to eight years, focused on memory projects, dignification, community rebuilding, searches for missing persons, and demining. Additionally, the IACHR appreciates the extension—for three additional years—of the law for the registration of victims and relatives of the massacres in El Mozote and surrounding areas in El Salvador. It also took note of the judgment handed down by the Court of First Instance of Dulce Nombre de María, in Chalatenango, which sentenced three retired members of the Salvadoran military to prison for the murder of four Dutch journalists in 1982. In Uruguay, an agreement was signed with respect to digitization of the historical archives from police headquarters, police intelligence, and military justice; publication of historical documents from the Condor Plan; and cooperation with Chile concerning the exchange of documented information on human rights violations.

73. Regarding the grave scourge of disappearances, Chile developed a georeferenced map of victims' trajectories using specialized technologies, and assessment portfolios were delivered to relatives of missing persons. The first official list of 1,469 victims of enforced disappearance was also published and a law was passed to create a Registry of Persons Missing due to Enforced Disappearance, which will make it possible to issue death certificates and ease civil red tape for family members. The formulation of Guatemala's National Search Plan included the signing of international cooperation agreements with Colombia and Chile and a letter of understanding with the International Committee of the Red Cross to advance in cases. The reform of Mexico's General Law on Disappearances was enacted. In addition, the First National Meeting on Human Identification Processes was held and was attended by representatives of prosecutors' offices, local commissions, and international organizations. A series of measures was also promoted to strengthen prevention, search, and reparation policies. The IACHR welcomes the issuance in Paraguay of Ministry of the Interior Decree 4061, which creates both the System for the Search for Missing Persons and the National Commission for the Search and Location of Persons, thereby enabling immediate actions.

74. In conclusion, the Commission notes the remarkable efforts made by the States, through the development of policies and practices and the implementation of legislative and judicial measures, to advance in the promotion and effective protection of the human rights of their inhabitants. The Commission acknowledges these efforts and urges the States to continue to develop and pursue a human rights approach in public policies, in keeping with the recommendations of the bodies of the Inter-American Human Rights System, and to make this approach crosscutting in all State institutions and in society as a whole. The Commission places itself at the disposal of the States for any technical assistance they may require to achieve these objectives.

C. Origin, legal basis, structures, purposes and mandates

75. The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights ("IACHR" or "Inter-American Commission") is an autonomous organ of the Organization of American States (OAS), headquartered in Washington, D.C. Its mandate is established in the OAS Charter, the American Convention on Human Rights ("American Convention") and its Statute. The IACHR is one of two organs of the Inter-American system responsible for the promotion and protection of human rights; the other is the Inter-American Court of Human Rights, based in San José, Costa Rica.

76. The IACHR is composed of seven members who act independently, without representing any country. Its members are elected by the OAS General Assembly for a four-year term and may be reelected once. The Inter-American Commission meets in regular and special sessions several times a year. The Executive Secretariat, in accordance with Article 13 of the Rules of Procedure of the IACHR, carries out the tasks delegated to it by the IACHR and provides the latter with legal and administrative support in the performance of its functions.

77. In April 1948, the OAS adopted in Bogotá, Colombia, the American Declaration of the Rights and Duties of Man ("American Declaration"), the first general international human rights instrument. The IACHR was created in 1959 and held its first session in 1960.

78. In 1961, the IACHR began making visits to various countries to observe the human rights situation in situ. Since then, it has conducted numerous visits to the Organization's Member States. Annual, country and thematic reports are available on the IACHR website.

79. In 1965, the IACHR was expressly authorized to examine complaints or petitions related to specific cases of human rights violations. The final reports published by the IACHR, in relation to these individual cases, can be found in the Annual Reports of the Inter-American Commission and are also available on the IACHR website, in the section on petitions and cases.

80. The American Convention on Human Rights was adopted in 1969 and entered into force in 1978. As of December 2024, 24 Member States are party to this treaty: Argentina, Barbados, Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, Grenada, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, Jamaica, Mexico, Nicaragua, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Suriname, Uruguay and Venezuela.

81. The American Convention defines the human rights that States agree to respect and guarantee by virtue of ratification. It also created the Inter-American Court of Human Rights and defined the functions and procedures of the IACHR and the Inter-American Court of Human Rights. In addition to considering complaints alleging responsibility for violations of the American Convention with respect to States parties to that instrument, the IACHR is competent, under the OAS Charter and its Statute, to examine alleged violations of the American Declaration by OAS Member States that are not yet parties to the American Convention.

82. In compliance with its mandate, the Inter-American Commission:

a) Receives, analyzes and investigates individual petitions alleging human rights violations, in accordance with Articles 44 to 51 of the American Convention, Articles 19 and 20 of its Statute and Articles 23 to 52 of its Rules of Procedure.

b) Observes the general human rights situation in Member States and issues special reports on the situation in a particular Member State when it considers it appropriate in accordance with Rule 60 of its Rules of Procedure.

c) Conducts on-site visits to countries to conduct in-depth analyses of the general situation and/or to investigate a specific situation in accordance with Article 18 of its Statute and Article 53 of its Rules of Procedure. In general, these visits result in the preparation of a report on the human rights situation of the country in question, which is published and submitted to the Permanent Council and the OAS General Assembly.

d) Stimulates public awareness of human rights in the Americas. To this end, the Inter-American Commission conducts and publishes studies on specific topics in accordance with Article 15 of its Rules of Procedure, such as the measures to be adopted to ensure greater access to justice; the effects of internal armed conflicts on certain groups of people; the human rights situation of children, women, LGBTI persons, people on the move, including migrants, refugees, asylum seekers, internally displaced persons and victims of human trafficking, persons deprived of liberty, human rights defenders, indigenous peoples and Afro-descendants, racial discrimination, freedom of expression, and economic, social, cultural and environmental rights.

e) Organizes and holds visits, conferences, seminars and meetings with representatives of governments, academic institutions, non-governmental entities and others, to disseminate information and promote broad knowledge of the work of the inter-American human rights system in accordance with the provisions of Article 41 of the American Convention on Human Rights and Article 18 of its Statute.

f) Recommends to the OAS member states the adoption of measures that contribute to the protection of human rights in the countries of the Hemisphere in accordance with the provisions of Article 41 of the American Convention on Human Rights and Article 18 of its Statute.

g) It requests Member States to adopt precautionary measures in accordance with the provisions of Article 25 of its Rules of Procedure, to prevent irreparable harm to human rights in serious and urgent cases. Likewise, in accordance with the provisions of Article 76 of its Rules of Procedure, it may request that the Inter-American Court order the adoption of provisional measures in cases of extreme gravity and urgency to prevent irreparable harm to persons.

h) Submits cases to the Inter-American Court of Human Rights and appears before the Court during its processing and consideration in accordance with the provisions of Article 61 of the American Convention on Human Rights and Articles 45 and 74 of its Rules of Procedure.

i) It requests advisory opinions from the Inter-American Court, in accordance with the provisions of Article 64 of the American Convention and Article 19 of its Statute.

83. Any person, group of persons or non-governmental entity legally recognized in one or more of the OAS Member States may lodge petitions with the Inter-American Commission regarding violations of a right recognized in the American Convention, the American Declaration or other relevant instrument, in accordance with their respective provisions and its Statute and Rules of Procedure. Likewise, in the situation described and regulated by Article 45 of the American Convention, the IACHR may consider communications in the nature of an inter-State complaint. Complaints may be submitted in any of the four official languages of the OAS (Spanish, French, English or Portuguese) by the alleged victim of the violation of rights or by a third party; and in the case of interstate complaints, by a State.

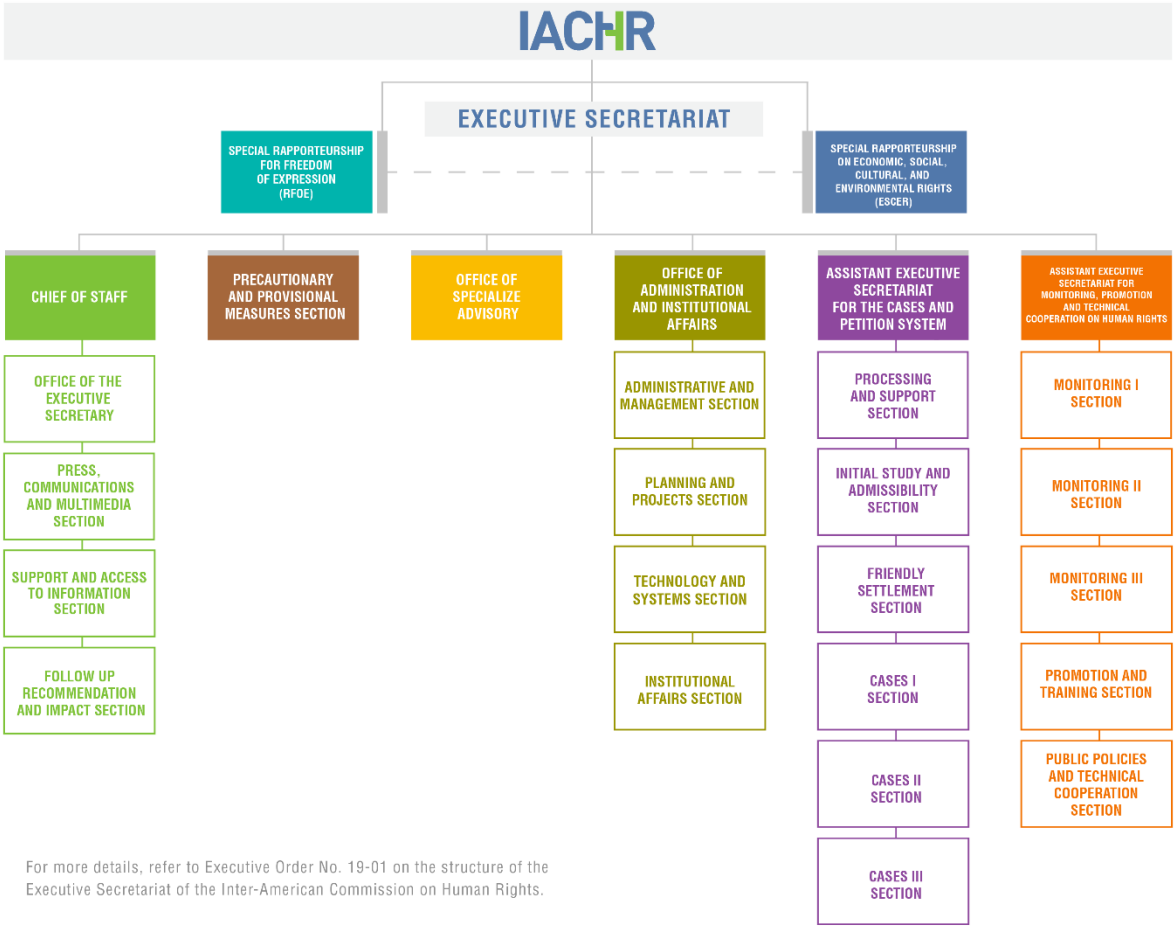
2. Progress made with the Ratification and Signature of Instruments of the Inter-American System in 2025



86. The IACHR has stressed the importance of universal ratification of the instruments of the inter-American system as a critical element in ensuring full respect for and guaranteeing human rights in the Americas.

87. The Inter-American Commission applauds the states of Saint Lucia, Honduras, Ecuador and Belize for their adhesion to the international instruments for the protection of human rights identified below, in chronological order.

88. On March 7, 2025, the Permanent Mission of Canada signed the Inter-American Convention on the Prevention, Punishment and Eradication of Violence against Women, "Convention of Belém Do Pará," at OAS headquarters in Washington, D.C., United States.

89. On May 28, 2025, the Permanent Mission of Saint Kitts and Nevis deposited the instrument of accession to the Inter-American Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Persons with Disabilities, and the instrument of accession to the Inter-American Convention on the Protection of the Human Rights of Older Persons at OAS headquarters in Washington, D.C. D.C., United States.

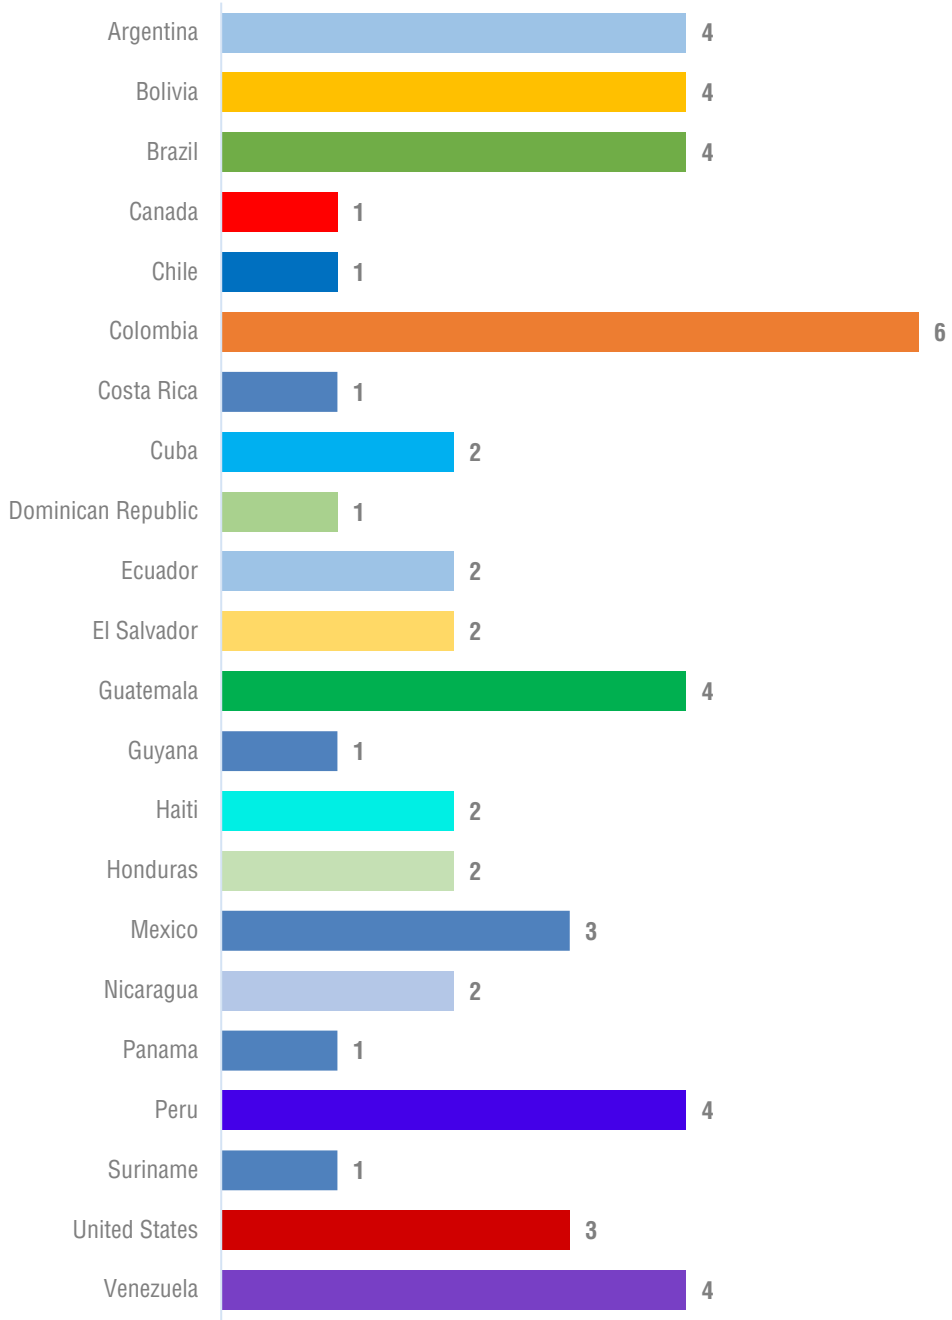
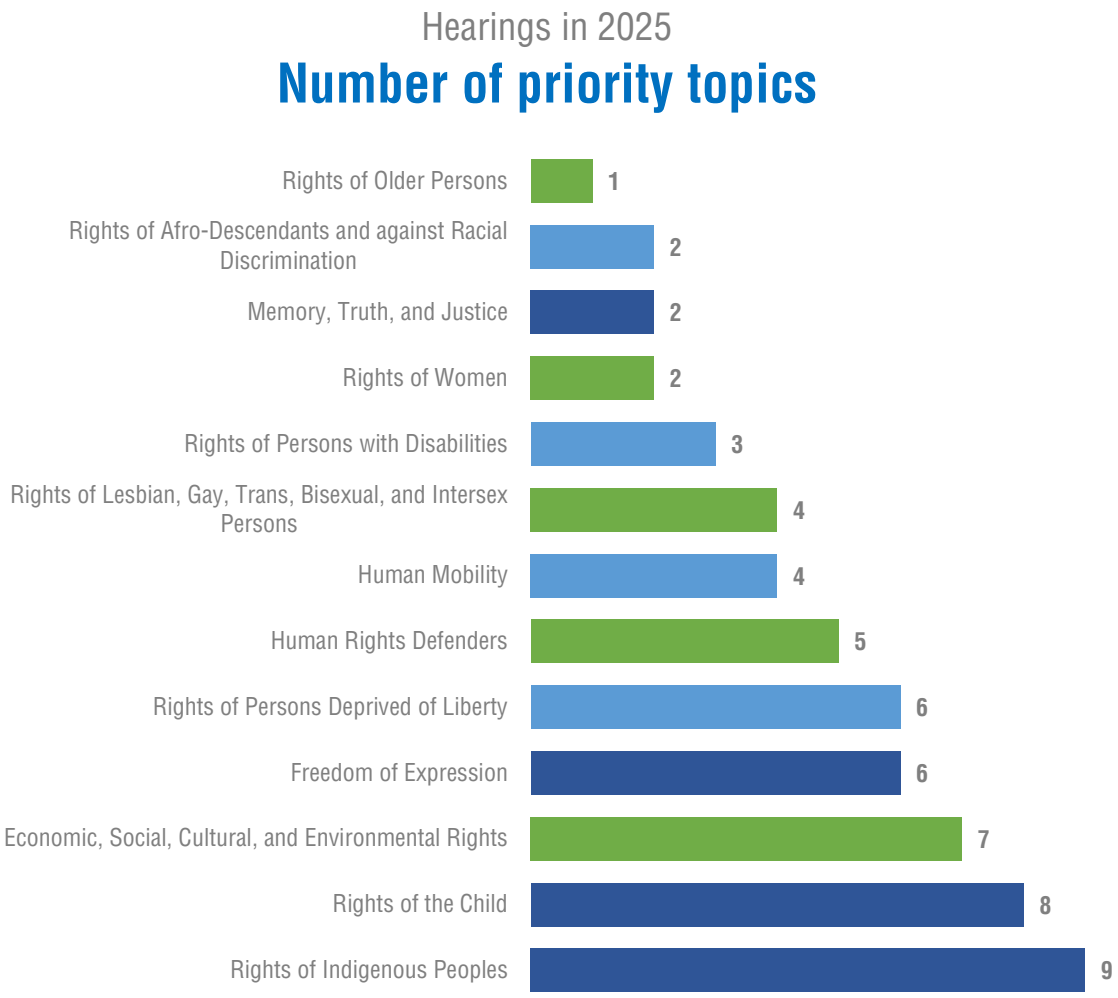
CHAPTER I

ACTIVITIES OF THE IACHR IN 2025

A. Sessions of the IACHR held in 2025



1. During 2025 the IACHR held three periods of Sessions: 192, 193 and 194. This last one was held at the University of Miami, Florida.



2. During these sessions the Commission followed up and publicized a significant number of human rights situations in 70 public hearings. These hearings referred to monitoring regional and sub-regional human rights situations, cases and precautionary measures follow up.

Hearings in 2025

Total by countries

B. Approved Resolutions

3. During 2025 the IACHR adopted two Resolutions:

4. Resolution 1-25, approved on July 15, considered the request for abstention submitted by Commissioner Carlos Bernal Pulido to hear situations related to Peru, declared it admissible and extended it.

5. Resolution 2/25 , approved on July 24, refers to the Rights of family members and persons with affective ties of persons deprived of liberty.

C. Communication activities in 2025

6. Throughout 2025, the IACHR obtained a total of 3,748,203 visits to the pages of the website, which correspond to 1,418,047 people. Press releases were the most visited section with 715,469 visits, followed by decisions with 507,052 visits and by mandates with 476,915 visits. In languages other than Spanish, press releases in English 151,253; in Portuguese registered 117,432 visits; and in French, 13,460.

7. South America was the region that visited the website the most with 504,819 people visiting, followed by North America with 368,496 people, Central America with 92,966 people and the Caribbean with 11,172 people. From the rest of the world, 477,850 people were registered.

8. The IACHR conducted 15 digital campaigns to disseminate standards, achieving 2,277,771 impressions and 43,002 interactions. These campaigns addressed reports, resolutions, relevant human rights topics, and observances regarding priority groups:

- Reports: Venezuela: serious human rights violations following the elections, 2024 Annual report; Third report on the situation of human rights defenders in the Americas; Violence against indigenous peoples and people of African descent on Nicaragua's Caribbean Coast; and Situation of human rights in Guatemala.

- Resolutions: Resolution 2/24 on human mobility induced by climate change; and Resolution No. 2/25 on the rights of relatives and persons with affective ties to persons deprived of liberty.

- Relevant themes and observances: International women's day; international day of older persons that included 4 awareness videos; international day for the elimination of violence against women; the update of the Special Monitoring Mechanism for Nicaragua (MESENI) database; the impacts of the closing of civic space in Nicaragua; the IACHR's recommendation follow-up mechanism; and an awareness campaign on sexual and reproductive rights according to Inter-American standards.

9. As a result of its media strategy, the Commission recorded 8,894 exclusive mentions in media across the region related to the topics it works on and its mandate mechanisms. Likewise, 74 interviews were granted on the Venezuelan context, the Annual report 2024, and the reports on Guatemala and Colombia; the human rights situation in Nicaragua, El Salvador, Brazil, and the region; the working visits to Guatemala and Brazil; as well as on human mobility, older persons, human rights defenders, women's rights and gender – based violence.

10. During the year, the Commission generated and issued 291 press releases, which received a total of 311,384 visits. They addressed priority issues in the region, contained pronouncements on alert situations and human rights violations, as well as the recognition of good practices and institutional issues relevant to the fulfillment of the Commission's mandate.

D. Social participation agenda

11. The 2017-2021 Strategic Plan of the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) identified the strengthening of civil society participation as one of its priorities and in connection with its implementation, the IACHR made significant efforts to broaden and deepen it in accordance with its mandate. The assessment of this Strategic Plan pointed to the continuity of consultation and dialogue with civil society, as well as improvements in its ability to protect and defend human rights, as some of the main achievements of its implementation.

12. Drawing on this experience, the construction of a new Strategic Plan for the period 2023-2027 resorted to a new participatory process, in the framework of which the different actors of the ISHR once again emphasized the relevance of civil society participation for the fulfillment of the IACHR's mandate. This was reflected in the prioritization of civil society participation in a set of strategic objectives and programs, and in the definition of a specific program to expand ties with national human rights institutions, civil society organizations, and other non-State actors that influence the enjoyment of human rights (strategic program 23).

13. In executing this mandate, the IACHR created the Social Coordination Advisory Office in order to enhance the contributions of civil society to other relevant programs that are part of the Strategic Plan 2023-2027. This strategy is based on the recognition of the IACHR's extensive institutional experience of relations with civil society, challenges identified, lessons learned, and opportunities for the new Strategic Plan.

14. Civil society is a key interlocutor for the IACHR, representing victims of human rights violations in the petition and case system; providing critical information for monitoring during visits and public hearings; alerting the IACHR to crises and other human rights situations; offering its expertise and independent perspectives on emerging human rights issues; bringing the inter-American human rights system (ISHR) closer to different audiences; and advocating in forums and political processes that impact the work of the IACHR, among many other key functions.

15. This Advisory Office seeks to:

i. Promote pluralism with respect to civil society opinions in the activities of the IACHR, by providing a broad and influential spectrum of perspectives on human rights issues.
ii. Forge relationships fostering communication and mutual support with organized civil society.
iii. Consolidate collaborative relationships with organizations that have traditionally used the ISHR.
iv. Promote the participation of new organizations in the ISHR, especially grassroots organizations.
v. Ensure that the IACHR's activities incorporate a gender and diversity perspective, as well as an ethnic-racial perspective.
vi. Bolster the use of virtual media to achieve civil society participation in IACHR activities.
vii. Strengthen and develop new channels, tools, and content to improve the accessibility of IACHR information for users and non-users of the ISHR.
viii. Use the available mechanisms of the IACHR to promote the strengthening of civil society, especially in order to counter policies and practices in some states that have restricted opportunities for civic participation.

16. During 2025, IACHR monitoring of the human rights situation in the region was strengthened thanks to the important contributions of civil society to the work of the IACHR, through different channels: open meetings during the sessions (virtual and in person), meetings in connection, inter alia, with country visits, virtual meetings, and public hearings.

17. Special mention should be made of the strategies implemented to monitor the human rights situation in countries to which the IACHR does not have access, such as Cuba, Nicaragua, and Venezuela, based on information provided by civil society.

18. Timely attention to human rights crises in different countries was another area in which the contributions of civil society were essential.

19. The various mechanisms and strategies for following up on recommendations implemented in recent years have also confirmed the value of civil society participation. Both the mechanisms established for the Ayotzinapa issue in Mexico (MESA), Nicaragua (MESENI), and Venezuela (MESEVE), as well as more recent strategies in relation to Bolivia (MESEG), Chile (MESECH), and Colombia, have exemplified the importance of having institutionalized civil society participation.

20. In addition, the periodic dialogue with the organizations that traditionally use the system (organized in the Coalition of Human Rights Organizations of the Americas) allowed for constant communication between the IACHR and civil society and a fluid exchange of information on the main issues of interest and concern to civil society, both in relation to the regional human rights agenda and to the work of the IACHR.

21. The IACHR has held regular meetings with national human rights coalitions in countries where serious human rights violations have occurred and has closely monitored laws and practices restricting the right to association, freedom of expression, and assembly in some states.

22. The continuous and varied provision of training by the IACHR has had a positive impact. On the one hand, training specific groups of users of the inter-American system -such as indigenous peoples- on access to certain mechanisms has led to significant improvements, for example, in terms of enhancing the quality of requests for precautionary measures. In addition, the provision of massive open online courses (MOOCs) broadened the scope of training initiatives and the availability of information on the inter-American system.

23. In relation to the above, the attention provided to users of IACHR mechanisms has helped raise civil society participation, not only through the training provided but also through initiatives for access to information.

24. Details of the activities conducted in each of the mechanisms to meet these objectives are described in the different chapters of this report.

E. Technical cooperation

25. The 2023-2027 Strategic Plan includes Program 22, concerning technical cooperation in the area of institutions and public policies with a human rights approach, through which the IACHR seeks to work with the states, civil society, the academic sector, and other actors, such as international and regional organizations, to contribute, on the basis of its mandate, to compliance with international obligations and the implementation of inter-American standards in the Americas. The objective is to support, from a positive agenda, efforts aimed at the promotion and protection of human rights, the transformation of social structures that give rise to violations, the prevention of their repetition, and the accompaniment of public policy development under this approach, thereby laying the foundations for progress toward a culture of rights and the strengthening of democratic institutions and the rule of law in the region.

26. In this context, the IACHR has continued to make progress in negotiating and processing cooperation agreements with a range of actors, including member states, civil society, human rights institutions, regional and international organizations, and other entities. With respect to general-purpose cooperation or framework agreements, in 2025 the IACHR signed a total of three agreements of that nature:[1] with the Attorney General's Office of Brazil, the Barcelona-based Fundació d'Economia Analítica (FEA), and the United Nations Latin American Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders (ILANUD).

[1] IACHR, Cooperation Agreements.

27. The IACHR also signed a series of cooperation agreements for specific purposes. These include agreements to implement the position of associate personnel within the Executive Secretariat of the IACHR; to hold the 194th Period of Sessions with the University of Miami; to conduct a specialized course with the MERCOSUR Institute of Public Policies on Human Rights (IPPDH); and to extend the agreement for the operation of the Interdisciplinary Group of Independent Experts (GIEI) in Honduras. Through these agreements, the IACHR seeks to promote standards and strengthen the work of the inter-American system within the hemispheric human rights agenda.

28. In the course of the year, 10 professional associate staff members from different institutions of OAS member states provided services to the Executive Secretariat under cooperation agreements. Of those, seven participants came from Brazilian state institutions, including the National Council of the Public Prosecution Service, the Brazilian Public Defender Office, the Public Defender Office of the State of Rio de Janeiro, and the Labor Public Prosecution Service. The IACHR also received two participants from the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) and one participant from the International Work Group for Indigenous Affairs (IWGIA). In addition, three grants were awarded through cooperation projects with academic institutions, including the Universidad Nacional Autónoma de México (UNAM), the University of California, Los Angeles (UCLA), and Universidad Autónoma de Coahuila, as well as with civil society organizations such as Both Ends Believing (BEB).

29. In the area of public policy, in March the Commission participated in the Hemispheric Dialogue of Subnational Governments organized by the OAS Department for the Promotion of Peace and Coordination with Subnational Governments, with a view to strengthening governance and promoting integral, sustainable, and inclusive development, democracy, and human rights. As a continuation of this initiative, a public policy network is being developed with subnational governments. In addition, as part of its collaboration with other areas of the OAS, staff of the Executive Secretariat participated in the Model OAS General Assembly for Secondary Schools (MOAS) for Secondary Schools by providing technical cooperation to that initiative, drawing on their relevant experience in human rights. The event took place from November 17 to 19 and was attended by nearly 200 students from different countries in the region.

30. The process of drafting a resolution on organized crime and human rights is also noteworthy. To this end, the IACHR concluded the cycle of consultations with experts, civil society organizations, and States.[2] [3]

1. Cooperation with States

31. During the year, the Commission made progress in the consideration, development and implementation of various proposals for technical cooperation with States and national institutions.

32. In the case of Colombia, cooperation focused on strengthening the work of the institutions of the Integral System of Truth, Justice, Reparation, and Non-Repetition. In particular, on December 10, 2025, a high-level meeting was held with the Special Jurisdiction for Peace (JEP), at which the IACHR was informed of the first restorative sentences issued by that body. Follow-up meetings were also held between the technical teams.

33. In the area of human rights institutions, the Commission provided assistance to the Advisory Commission for the Strengthening of the National Human Rights Institute of Chile. The purpose of the Commission's work in Chile was to advise the President of the Republic and the Ministry of Justice and Human Rights on possible regulatory reforms to strengthen the independence, transparency, and effectiveness of the Institute. The request was addressed through a technical note that systematized and presented the inter-

American standards applicable to national human rights agencies, as well as good practices for strengthening them.

34. The IACHR also received requests and provided advice on the cooperation mechanism to the Ministry of Social Development of Uruguay, the National School for Training and Improvement of the Magistracy of Brazil, the Mechanism against Torture of Paraguay, and the Secretariat for Transparency of Colombia.

35. At the request of the Santa Fe Public Defender Office in Argentina, the IACHR attended an invitation to participate in the inauguration of the Training Seminar on Juvenile Criminal Justice. The main standards of the IACHR in this area were presented. Presentations were also delivered on the cooperation mechanism for the provincial agency, in coordination with the AIDEF (Inter-American Association of Public Defender Offices).

2. Cooperation with the Caribbean

36. The Five-Year Strategy for the Caribbean (2023–2027) continued to be implemented in conjunction with Program 17 of the IACHR Strategic Plan 2023–2027 and focused on technical cooperation initiatives in the Caribbean. In particular, the IACHR developed a work plan for the implementation of the third year of the Strategy for the Caribbean and led efforts, in collaboration with the Planning and Projects Section, to advance the strategic agenda in the Caribbean by 2025. The focus during the year continued to be on technical assistance, promotion of the ratification of the Inter-American human rights conventions, and promotion and protection of human rights in the Caribbean at the bilateral and regional levels. In this regard, a summary of the implementation of the Strategy for the Caribbean was shared with CARICOM representatives on July 15, during the Commission's 193rd session.

a. Technical assistance to states

37. The Commission provided technical assistance to public officials on inter-American human rights standards and mechanisms, as well as on how to respect and protect the human rights of all persons in their respective States. On July 7, the IACHR sent letters offering the possibility of cooperation in the framework of the extension of the ratifications of the inter-American conventions on persons with disabilities; human rights of older persons; and against racism, to Antigua and Barbuda, Dominica, Grenada, Guyana, Jamaica, St. Vincent and the Grenadines, Suriname, and Trinidad and Tobago. The letters were sent together with comparative analyses of the inter-American and United Nations conventions on the rights of persons with disabilities and against racism, as appropriate. The Inter-American Convention on Protecting the Human Rights of Older Persons, which has no equivalent in the United Nations, was also shared. These analyses have proven useful for the deliberations of legislators and/or parliamentarians and have encouraged ratification by Caribbean States. In this regard, it should be noted that the State of St. Kitts and Nevis ratified the conventions on older persons and persons with disabilities on May 28, 2025.

38. Regarding follow-up work with the states of Barbados and Belize, where technical cooperation and promotion visits were carried out in 2024, the IACHR made progress in communications to strengthen legislation on older persons and persons with disabilities in Barbados. In addition, as part of the positive agenda, progress was made in communications with the State of Belize on strengthening the country's human rights institutions.

b. Technical cooperation visits

39. During 2025, a visit was made to The Bahamas from December 3 to 4.[4] The visit focused on promoting technical cooperation from the IACHR to identify needs and challenges on the part of state actors, as well as civil society and regional organizations, in order to facilitate technical advice and the promotion of inter-American standards by the IACHR. In line with this approach, the delegation met with high-level authorities of the country, representatives of civil society, and the Regional Coordinator for the English-speaking Caribbean of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights. The visit also included an update on a precautionary measure in force: MC 535-14 – Persons in Immigration Detention at the Carmichael Road Detention Centre.

40. The IACHR will continue to deepen its commitment to the Caribbean through the ongoing implementation of its strategy for the region. The Commission hopes that, through its various mechanisms, including technical cooperation initiatives, both States and non-State actors will be better informed about the inter-American human rights system and in a position to move toward greater compliance with and guarantee of human rights.

3. Cooperation with national human rights institutions (NHRIs)

41. As part of the actions undertaken by the IACHR to strengthen ties with national human rights institutions (NHRIs), a series of activities were carried out to strengthen inter-institutional communication channels and to explore opportunities for joint actions and cooperation. The initiatives carried out included the provision of inputs related to human rights monitoring, high-level meetings, and technical cooperation with the NHRIs of Bolivia, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Ecuador, and Panama. A briefing session on the Commission's public hearings was held for the Costa Rican Ombudsman's Office.

42. The IACHR also continued to follow up on the Declaration of Commitment on technical cooperation and the points-of-contact mechanism with signatory NHRIs. To that end, the IACHR promoted actions aimed at expanding the number of NHRIs that are part of the Declaration. In addition, on December 4, the annual meeting of the IACHR with NHRIs was held. The purpose of the meeting was to provide a space for an exchange of best practices, challenges, and analysis of different human rights issues. A specific segment featured a presentation on the use of technologies applied to human rights and the IACHR's experience in this area. The virtual event was attended by representatives of 12 NHRIs: Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, El Salvador, Ecuador, Guatemala, Honduras, Mexico, Panama, Paraguay, Uruguay, and Bolivia, which participated as an observer.

43. At the regional level, the IACHR highlights the rapprochement and search for opportunities for collaboration with the Network of National Human Rights Institutions of the Americas (RINDHCA), through update and contact meetings. With regard to Ibero-American Federation of the Ombudsperson (FIO), from August 27 to 29, Commissioner Andrea Pochak participated in the Seventh Summit on Human Mobility and Human Trafficking, held in Bogotá, Colombia. Exchanges were also held to strengthen collaborative work with that institution.

44. In the case of the Caribbean States, in 2025, the IACHR convened two bilateral meetings, on September 25 and August 27, respectively, with the Ombudspersons of St. Kitts and Nevis and Grenada. The events prioritized dialogue on institutional strengthening, legislation, public policies, and national plans for older persons and persons with disabilities. In addition, two regional meetings were held—on September 11 and April 29—with the Caribbean Ombudsman Association (CAROA), with the participation of 18 representatives on either occasion. Two meetings were also held with the Executive Committee of CAROA on February 12 and April 4, 2025, at which CAROA's needs and regional operational challenges were evaluated. The two meetings focused on Belize's transition to a national human rights institution (NHRI), and on promoting the standards and mechanisms of the Convention on Protecting the Human Rights of Older Persons. The latter meeting was particularly important, as many Caribbean States are in the process of drafting or enacting legislation related to older persons.

45. After two years of close collaboration with CAROA and its member states, the IACHR has observed that Caribbean States are gradually moving forward in considering the adoption of broader human rights mandates. In addition, the IACHR was informed that Barbados is initiating steps to elevate its office to NHRI status. In this way, the progress in Belize and Barbados could see them joining the Public Defender Offices in Jamaica and Haiti, which already have mandates to address human rights issues. During the IACHR visit to The Bahamas, the delegation confirmed that the Office of the Ombudsman, which is in the process of installation, would have a specific mandate for the protection of human rights in that State.

46. The IACHR believes that continued technical cooperation with ombudsman offices in the Caribbean will facilitate a clearer understanding of the inter-American human rights system and could result in greater use of the Commission's tools and mechanisms. This level of cooperation will also allow the IACHR to better understand the challenges faced by these offices and how best to respond with appropriate technical assistance. To reinforce support for its work with ombudspersons' offices, the IACHR also held a meeting with the UNDP Regional Office in Panama to discuss collaboration with the IACHR's work program with CAROA.

47. The IACHR is grateful for the active participation and commitment of NHRIs and stresses the importance of continuing to work collaboratively through a positive agenda to strengthen cooperation and address emerging human rights challenges. In this regard, the IACHR calls on the NHRIs of the Americas to continue carrying out their work with the independence and autonomy that characterize these bodies, in accordance with the Paris Principles and applicable inter-American standards.

4. Cooperation with civil society and academia

48. With regard to partnerships with civil society organizations and academic centers, the IACHR made progress in carrying out cooperation activities. Within the framework of the agreement signed with American University, the IACHR provided support to the Inter-American Human Rights Competition, in accordance with the terms of the agreement. The IACHR was also invited to participate in a series of promotional events organized by the university's Academy of Human Rights and International Humanitarian Law. In addition, in September, in keeping with its agreement with UNAM, the XIII Edition of the "Héctor Fix Zamudio" Diploma Course on the Inter-American Human Rights System was held, with the participation of the IACHR. Chapter III of this report provides more details on these academic initiatives.

49. The IACHR also collaborated with the Inter-American Institute of Human Rights, promoting the inter-American human rights system in a training activity held from June 9 to 13 in San José, Costa Rica, aimed at public officials in the Americas. Progress was also made in the implementation of the agreements with the University of the West Indies and the Universidad del Externado. In the same vein, the evaluation of previous editions of the Academic Network was completed, and a project was carried out to update the Academic Network, with an emphasis on the Impact Observatory, within the framework of the Cooperation Agreement with the Max Planck Institute for Comparative Public Law and International Law. It is also worth noting the participation of the IACHR in actions to promote inter-American principles on migrants, with the support of Cornell University. The IACHR was also invited to participate in and promote its 2024 annual report during the Ibero-American Week of International Justice, organized by the Ibero-American Institute of The Hague for Peace, Human Rights and International Justice. The actions with the Inter-American Academy of Human Rights of Universidad de Coahuila, both through the scholarship program and meetings to articulate the work plan, are also noteworthy.

50. Also noteworthy is the initiative with Both Ends Believing, which promotes the right of children and adolescents to live in a family through the adoption of a software system that facilitates the management of information within the relevant national protection system. Within the framework of this triangular cooperation agreement, States such as Ecuador made progress with technical assistance from the Commission. In particular, a note was sent containing standards and recommendations on the right of children and adolescents to live in a family. In implementing the agreement with the Pan-Amazonian Ecclesial Network (REPAM), the IACHR participated in a training session held in Bolivia, and high-level meetings were held to follow up on the relationship and consider possible joint initiatives.

51. In order to promote and protect human rights in the subregion, the IACHR promoted technical cooperation with civil society organizations in the Caribbean to present this mechanism. On May 13, a meeting was held with the Caribbean Association for Youth Development, which addresses issues related to democratic institutions in several Caribbean countries. In addition, on October 29, the IACHR held a meeting with the president of Civil Society Bahamas.

5. Cooperation with international and regional organizations

52. The IACHR and the Caribbean Court of Justice (CCJ) made progress in the implementation of the joint cooperation program for 2025–2026. This program is being implemented in accordance with the IACHR's Five-Year Strategic Plan for the Caribbean and continues to strengthen the exchange of legal, institutional, and jurisprudential information, while providing technical support and mutual training. In line with the above program, a high-level dialogue was held on November 12 during the 194th session of the IACHR, the purpose of which was to promote and facilitate technical exchanges and strengthen inter-institutional ties.

53. In addition, on October 10, a webinar was held with 50 judicial officials and legal professionals from the Caribbean Court of Justice, the Caribbean Association of Judicial Officials, and bar associations. The seminar, which was also held to commemorate the 20th anniversary of the CCJ, highlighted the need for historically discriminated and vulnerable groups, particularly persons with disabilities and older persons, to have adequate measures to protect their rights, and to advocate for the adoption of good legal practices shared throughout the region. The seminar allowed the Commission to share case law, standards, and guidelines on thematic areas that States in the region are actively addressing through national plans, policies, legislation, and international commitments, while facing challenges related to resources, data collection, and implementation.

54. The IACHR also made progress in negotiating and signing a cooperation agreement with ILANUD. The purpose of the agreement is to advance the preparation of a study on the social reintegration of persons deprived of liberty.

55. With regard to activities with the Mercosur Institute of Public Policies on Human Rights (IPPDH), through the signing of the aforementioned specific agreement, the eighth edition of the International Course on Public Policies on Human Rights was held.[5] From a perspective that recognizes the progress and challenges of the region, the course offers concrete conceptual training on the subject, a space for sharing practical experiences, an examination of the challenges that the implementation of the human rights approach poses for state institutions, and an exchange of opportunities for the development of this approach in the region. Chapter III of this report provides more details on this initiative.

6. Special cooperation and assistance mechanisms

56. The IACHR can collaborate in the establishment and formation of groups of international experts with experience in different areas of international human rights law. Such groups can complement State efforts to investigate and clarify facts related to human rights violations. In that regard, in 2025, the IACHR extended the cooperation agreement for the installation of the GIEI in Honduras to provide international technical assistance from a human rights perspective in the investigation of the intellectual authorship of the murder of Berta Cáceres and related crimes. The GIEI was established in accordance with the responsibilities defined in the instrument signed by the parties within the framework of a precautionary measure in force, and the group functions autonomously for as long as the agreed mandate for its work lasts.

57. The IACHR reiterates its willingness and availability to provide technical cooperation to States, regional agencies, social organizations, and other institutions for the purposes of institution building and the formulation, implementation, and assessment of public policies on the strengthening and observance of human rights in the Americas based on inter-American standards.

F. Relations with member states and political bodies of the OAS

58. One of the functions of the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) is to provide advice to States on human rights matters. This mandate is fulfilled, among other means, through its relations with the political bodies of the Organization of American States (OAS): the General Assembly (GA), the Permanent Council (PC), and its Committees, in particular the Committee on Juridical and Political Affairs (CAJP) and the Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Affairs (CAAP). The IACHR supports the political bodies of the OAS in promoting minimum human rights standards in resolutions, declarations, treaties, conventions, and other inter-American instruments. It also maintains relations with other areas of the OAS.

59. During 2025, the IACHR maintained constant representation before the political bodies of the OAS, including the Permanent Council, the CAJP, and the CAAP, actively participating in their sessions and responding to requests from Member States. It also attended meetings convened to present information to OAS political bodies on the implementation of resolutions and other specific requests from Member States, with the participation of Commissioners, the Executive Secretary, and Special Rapporteurs. These interventions, detailed below, reflect compliance with the IACHR's mandate to serve as the Organization's consultative organ on human rights matters:

I. Presentation by Commissioner Gloria Monique de Mees, Rapporteur for Venezuela, at the Regular Session of the Permanent Council, on January 24, 2025, on the IACHR report "Venezuela: Serious Human Rights Violations in the Electoral Context."

II. Presentation by the Special Rapporteur for Freedom of Expression of the IACHR, Pedro Vaca, at the Special Session of the Permanent Council on February 5, 2025, to address the implementation of all aspects of the Inter-American Democratic Charter and its challenges—including the role of disinformation and false information—in compliance with the mandate established in Resolution AG/RES. 3029 (LIV-O/24).

III. Presentation by Commissioner Edgar Stuardo Ralón Orellana, at the Regular Session of the Permanent Council on February 5, 2025, under the agenda item entitled "Human Rights Approach in the Fight against Organized Crime."

IV. Presentation by Commissioner Andrea Pochak, at the Regular Session of the Permanent Council on February 19, 2025, under the agenda item "Contributions of Member States to Counter Intolerance and Discrimination in the Region."

V. Presentation by Commissioner Roberta Clarke, Chair of the IACHR and Rapporteur on the Rights of Women, at the Joint Session of the Permanent Council and the Inter-American Council for Integral Development (CIDI) on March 12, 2025, to commemorate International Women's Day.

VI. Presentation by Commissioner Gloria Monique de Mees, Rapporteur on the Rights of People of African Descent and against Racial Discrimination, at the Special Session of the Permanent Council on March 25, 2025, to commemorate the International Day of Remembrance of the Victims of Slavery and the Transatlantic Slave Trade, under the theme "I Have a Dream: Recognition. Justice. Development."

VII. Presentation by the Special Rapporteur on Economic, Social, Cultural, and Environmental Rights (ESCER), Javier Palummo, at the Regular Session of the Permanent Council on April 2, 2025, under the agenda item "Conservation and Sustainable Use of Marine Biodiversity beyond National Jurisdiction and its Link to the Human Right to a Clean, Healthy, and Sustainable Environment."

VIII. Presentation of Reports of the Office of the Special Rapporteur for Freedom of Expression, led by Special Rapporteur Pedro Vaca, at the Session of the Committee on Juridical and Political Affairs on April 10, 2025, including the reports "Inter-American Legal Framework on the Right to Freedom of Expression" and "Digital Inclusion and Internet Content Governance."

IX. Presentation by Commissioner Andrea Pochak, First Vice Chair and Rapporteur on Human Mobility, at the Special Session of the Committee on Juridical and Political Affairs on April 10, 2025, on the theme "The Power of Inclusion and the Advantages of Diversity."

X. Presentation by Commissioner José Luis Caballero, Chair of the IACHR, at the Session of the Committee on Juridical and Political Affairs on May 8, 2025, under the topic "Presentation of the 2024 Annual Report of the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights to the Fifty-Fifth Regular Session of the General Assembly."

XI. Presentation by Commissioner José Luis Caballero, Chair of the IACHR, of the Commission's 2024 Annual Report at the Fifty-Fifth Regular Session of the OAS General Assembly on June 29, 2025.

XII. Presentation by Commissioner Gloria Monique de Mees, Rapporteur for Venezuela, at the Regular Session of the Permanent Council on August 6, 2025, under the agenda item "Update on the Situation in Venezuela."

XIII. Presentation by Commissioner Arif Bulkan, Rapporteur on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples, at the Special Session of the Permanent Council on August 13, 2025, to commemorate the International Day of the World's Indigenous Peoples, under the theme "From the Voices of Indigenous Women: Visibility, Leadership, Rights, and Economic Autonomy."

XIV. Presentation by Commissioner José Luis Caballero, Chair of the IACHR, at the Regular Session of the Permanent Council on September 17, 2025, under the topic "Reports on the Budget Execution of the IACHR Regular Fund and Indirect Cost Recovery Fund for 2024 and the First Semester of 2025, and Report on the Implementation of the IACHR Strategic Plan 2023–2027 (First Semester 2025)."

XV. Presentation by Commissioner Gloria Monique de Mees, Rapporteur for Venezuela, at the Regular Session of the Permanent Council on October 8, 2025, under the agenda item "Presentation by the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights concerning the request made to the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela to make an on-site visit in the last quarter of 2025, in order to observe the human rights situation, especially as regards persons incarcerated at the Metropolitan Caracas Detention Center for Defendants and Convicted Prisoners (Helicoide)."

XVI. Presentation by Commissioner José Luis Caballero, Chair of the IACHR, at the Session of the Committee on Juridical and Political Affairs on October 30, 2025, under the topic "IACHR Report on Women Deprived of Liberty in the Americas."

XVII. Presentation by the Special Rapporteur for Freedom of Expression of the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights, Pedro Vaca, at the Session of the Committee on Juridical and Political Affairs on November 20, 2025, under the topic "Commemoration of the International Day to End Impunity for Crimes against Journalists."

XVIII. Presentation by Commissioner José Luis Caballero, Chair of the IACHR, at the Special Session of the Permanent Council on December 10, 2025, to commemorate Human Rights Day.

XIX. Presentation by Commissioner Andrea Pochak, First Vice Chair and Rapporteur on Human Mobility, at the Regular Session of the Permanent Council on December 17, 2025, under the agenda item themed "Presentation of IACHR Resolution No. 02/24 on human mobility induced by climate change."

60. The IACHR's participation in the political bodies of the OAS enables the Commission to raise public awareness of human rights in the Americas. Throughout 2025, the IACHR's presentations before OAS political bodies addressed topics related to the human rights situation of women, persons of African descent, and indigenous peoples; freedom of expression; economic, social, cultural, and environmental rights (ESCER); and the implementation of the Inter-American Democratic Charter. The IACHR also reiterated on multiple occasions its concern over the human rights situation in Venezuela, reaffirming its commitment to continuous monitoring and constructive dialogue with States on the situation.

61. During 2025, eleven meetings were held to review the portfolio of petitions, cases, precautionary measures, friendly settlements, and follow-up on recommendations with the following States: Argentina (April 29 / September 30–October 1); The Bahamas (February 21); Barbados (August 26); Bolivia (May 15); Chile (April 4); Colombia (July 29–30); Costa Rica (October 1–2); El Salvador (May 2); Guatemala (August 26); and Mexico (August 5–6). These meetings reflect the IACHR's ongoing commitment to transparency, accountability, and the strengthening of access to information within its System of Petitions, Cases, and Precautionary Measures.

62. These portfolio review meetings are in addition to the meetings held with high-level authorities from different countries within the framework of the working visits carried out during 2025, which will be listed in the section corresponding to monitoring. Likewise, the IACHR Delegation held 19 bilateral meetings with Heads of Delegation during the 55th Regular Session of the OAS General Assembly in Antigua and Barbuda, including 15 Member States, 3 observer countries, and the Inter-American Court of Human Rights. These bilateral meetings focused strategically on fundamental aspects of the Inter-American Human Rights System, such as regional perspectives on the Commission's future, promoting financial support for the IACHR, and—in the case of observer countries—presenting results achieved in ongoing projects, as well as exploring new opportunities for cooperation and financing.

63. Similarly, it is important to highlight the meetings held with regional groups of Member States on July 15, 2025, within the framework of the 193rd Period of Sessions of the IACHR, which took place in an atmosphere of frank and respectful dialogue. These spaces for exchange consolidated the Commission's practice of engagement and cooperation with Member States, reaffirming its commitment to maintaining a permanent and constructive dialogue, allowing for a more fluid exchange and giving full effect to the Commission's mandate to provide human rights advisory services to the Organization of American States and its Member States.

G. Strengthening of coordination with regional and universal human rights bodies

64. In 2025, under Program 30 of the Strategic Plan 2023-2027, the IACHR continued to deepen its collaboration with other international human rights bodies. The central objectives of this coordination are: to strengthen the exchange of best practices, jurisprudence, and standards; to bolster strategic ties to strengthen consistency among human rights bodies; and to enhance strategic interventions for the effective promotion and protection of human rights in the Americas.

65. The Commission is aware that 2025 was a particularly challenging year due to questioning and attacks by some states on the international order, multilateralism, and international organizations. In this context, the Commission decided to strengthen coordination with regional and international organizations, promoting joint strategies to address situations of particular concern, by encouraging closer collaboration in its various mechanisms, increasing the number of actors with which it interacts, and enhancing its participation in various multilateral forums.

66. At the international level, the IACHR has tightened relations with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, based on a joint declaration signed in 2014. Since then, both institutions have strengthened their collaboration in different areas, such as coordination mechanisms on the rights of refugees, the platform of expert mechanisms on discrimination and violence against women, and the coordination mechanism to promote and protect the rights of human rights defenders in the Hemisphere. These mechanisms have resulted, inter alia, in joint public statements, strategies, and collaboration in hearings, exchange of information for visits, and joint meetings with civil society. In addition, the High Commissioner and the President of the IACHR held a high-level dialogue that was followed by periodic dialogues between the offices to follow up on the main human rights issues in the region. The IACHR also invited representatives of the offices to participate in the hearings of the 192nd, 193rd, and 194th Sessions.

67. The IACHR also published joint communiqués with United Nations treaty bodies and special mechanisms on victims of forced disappearance in Venezuela; the rights of women and girls who are refugees, asylum seekers, and stateless persons; the need to strengthen actions for Memory, Truth, and Justice; expressing concern over the return to prison of journalist José Rubén Zamora in Guatemala; establishing standards on artificial intelligence and freedom of expression; and calling for respect for the rule of law for the protection of refugees, among other issues.

68. Within the Human Rights Council, the IACHR strengthened its participation in the Universal Periodic Review and took part in the High-Level Dialogue, presenting its observations and recommendations on the human rights situation in the region.

69. The Inter-American Commission and UNHCR have been working together as strategic partners in recent years. This collaboration has prioritized comprehensive protection of the human rights of migrants, refugees, internally displaced persons, asylum seekers, returnees, victims of human trafficking, stateless persons, and other persons in the context of human mobility in countries of transit, destination, and return. It has been done so by identifying and implementing measures focusing on the prevention, promotion, and protection of human rights.

70. In addition, representatives of the International Red Cross met with the Executive Secretariat in Washington D.C. and Geneva to exchange information and strategies related to the human rights situation in the Americas.

71. The Commission conducts ongoing dialogues with regional human rights bodies, including the African Commission and Court on Human and Peoples' Rights, the European Court, the European Commission's External Action Service Secretariat, the Inter-American Court, and the Caribbean Court of Justice.

H. Follow-up activities on recommendations and impact 72. In 2025, the IACHR consolidated its strategies for supervising the implementation of recommendations made through all its mechanisms in the context of Programs 8 and 9 of the 2023-2027 Strategic Plan and in keeping with its Rules of Procedure. These actions were led by the Section for Follow-up on Recommendations and Impact (SSRI), established in 2017 and operational since 2018, and organized into five strategic lines.

73. Following is a description of the activities promoted by the SSRI during the year for each of these lines. This chapter will address: (1) strengthening the methodology for follow-up on recommendations; (2) the continuity of the special mechanisms; (3) the development of the Impact Observatory; and (4) the Inter-American SIMORE.

74. In addition, reference is made to strategic line (5) and to the analysis of compliance with the recommendations made in the country reports. Readers are invited to consult Chapter V of this Annual Report to learn about the particularities of each recommendation under supervision, with respect to the reports on the human rights situations in Bolivia, El Salvador, and Mexico. The fifth strategic line also includes follow-up on the recommendations made by the IACHR in its published reports on the merits. The results of these analyses, published in Chapter II.E of this Annual Report, which, in addition, makes it possible to access each of the updated data sheets for each case at the stage of supervision of recommendations.

1. Strengthening the methodology for following up on recommendations

75. In 2025, the IACHR applied the General Guidelines on the Follow-up of Recommendations and Decisions of the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (updated in November 2023) to: (i) consider the information submitted by states, civil society, victims, and others; and (ii) to determine the levels of implementation of the recommendations issued by its different mechanisms. The SSRI operationalized these criteria by preparing follow-up reports on country reports (published in Chapter V of this Annual Report) and on the merits (published in Chapter II.E), ensuring methodological consistency in evaluating and presenting results.

76. In addition, training activities were developed for public officers responsible for submitting information to the Commission to standardize report formats, enhance the relevance and quality of submitted data, and improve understanding of the criteria established in the Guidelines. In this context, training sessions were conducted in Guatemala and Colombia for teams from those respective states engaged in follow-up on recommendations, with an emphasis on incorporating a gender perspective throughout the reporting and evaluation cycle.

77. On July 9, 2025, the SSRI organized the virtual dialogue "Gains and challenges in National Mechanisms for Implementing Human Rights Recommendations in the Americas", with the participation of the President of the IACHR, the Executive Secretariat, the SSRI, the OHCHR of the United Nations, representatives of the states of Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Mexico, and Paraguay, as well as civil society (Coletivo EPU) and academia (Universidad Nacional Autónoma de México and the University of Notre Dame). The objectives of the gathering were to give impetus to exchanges and collaborations among national mechanisms, provide technical assistance to establish and strengthen them, compile inputs for updating a manual of best practices, and bolster social participation in these processes. The agenda was structured in three panels: relevance of national mechanisms (with presentations on institutional findings and civil society), good practices of states and challenges faced by the states, and proposals for strengthening them, with remarks from academia, the SSRI, civil society, and comments from the states, concluding with a definition of next steps.

78. In October 2025, at the invitation of the School for Advanced Studies of the Office of the Federal Prosecutor General (ESMPU: Escola Superior do Ministério Público da União), the IACHR participated in the international seminar "The challenges faced by the Brazilian State in monitoring and implementing international human rights obligations – Universal and Inter-American Systems," held in hybrid mode at the ESMPU (Brasília), October 14 to 17. In this context, the SSRI conducted a workshop on preparing reports for the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights, geared to officials in the justice system and other institutions to standardize reports they send to the IACHR, align their preparation with the General Guidelines on Follow-Up, and promote the use of the Inter-American SIMORE. In addition, the Executive Secretariat of the IACHR spoke on the event's opening panel. This cooperation strengthened national capabilities for monitoring and implementing international obligations and for coordinating with national follow-up mechanisms.

79. At the same time, in 2025, the IACHR further strengthened and implemented internal guidelines to improve the processes for formulating recommendations, especially in thematic and country reports. These guidelines seek to bolster the orientation the IACHR provides to states on how to address previously identified human rights needs and issues, and to strengthen the quality of the Commission's follow-up evaluations.

80. As a novelty in 2025, the SSRI worked more closely with the monitoring areas of the Commission to make changes to the drafting and structure of the recommendations before they are issued, seeking greater clarity, specificity, and measurability. This facilitates their subsequent implementation by the states and improves the traceability of results in the follow-up stage.

2. Continuity of the special follow-up mechanisms for Colombia, Chile, and Bolivia

81. In the context of the 2023-2027 Strategic Plan, the IACHR consolidated special follow-up mechanisms to give impetus to the implementation of its recommendations. It was an innovative practice in the context of international human rights law; these were conceived of as technical tools to offer follow-up complementary to and focused on recommendations associated with prioritized situations.

82. These mechanisms mobilize an intensive effort based on a set of recommendations, with two key purposes: to promote their implementation and to identify their levels of compliance. At the same time, they allow for a comprehensive analysis of the IACHR's decisions and recommendations, combining public exposure of the case or situation with periodic, systematic monitoring. This contributes to more in-depth and directed follow-up, in keeping with the General Guidelines on Follow-up.

83. These mechanisms are installed once the recommendations are issued through the various means available to the Commission, most commonly in the country reports. Among the methodologies used, special note should be made of the targeting and prioritization of measures, and the adoption of a specific timetable for their implementation and evaluation.

84. In 2025, the IACHR continued developing work plans for the follow-up mechanisms established with respect to Colombia, for the recommendations made in the wake of the country visit of June 2021; Chile, regarding the recommendations in the country report published in 2022, in the wake of the working visit on occasion of the social protests in late 2019 and early 2020; and Bolivia, for the recommendations issued in the final report of the Interdisciplinary Group of Independent Experts (GIEI-Bolivia).

a. Follow-up Mechanism for the Implementation of Recommendations made by GIEI Bolivia (MESEG)

85. MESEG monitors the recommendations made in the 2021 Final Report by the GIEI-Bolivia. The first work plan between the Plurinational State of Bolivia and the IACHR was implemented from March 2022 through March 2025. Subsequently, in July of the same year, the second work plan was launched, which will conclude in December 2025.

86. In the context of the MESEG, four technical visits were made to the Plurinational State of Bolivia from February to June 2025. During each of these visits, conversations were held with representatives of victims and their organizations to learn about progress in implementing the recommendations and to debate the contents of a reparations plan, in line with relevant international standards and mindful of comparative experience. These dialogues were held in various cities of Bolivia, including La Paz, El Alto, Santa Cruz, Potosí, and Cochabamba, with the participation of 70 persons. In addition, during three of the four visits, dialogues were organized with civil society organizations to coordinate follow-up on compliance with the recommendations.

87. In addition, during the technical visits, trainings were conducted with public servants of the judiciary, the Office of the Attorney General (Ministerio Público), the Office of the Human Rights Ombudsperson, and the National Mechanism for Prevention of Torture in La Paz, Santa Cruz, Potosí, and Cochabamba, on standards for investigating and making integral reparation for serious human rights violations, as well as standards for victim participation in judicial proceedings.

b. Joint Follow-up Mechanism for Colombia

88. This joint mechanism provides close follow-up on the recommendations made by the IACHR after its working visit in June 2021, in the context of the protests that began on April 28, 2021. It was installed on June 9, 2023, with a Work Plan that prioritized 33 recommendations, including those on protection for social protest and freedom of expression, as well as ethnic-racial matters. According to its work plan, the mechanism concluded its functions at the end of 2024, although follow-up on its recommendations continues.

89. Throughout 2025, the IACHR made progress in preparing a second report for this mechanism. It has been written by integrating information from the State provided in seven technical dialogues held in November and December 2023; responses to questionnaires sent out by the Commission; inputs from the public hearing "Follow-up on the recommendations on investigating human rights violations during the national strike" (July 8, 2024); the hearing "Situation of persons detained in the context of the 2021 National Strike" (March 6, 2025); as well as contributions from the Office of the Human Rights Ombudsperson, the Office of the Mayor of Bogotá, victims, and more than 20 civil society organizations. The document is in the final phase of production, in keeping with the relevant parts of the Rules of Procedure.

90. As part of the methodology, the SSRI conducted rounds of thematic dialogues with organizations (social protest; transformation of the institutional culture of the Security and Police Forces; investigation, accountability and reparation; transfer for protection and disappearance of persons; discrimination in protests; reparation for victims of ocular trauma; and protection for journalists, freedom of expression, and access to the Internet) and consolidated additional inputs in bilateral meetings. In addition, findings were incorporated from a specialized consultancy by Justice Rapid Response on guidelines for psychosocial reparation for victims of ocular trauma, which will be forwarded to the State to give impetus to reparation measures.

91. The Commission approved the second follow-up report on October 1, 2025. Based on the information outlined in that report, the IACHR found that a process of dialogue was fostered in Colombia in 2023 and 2024 to regulate the right to social protest and public demonstrations, and to limit the use of force in such scenarios. With respect to the levels of compliance with the recommendations, the IACHR found that of the total of 33 recommendations subject to follow-up, five are pending compliance (15%); 18 have met with partial compliance (55%), eight have met with partial substantial compliance (24%); and two have been fully implemented (6%).

92. The 2025 process documents relevant measures, among others, Directive No. 001 of 2024 of the Office of the Attorney General to recognize, guarantee, and protect the right to protest; the creation of a Permanent Inter-institutional Roundtable for investigating police abuse; the Regulation on the differentiated and proportional use of force (Decree 1231 of 2024); inter-institutional protocols to verify arrests; and actions from the Proceso de Transformación Policial +Humana (Process of More Human Police Transformation), along with persistent challenges: sluggishness of criminal and disciplinary investigations, lack of integral reparation (especially for victims of ocular lesions and sexual violence), risks of criminalization, ethnic-racial and gender gaps, and reports of the disproportionate use of force at recent events. The IACHR underscores the need to strengthen inter-institutional and territorial articulation, consolidate regulatory changes, and ensure the effective participation of victims and civil society in all stages of follow-up.

c. Joint Follow-up Mechanism on Recommendations for Chile (MESECH)

93. The MESECH accompanies the implementation of the recommendations in the 2022 report "Situation of Human Rights in Chile," using specialized methodologies for follow-up, technical assistance to the State, and coordination with autonomous institutions, victims, and civil society. Their work plan, designed to last three years (2023–2025), prioritizes three areas: (i) structural, institutional, and regulatory reforms; (ii) the duty to investigate; and (iii) the duty to make reparation.

94. In 2025, the IACHR produced the first follow-up report of the MESECH, which received inputs with official information from the State, contributions from the National Institute for Human Rights (INDH), the Office of the Ombudsperson for Children, and civil society organizations, in addition to inputs collected on visits and through formal requests. The report applies the General Guidelines on Follow-up to assess each recommendation, update its level of compliance, and provide guidance for additional measures; it also includes a contextual chapter on economic, social, cultural, and environmental rights (without grading compliance, as these rights are not prioritized).

95. The report also describes progress and recurrent challenges: updating regulations and police protocols, training mechanisms and spaces for dialogue, along with gaps in registering cases, practical application of standards on protest and use of force, and lags in investigations and integral reparation (including psychosocial reparation for victims of ocular trauma. It drew support from a technical annex provided by Justice Rapid Response).

96. Methodologically, the document systematizes findings by each recommendation, prioritizes them, and presents, at the end, a table detailing individual compliance and the overall level reflected in the report. Of the 47 prioritized recommendations, the IACHR determined that two meet full compliance (4.26%); three, partial substantial compliance (6.38%); 33, partial compliance (70.21%); and nine, still pending compliance (19.15%). The matrix at the end details the level of compliance for each recommendation within the three prioritized lines.

3. Inter-American System for Monitoring Recommendations (Inter-American SIMORE)

97. Beginning on June 10, 2020, the IACHR made the Inter-American SIMORE available to the public. It is an online platform that systematizes the recommendations issued through the Commission's various mechanisms. This system works as a privileged channel for receiving or exchanging information on follow-up of recommendations. Its objectives are to strengthen the transparency of the IACHR's follow-up procedures and to incentivize the participation of actors interested in supervising their implementation, promoting comprehensive dialogues on compliance that translate into concrete progress.

98. The Inter-American SIMORE achieves those objectives through two main functionalities. First, it allows anyone to search for and identify, within the set of decisions adopted by the Commission over the years, the recommendations of interest to them, based on their needs. And second, it promotes the publication of information on compliance by OAS member states, civil society organizations, autonomous organs – including the national human rights institutions, and academic institutions – with respect to the recommendations issued by the IACHR in thematic reports, country reports, chapter IV.B of the annual reports, and in resolutions.

99. In this way, the tool operates as a mechanism of accountability for compliance with international human rights obligations, favoring transparency and the democratization of follow-up processes. At the same time, the information published on compliance enables the Commission to strengthen supervision of the measures adopted by the states and to identify progress and challenges in guaranteeing and protecting human rights in the region.

100. The preparation and start-up of the Inter-American SIMORE unfolded in several phases: design and tool preparation, data systematization, system development, launch and dissemination, and user training. The process included participation from the SSRI, the Technology and Systems Section (STS), and the OAS Department of Information and Technology Services (DOITS). In addition, its implementation drew on cooperation between the IACHR and the State of Paraguay, formalized through a 2017 Memorandum of Understanding; that support enabled the Commission to use the source code for the SIMORE Plus system in Paraguay and to receive technical advisory services from authorities experienced in its use.

101. As of 2025, the SIMORE has a total of 7,746 recommendations uploaded and available in the platform. Each recommendation was labelled by year of issue, mechanism/sub-mechanism, population involved, issue or right, geographic scope/country, measure recommended, and level of compliance, thereby strengthening traceability and comparative analysis. As regards promotion and dissemination, a training session was held with officials of the Office of the Attorney General (Ministério Público Federal) of Brazil.

102. Also as of 2025, the platform has 260 active users in the system who publish information on follow-up to recommendations; of these, 46 are from states (Bolivia, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Ecuador, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, Mexico, Paraguay, Peru, St. Lucia, and Suriname), 93 are from civil society organizations, and 32 are from autonomous institutions.[6] The Commission welcomes the submission by the Plurinational State of Bolivia of all information on compliance with the recommendation in the report "Social Cohesion: The Challenge to Consolidate Democracy in Bolivia," totaling 235 data sheets for follow-up.

103. The Commission has made sustained efforts to have the Inter-American SIMORE consolidate as a key mechanism for follow-up on recommendations. In particular, the IACHR seeks to position itself as the central repository of valuable information for identifying and evaluating the progress and challenges in implementing its decisions by the states of the region. Along these lines, since 2023, the Commission has encouraged the states, through follow-up reports in chapter V of the Annual Report, to present information on compliance with recommendations through the Inter-American SIMORE platform.

104. The launch of the Inter-American SIMORE provides a high-value tool for promoting effective compliance with the Commission's recommendations. The IACHR plans to continue its efforts to consolidate its operations as a relevant system for monitoring compliance with international human rights obligations in the region.

4. Impact Observatory of the IACHR

105. By Resolution No. 2/19 of September 22, 2019, the IACHR created the Impact Observatory. The objective of this initiative is to give impetus to forums for analyzing, systematizing, providing visibility to, and evaluating the impact of the Commission's defense and protection of human rights in the region. The Observatory fosters synergies with similar initiatives and promotes dialogue with universities, research centers, academic networks, and other communities interested in the inter-American human rights system. In 2024, the Impact Observatory was focused on ensuring the continuity of its strategic line of work.

106. In 2025, the second edition of the Commission's "Compendium of Progress and Measures of Compliance with Recommendations and Other Decisions", approved in November 2024, was published and disseminated. The document highlights the main gains and measures adopted by the member states of the OAS in 2023, or identified that year, to comply with the recommendations and decisions issued by the IACHR. With this publication, the Commission seeks to promote and implement its decisions and to facilitate the adequate dissemination of these measures, highlighting the efforts and actions of the states that may serve as examples or good practices for the region in following up on recommendations.

107. Accordingly, this Compendium fits within the 2023-2027 Strategic Plan, in particular Strategic Objective 1.3 (promote compliance with the recommendations and standards of the inter-American human rights system), and is aligned with Program 8 (strengthening follow-up of recommendations and of the Inter-American SIMORE) and Program 9 (promoting compliance with decisions, recommendations and standards of the IACHR outlined in its different mechanisms and reports).

108. In preparing the Compendium, the IACHR adopted a methodology for selecting gains and measures, evaluating those that have the potential to have a structural impact on the human rights situation of the state in question, or that have represented substantial or full compliance with a recommendation or decision. In addition, as a new feature, this edition incorporates sections on thematic reports and on the Inter-American SIMORE, with an analysis of good practices in their implementation and follow-up.

109. In addition, in June 2025, the IACHR published two episodes of its podcast dedicated to Bolivia, aimed at sharing the work done in the country since the onset of the 2019 political and social crisis. In the first episode, representatives of victims and civil society organizations recounted what happened during the 2019

[6] The account numbers may not agree with those reports in previous years since some requests for accounts were revoked and in other cases activation was sought but not completed since some piece of information was missing.

crisis, explained how the Interdisciplinary Group of Independent Experts (GIEI) was constituted, and described the IACHR's role in that context. The second episode addressed the work of the Follow-up Mechanism for the Implementation of Recommendations made by GIEI Bolivia (MESEG-Bolivia), established to oversee the implementation of the 36 recommendations issued by the GIEI. In this chapter, victims, family members, and representatives of their organizations analyzed the impact of the GIEI and the IACHR on the process of seeking truth, justice, and reparation.

110. In August 2025, audiovisual material was disseminated entitled "El rol de la CIDH a través de la MESEG-Bolivia" (The role of the IACHR through the MESEG-Bolivia). This video summarizes the IACHR's work in Bolivia from the establishment of the GIEI-Bolivia to the subsequent establishment of the MESEG-Bolivia. In the video, victims share their testimonies about the challenges they faced and the gains they achieved during the IACHR's accompaniment. At the same time, authorities and members of the Commission's technical team explain the work done throughout this process.

111. The Impact Observatory has been consolidating as a living space for analysis and dissemination, contributing to ongoing improvements in institutional mechanisms for implementing recommendations and for designing advocacy strategies, public policies, and legal and regulatory frameworks. Each year, the IACHR promotes new ways to investigate and communicate the effects of its recommendations in the region, fostering the exchange of good practices and the transparent identification of challenges to strengthen human rights protections and guarantees.

5. Analysis of compliance with the recommendations made in country and thematic reports

112. Regarding the follow-up of recommendations in monitoring reports, in 2025, the IACHR continued its strategy for its follow-up in both country and thematic reports. In doing so, the Commission seeks to evaluate regional gains and challenges in implementing the recommendations, as well as to cast light on areas of improvement and challenges in complying with these decisions.

- Reports following up on recommendations in country reports with respect to Bolivia and El Salvador included in Chapter V of this annual report

113. Pursuant to Article 59(9) of its Rules of Procedure, the Commission, in Chapter V of its Annual Report, publishes documents on follow-up that set out gains and challenges in the effective observance of human rights. In 2025, the IACHR published the follow-up reports on Bolivia and El Salvador which have been incorporated in this chapter.

114. In all, these reports evaluated 110 recommendations: 32 for Bolivia and 23 for El Salvador. The matters addressed include, among others, social cohesion; economic, social, cultural, and environmental rights; citizen security and the use of force; due process and access to justice; conditions of detention; freedom of expression and access to information; torture and extrajudicial executions; as well as groups in special situations of vulnerability (women, children and adolescents, indigenous peoples, LGBTI persons, migrants, and persons deprived of liberty).

115. In terms of levels of compliance, the results, by country, were as follows:

- Bolivia: of 32 recommendations, one has met with full compliance (3.13%); no recommendations were found to have met with partial substantial compliance; 13 had partial compliance (40.62%); and 18 are still pending (56.25%).
- El Salvador: of 23 recommendations, none has met with full compliance or partial substantial compliance; 1 meets with partial compliance (4%); 18 are still pending (78%); and four were considered to have failed to be implemented (17%).

- Progress in 2025 in implementing recommendations included in Chapter V follow-up reports with respect to Bolivia and El Salvador

116. In line with the SSRI practice of showing the evolution of compliance with the recommendations in country reports in Chapter V, a table is included with figures for the period covered to provide a general overview of progress.

Categories/percentage compliance	Bolivia	El Salvador
Full compliance	3.13%	0%
Partial substantial compliance	0%	0%
Partial compliance	40.62%	4%
Pending compliance	56.25%	78%
Failed to comply	0%	17%

- Second follow-up report on recommendations in the Report on the situation of human rights defenders and social leaders in Colombia, published in 2019

117. In 2025, the IACHR began preparing the second follow-up report on recommendations stemming from the "Report on the situation of human rights defenders and social leaders in Colombia," published in 2019. This process draws on inputs from several activities carried out by the IACHR in recent years to follow up on compliance with the recommendations in the report. Once concluded, it will be possible to identify the measures of compliance adopted by the State with respect to the recommendations noted in the thematic report and to highlight the most prominent challenges to their implementation.

CHAPTER II

THE SYSTEM OF PETITIONS AND CASES, FRIENDLY SETTLEMENTS, AND PRECAUTIONARY MEASURES

A. Introduction

1. This chapter reflects the work carried out by the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights ("the Commission", "Inter-American Commission", or "IACHR") during 2025 in relation to its system of petitions, cases, friendly settlements, and precautionary measures, as well its work before the Inter-American Court of Human Rights ("Inter-American Court" or "IACHR"). It is structured into the sections described below.

2. First, Section B addresses the most significant results achieved during 2025. It presents the work carried out on the initial review of petitions, the admissibility and merits stages, and the archiving of petitions and cases. It also contains a summary of the most notable decisions adopted by the Commission, both in its admissibility and merits reports, and mentions the final reports published in compliance with Article 51 of the American Convention on Human Rights ("ACHR" or "American Convention"). It also details the hearings and working meetings held by the Commission, as well as active transparency and information measures undertaken with the States. Finally, it highlights the work related to the referral of cases to the Inter-American Court.

3. Second, Section C discusses the IACHR's work in its friendly settlement mechanism. This section includes an analysis of the status of compliance with the recommendations in approved friendly settlement reports.

4. Third, Section D discusses the interventions made by the Commission before the Inter-American Court. It highlights the cases sent to this court, as well as the written observations submitted in cases pending and in supervision of compliance with judgments. Subsequently, it lists the appearances and participation in public and private hearings.

5. Fourth, Section E deals with the status of compliance with the recommendations issued by the IACHR in its merits' reports, published on the basis of Article 47 of its Rules of Procedure and Article 51 of the American Convention on Human Rights.

6. Fifth, Section F summarizes the Commission's activities in its precautionary measures mechanism, as well as its mandate to follow up on provisional measures requested to the Inter-American Court of Human Rights.

7. Finally, Section G presents the most representative annual statistics on the work carried out during the year.

B. Petitions and Cases

8. The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights is the only international body in the region with the capacity to receive and process individual complaints. Its recommendations, through its coordination with the Inter-American Court, result in decisions that are binding on States. Beyond individual justice, these decisions have a transformative impact. Through the system of petitions and cases, the Commission has facilitated access to justice for victims of the most serious human rights violations, such as forced disappearance, torture, and extrajudicial executions. It has also declared the incompatibility of impunity figures, such as amnesty laws and statutes of limitations in the region. In addition, it has established limitations on military criminal jurisdiction for human rights violations, while also encouraging the creation of public policies and protection mechanisms for vulnerable and historically discriminated groups. This has made it possible to address both immediate and structural issues in the region and achieve the progressive development of the Inter-American public order. Thus, the petition and case system not only benefits victims in specific matters but also has the capacity to change situations that affect human rights and generate transformative impacts through the recommendations of the IACHR, the friendly settlement agreements approved by it, or, eventually, the judgments handed down by the Inter-American Court.

9. Under the terms of Articles 23 to 48 of its Rules of Procedure, proceedings before the Commission are structured by the following procedural stages: initial study or review, admissibility and merits. Under Article 40 of the Rules of Procedure, at any time during the examination of a petition or case, the parties may reach a friendly settlement based on respect for human rights. Likewise, after issuing the merits report, the Commission may decide to publish it in accordance with Article 47 of the Rules of Procedure and Article 51 of the ACHR, or to send the case to the IACHR Court for the States under its jurisdiction, in accordance with Article 51 of that treaty. Finally, during the processing of a petition or case, the Commission may decide to archive it, as provided in Article 42 of its Rules of Procedure.

10. The main results are presented below, followed by a more detailed description of the work carried out in the different procedural stages: initial review, admissibility, and merits. Information on the decisions to archive cases taken during this period is also included.

1. Initial study or review

11. The Commission evaluates petitions received in accordance with Articles 26 through 34 of its Rules of Procedure. Pursuant to Article 26, the initial review of petitions is conducted by the Executive Secretariat of the IACHR, which is responsible for examination and initial processing of petitions.

12. In the initial review stage, using a prima facie standard, the Commission verifies that the petition meets the same admissibility and jurisdiction requirements that are examined in the admissibility report (Article 27 of the Commission's Rules of Procedure). The difference is that this first review is conducted exclusively with the information provided by the petitioner, because the State has not yet intervened at this stage, since the petition has not yet been opened for processing. This initial review is preliminary to the one carried out in the subsequent admissibility phase. In turn, if deemed necessary, Article 26.2 of the IACHR Rules of Procedure empowers the Executive Secretariat to request additional information from the petitioner in order to complete a specific aspect of the petition before making a decision at this initial stage.

13. If the Commission decides not to open proceedings on a matter, its Resolution 1/19 regulates the possibility for petitioners to request that the Executive Secretariat re-examine their petition, provided that they do so in accordance with the terms established in that resolution. In this context, priority is given to the initial review of new petitions, with these requests for reconsideration being addressed chronologically on a periodic basis, depending on the allocation of available resources.

14. In 2025, the IACHR received a total of 3,357 petitions (a record figure in the history of the IACHR, surpassing the 3,034 petitions received in 2019). Of these 3,357 petitions, at the end of the year, 2,771 petitions (82,5%) had been evaluated, with 533 decisions to open proceedings (19,23%); 2,040 rejections (73,6%); and 198 requests for additional information (7,14%). Through this rigorous analysis, the Commission safeguards, through its initial review decisions, the subsidiary and complementary nature of the Inter-American Human Rights System, both from a procedural perspective (when domestic remedies have not been exhausted or the granting of an exception does not apply) and a substantive perspective (when the facts in question clearly do not constitute a violation of the rights recognized in the instruments under its jurisdiction).

15. With regard to the regular flow of new petitions, the Commission has managed to maintain a pace of work that generally allows for their evaluation within one year of receipt, thus avoiding the accumulation of delays in this first phase of the procedure. This progress is significant considering that in 2015, the IACHR had more than 9,000 petitions pending initial review. This progress is largely attributable to the creation of a specialized section that has consolidated a methodology that allows for a more agile examination of cases and also works on petitions that enter the admissibility stage, ensuring legal consistency in the analysis. This technical area also conducts periodic reviews of portfolios from previous years to ensure that no complaints are left behind and to prevent the accumulation of cases that have not been reviewed. Following up on the implementation of the Commission's current prioritization policy, work began on identifying, in all petitions with a decision to open proceedings, the prioritization criteria established in Resolution 4/23 on the Policy for Prioritizing Petitions and Cases.

16. In turn, once the backlog in the initial evaluation of petitions had been cleared, the IACHR continued to implement measures to ensure orderly and progressive notification to States, as well as to steadily reduce the delays associated with this process.

17. Thus, at the end of 2025, the IACHR had only 198 petitions with a decision to proceed—pending notification—corresponding to 18 member states of the Organization, representing a reduction of 88% compared to the 1,698 reported in 2021. This progress has been achieved even though the number of new petitions filed has continued to rise and the percentage of decisions to open proceedings has remained consistently around 15% of those evaluated annually.

18. This unprecedented achievement was made possible by the notification of 605 decisions to open proceedings, in accordance with Article 30 of the Commission's Regulation, as well as the definitive archive of 48 petitions in accordance with Article 42 of the same instrument. Additional information on decisions to archive at this procedural stage will be found under the heading in this chapter devoted to the matter.

19. In terms of optimization and efficiency, the results achieved during 2025 reflect a substantial improvement in the methodologies applied for the notification of the initiation of proceedings. In fact, 257 petitions filed that same year were notified within the period itself (42,4%), significantly exceeding the 26% recorded in 2024 and demonstrating a strengthened institutional capacity to quickly manage incoming petitions. This progress was accompanied by the implementation of e-books for notifications, an innovation that introduced a more organized and systematic process and was widely recognized by several States. Likewise, the application of the chronological criterion as a general rule for notification, complemented by the prioritization criteria provided for in Article 29.2 of the Rules of Procedure—identified in 13,7% (83) of the requests notified—made it possible to balance operational efficiency with differentiated attention to situations requiring priority treatment. These advances consolidate a more effective and transparent management model geared toward the timely processing of petitions in which a decision for processing was adopted.

20. Experience shows that the submission of digitized, complete, and properly structured petitions, that establish an effective means of communication that allows for a prompt response to the requirements made by the Executive Secretariat, not only facilitates their initial review but also significantly speeds up their processing and eventual notification of commencement of processing. Likewise, it was found that when petitions are submitted without documentary omissions and with clear details on aspects such as the confidentiality of the parties or the language of the accompanying documents, it is possible to avoid the need to request prior clarifications, as well as the issuance of warnings concerning the archive of the petition, which represented 29% (176) during the year.

2. Admissibility and merits

21. During 2025, in accordance with Articles 30 to 36 of the Rules of Procedure and Articles 44 to 48 of the American Convention, the Commission approved a total of 170 reports on the admissibility of petitions. Of this total, 96 decisions (56%) concerned admissibility as such, while the remaining 74 were determinations of inadmissibility. It is important to note that, of these 170 reports, 27 referred to petitions identified as urgent under the prioritization policy.

22. In addition, 47 admissibility decisions were adopted in cases in which the analysis of admissibility had been deferred to the merits stage. These decisions remain confidential in accordance with Article 50 of the American Convention.

23. In 2025, the IACHR continued to expand Resolution 1/16 on Measures to reduce procedural backlog of Petitions and Cases, adopted on October 18, 2016. In accordance with Article 36.3 of its Rules of Procedure, the Commission notified the deferral of the admissibility analysis to the merits stage in 95 petitions, in which compliance with one or more of the six conditions set forth in that resolution was verified. The failure to submit the State's initial response at the admissibility stage continues to be the predominant criterion for application, present in 88.5% (85) of these notifications.

24. Furthermore, in accordance with the provisions of Article 37 of the Rules of Procedure, Article 20 of the Statute, and Article 50 of the American Convention, the Commission approved a total of 132 reports in which it ruled on the merits of the case. These reports examined the international responsibility of States in light of the international treaties under their jurisdiction and, where appropriate, issued recommendations for full reparation for the violations that had occurred. These reports are confidential, in accordance with Article 44 of the Rules of Procedure and Article 50 of the American Convention on Human Rights.

b. Notable Decisions

- Admissibility

26. Below are, by way of example, summaries of some cases that have been declared admissible and are currently in the merits stage, based on the seriousness of the alleged facts, because they involve novel issues that have not been extensively addressed in the jurisprudence of the Inter-American System, or because of their relevance in the specific context of the State to which they refer[1].

- P-311-15, Colombia, Report No. 80/25, Residents and merchants of the "La Plaza" sector[2]

27. The petition addresses Colombia's alleged failure to regulate mining activities in the municipality of Marmato, particularly at the "La Granadina" mine, whose operation, according to the petitioners, caused cracking, subsidence, and progressive deterioration of homes and commercial premises in the "La Plaza" sector, affecting more than thirty families. The petitioners argued that the expansion of underground tunnels, the use of explosives, and the absence of technical safety measures caused land subsidence that compromised the personal safety, private property, and economic livelihood of the residents. They added that, despite technical warnings issued since 1999 and contradictory court decisions in the class action lawsuit, the authorities continued to allow mining activity without adopting effective controls, leaving the community unprotected against structural risk and without adequate redress after the definitive closure of the domestic proceedings.

28. The IACHR affirmed that the class action brought by the alleged victims constituted a valid and appropriate means of raising the States responsibility, and determined that, despite the subsequent appeals rejected by the Council of State, domestic jurisdiction had been duly exhausted. With regard to the characterization, the Commission held that there was sufficient evidence to conclude that the alleged facts, relating to the absence of State control over a risky mining activity and its impact on the community, were not manifestly unfounded and warranted a substantive analysis. Finally, it concluded that, if corroborated, the State's omissions could constitute violations of Articles 5, 8, 21, 25, and 26 of the American Convention, in relation to Article 1.1.

- P-1586-18, Argentina, Report No. 85/25, Luis Alberto Bianco and H[3]

29. The petition concerns the alleged ineffectiveness of decisions adopted in a family proceeding to prevent the obstruction of contact suffered by the petitioner, as his ex-wife allegedly has not allowed him to see his son for eight years. The petitioner separated from his former partner in early 2018, and since then he has not been able to see his son, who at that time was a baby. He indicated that on August 21, 2018, Family Court No. 2 of La Plata issued an interlocutory decision ordering a provisional communication and visitation regime in his favor; however, that order has not been complied with due to the ineffectiveness of the Judiciary. The State replied that the petition was inadmissible for failure to exhaust domestic remedies and because the grounds that gave rise to it no longer subsist, since on November 25, 2019, the Second Chamber of Civil and Commercial Appeals confirmed the first-instance decision ordering the visitation regime and the undertaking of mandatory psychotherapy for both parents.

30. The Commission determined that Mr. Bianco undertook various actions within the family proceedings to secure compliance with the judgment in his favor; nevertheless, his former partner refused to appear before the court and to comply with the judicial orders. Accordingly, the Commission declared applicable the exception to the exhaustion of domestic remedies due to the absence of due process of law for the protection of his rights, in accordance with Article 46.2(a) of the American Convention. Thus, the Commission admitted for merits analysis Articles 5 (right to personal integrity), 8 (judicial guarantees), 17 (protection of the family), 19 (rights of the child), and 25 (judicial protection) of the American Convention. Likewise, the IACHR recalled the State's obligations regarding the restoration of the parent–child relationship in contexts of family separation and the duty to ensure the effectiveness of judicial decisions.

- P-1559-21, El Salvador, Report No. 157/25, Carlos Ernesto Sánchez Escobar and Carlos Sergio Avilés Velásquez

31. The petition analyzes the dismissal, on May 1, 2021, of Justices Carlos Ernesto Sánchez Escobar and Carlos Sergio Avilés Velásquez of the Constitutional Chamber of El Salvador by the Legislative Assembly, in a proceeding that was allegedly immediate, without previously established legal cause, without prior notification, and without opportunity for defense. The petitioners stated that this removal, adopted in a context of concentration of power and confrontation with the judiciary, was punitive in nature, violated the principle of legality, affected judicial independence, and left the alleged victims without guarantees in the face of pressure, risks, and lack of impartiality in domestic remedies. They also argued that the action for the protection of constitutional rights was not appropriate, as it would have been decided by the same judges appointed to replace the victims.

32. The IACHR considered that the available evidence showed that the Constitutional Chamber had already validated the removal and appointment of the replacement judges, which it identified as an indication of a possible lack of objectivity and impartiality in resolving the appeal filed by the alleged victims. It also determined that the action for the protection of constitutional rights did not offer an effective or secure means of reversing the dismissal, as it would be heard precisely by the judges appointed after the contested removal. Consequently, the Commission held that the exception provided for in Article 46.2.a of the American Convention on Human Rights was applicable and that the petition had been filed within a reasonable time. Finally, it considered that the alleged facts were not manifestly groundless and could characterize possible violations of Articles 8, 9, 23, 25, and 26 of the American Convention, in relation to Articles 1.1 and 2, and therefore it was appropriate to proceed to the analysis of the merits.

- P-1642-21, El Salvador, Report No. 185/25, Ana Alicia Sánchez Humaña and other judicial officials

33. The petition refers to the consequences of Legislative Decree No. 144, approved on August 31, 2021, by which the Legislative Assembly amended the Judicial Career Law and imposed the mandatory retirement of judges upon reaching 60 years of age or 30 years of service, as well as the creation of a system of availability that enabled transfers and relocations. The petitioner argued that these measures, adopted without a prior procedure, without individual justification, and in a context of pressure from the executive branch, led to mass dismissals, forced resignations, and arbitrary transfers of judicial officials, affecting judicial independence and violating due process, the principle of legality, equality before the law, and the right to work, both through collective removal and the imposition of forced retirement based on age.

34. The Commission considered that the alleged victims were in a situation where the available domestic remedies, particularly actions for the protection of constitutional rights and the unconstitutionality action, did not offer minimum guarantees of impartiality or a real possibility of obtaining judicial protection, since the Constitutional Chamber had previously validated the contested decree itself and was composed of judges appointed in a contested process. Based on existing precedent, it identified that any attempt to challenge the regulation or its effects would have been a formality without real effectiveness. It also argued that the context of previous dismissals, institutional pressure, and the absence of objective avenues for review placed the alleged victims in a situation of defenselessness, concluding that the exception in Article 46(2)(a) of the ACHR was applicable and that the petition had been filed within a reasonable time frame. Finally, it found that the alleged facts were not manifestly groundless and could characterize possible violations of Articles 8, 9, 23, 25, and 26 of the Convention, in relation to Articles 1.1 and 2, thus justifying a review on the merits.

- Petition 2342-17, Colombia, Report No. 210/25, Gerardo María Arellano Becerra and relatives[4]

35. In this report, the Inter-American Commission deemed admissible for consideration on the merits Articles 4 (right to life), 5 (right to personal integrity), 8 (judicial guarantees), and 25 (judicial protection) of the American Convention on Human Rights due to possible state collusion and impunity in the investigation of the attack perpetrated against an airplane on November 27, 1989, in which Mr. Gerardo María Arellano Becerra died.

36. The IACHR determined that there had been an unjustified delay in the resolution of the criminal proceedings, given the long periods of inactivity in the investigation. Furthermore, in analyzing whether the facts constituted possible human rights violations, the Commission recalled the state's obligations to prevent, investigate, and punish terrorist acts, and noted that there were elements in the case that could involve the direct or indirect participation of state agents in the terrorist attack against the Avianca flight. It also noted that the petitioner questioned certain decisions made during the criminal proceedings that could constitute obstacles or impediments to the punishment of those responsible.

- P-1009-15, Mexico, Report No. 291/25, Domingo Gutiérrez Mendívil[5]

37. The petition concerns the authorization and operation of a hazardous waste landfill by the company Cytrar S.A. on the property known as "Las Víboras," located south of Hermosillo, Sonora. Mr. Domingo Gutiérrez Mendívil, as petitioner, argued that this authorization created environmental and public health risks for the inhabitants of the area, and that the State did not provide him with adequate and effective administrative or judicial resources to challenge the legality of the land use, obtain a technical assessment of the risks, or guarantee the judicial protection of the rights involved.

38. According to the information provided, on July 5, 1994, the Hermosillo City Council authorized the land use that allowed for the installation of the Cytrar landfill. In response, the petitioner and other residents filed various complaints with the National Human Rights Commission (CNDH) and the Sonora State Human Rights Commission (CEDH). The latter gave rise to recommendations 01/99 and 03/2001, which concluded that the municipal authority had acted without jurisdiction and recommended that the authorization be revoked, recommendations that were not complied with. At the same time, the petitioner filed administrative and judicial appeals, including a direct and an indirect actions for the protection of constitutional rights, the latter of which was processed for almost fourteen years and concluded on February 10, 2015, with the dismissal confirmed by the review court on the basis of lack of legal interest, the untimeliness of the claim, and the collective nature of the risks reported.

39. The Commission considered that the absence of a substantive ruling on the environmental effects of the landfill in the various administrative and judicial instances, as well as the duration of the indirect action for the protection of constitutional rights, could give rise to violations of Articles 8, 25, and 26 of the American Convention, in relation to Article 1.1. In the merits stage, the IACHR will have the opportunity to analyze the adequacy and effectiveness of the judicial remedies available to address complex environmental risks, as well as the State's obligation to guarantee access to environmental justice in the face of activities that could affect the right to a healthy environment of the inhabitants of Hermosillo.

- Petition 1508-17, Colombia, Report 292/25, Remedios and daughter[6]

40. This case concerns the alleged failure to provide comprehensive care to a teenage victim of human trafficking for sexual exploitation and the possible repetition of these acts. The Commission admitted for consideration on the merits Articles 5 (right to personal integrity), 6 (prohibition of slavery and servitude), 7 (right to personal liberty), 8 (judicial guarantees), 11 (protection of honor and dignity), 19 (rights of the child), 20 (right to nationality), 22 (right to freedom of movement and residence), 24 (equality before the law), 25 (judicial protection), and 26 (economic, social, and cultural rights) of the American Convention; and Article 7 of the Convention of Belém do Pará, to the detriment of Remedios and her daughter.

41. The petitioner reported that Remedios was a Venezuelan teenager with a Colombian father. She was thirteen years old when he took her to Colombia in early 2016, where he sexually exploited her and "sold her in bars." As a result, she became pregnant, and in March 2016, her case came to the attention of the Colombian authorities when she was found in a hospital. She also reported that the authorities acted contrary to the protocols for assisting victims of human trafficking, took steps to prevent Remedios from having an abortion, and deported her to Venezuela, from where she was again transferred to Colombia and lived with her father until the Colombian Family Welfare Institute (ICBF) ordered, as a protective measure in her favor and that of her newborn daughter, her placement in an educational facility for pregnant and nursing adolescents. Currently, however, the petitioner organization reports that her whereabouts are unknown and there are indications that she may once again be a victim of human trafficking.

42. The Commission held that domestic remedies had been exhausted through a writ of protection filed on behalf of Remedios, in which the Constitutional Court failed to rule on the measures to be taken in cases of human trafficking. It also considered applicable the exception of lack of due process based on the allegations that the case was not prosecuted as human trafficking, but rather as sexual abuse of a minor under the age of fourteen. Finally, the IACHR recalled the State's obligations to care for victims of human trafficking and drew attention to the ongoing debate as to whether the actions of the entities that heard the case complied with international standards in this area and with the adoption of an intersectional approach to gender, children, and migrants.

- Merits

43. Below are some of the pronouncements and advances in Inter-American standards developed by the Commission in 2025 in its reports on the merits. These reports are confidential after they are adopted, in accordance with Article 50 of the American Convention and Article 44 of the Rules of Procedure of the IACHR. Such reports may be made public until the Commission decides to send them to the Inter-American Court for those States that have recognized its jurisdiction, or their publication in accordance with Article 51 of the American Convention and Article 47 of the Rules of Procedure of the IACHR.

- Rights of indigenous peoples; recognition of legal personality; of their authorities and forms of government; respect for and guarantee of collective property; and of their cultural rights.

44. In a case related to the rights of indigenous peoples—particularly with regard to the recognition of their forms of organization, their traditional authorities, and their ancestral territory—the Commission elaborated on the standards of self-determination, with special emphasis on the right to autonomy and self-government. In applying the corpus iuris on the rights of indigenous peoples and in light of Articles 3 and 23 of the American Convention, it argued that self-determination should be understood as "a catalyst for effective participation in the process of state-building and as a basis for the construction of a new relationship between indigenous peoples and the State." In turn, it explained that this right has a dual dimension that States must guarantee: (i) an internal dimension, which implies the recognition and maintenance of indigenous peoples' own decision-making institutions, the free election of their traditional authorities and, consequently, a State duty of non-intervention; and (ii) an external dimension, which involves the participation of indigenous and tribal peoples, through their authorities and institutions, in decision-making processes on matters that may affect their rights. Similarly, the IACHR noted that Article 3 of the ACHR, interpreted in a collective key, requires recognition of indigenous peoples as collective subjects with the capacity to use and enjoy their communal property, as well as to have equal access to judicial protection against violations of their rights.

[6] In accordance with Article 17.2.a of the Commission's Rules of Procedure, Commissioner Carlos Bernal Pulido, a Colombian national, did not participate in the discussion or decision on this matter.

- Duty to guarantee the rights of indigenous communities

45. The Commission analyzed a case related to the State's failure to fulfill its duty to guarantee the rights of an indigenous community and its members to life; personal integrity; water; health; food; cultural identity; and a healthy environment; as well as to ensure compliance with court rulings issued in favor of the community. In this case, the IACHR ruled on the material and cultural importance of the rights to food and water as a means of guaranteeing other rights of indigenous peoples, such as life, personal integrity, and health. Similarly, it specified that one of the obligations that the State must inevitably assume in its position as guarantor, with the aim of protecting and guaranteeing the right to life, is to create minimum living conditions compatible with human dignity. It also explained that structural discrimination in access to water, food, and health care has a particular and differentiated impact on pregnant and lactating women, children, and older adults, because their circumstances make them more vulnerable to malnutrition and diseases caused by exposure to pollutants.

- Indigenous communities' right to free, prior, and informed consultation in the context of climate change

46. In a case alleging the development of a project without prior consultation that could affect an indigenous community, the Commission recalled that it is up to the State to effectively demonstrate that all dimensions of the right to free, prior, and informed consultation were effectively guaranteed. It also emphasized the State's duty to monitor and supervise projects that may affect the rights of indigenous communities in order to guarantee their rights. It also emphasized that, in the face of a phenomenon such as climate change, it is particularly important for the State to take appropriate measures to protect the traditional water sources of indigenous communities, including glaciers.

- Differentiated environmental reparation for Afro-descendant communities

47. In a case involving the contamination of a river by a private company to the detriment of an Afro-descendant community, the IACHR considered that, in accordance with Articles 8 and 25 of the American Convention, States must guarantee effective judicial remedies, ensure the enforcement of decisions within a reasonable time, and adopt enhanced measures in the case of historically marginalized Afro-descendant communities. It is also understood that Article 26 recognizes the right to a healthy environment, with individual and collective dimensions, which requires the conservation of ecosystems and differentiated redress for environmental damage that compromises the subsistence of these communities. Similarly, Article 26 protects the rights to health, food, and drinking water, imposing on the State the obligation to provide adequate and culturally relevant services and to adopt a differentiated approach to disproportionate impacts resulting from polluting activities, guaranteeing comprehensive redress and future protection for affected communities.

- Health effects caused by aerial spraying of chemicals

48. The case analyzes the State's responsibility for damage caused to the health and property of individuals as a result of aerial spraying of chemicals. In this case, the IACHR emphasized that the principle of prevention of environmental damage is part of customary international law and entails the obligation of States to take the necessary ex ante measures to prevent environmental damage. It emphasized that, by virtue of this principle, States are obliged to use all means at their disposal to prevent activities carried out under their jurisdiction from causing significant damage to the environment. The Commission also reiterated the Inter-American standard that it is not necessary to demonstrate a direct causal link between acquired diseases and exposure to pollutants, and that the State bears the burden of proving that it is not responsible for the existence of high levels of pollution or that these do not constitute a significant risk to people.

- Failure to prevent forced displacement

49. In a case addressing the international responsibility of the State for failing in its duty to prevent situations of forced displacement, the IACHR reiterated that when a State is aware that persons are in a situation of real and imminent risk, it must take reasonable measures within its power to avoid that risk. The Commission added that the obligation to take appropriate measures in the face of a risk of forced displacement is of particular importance when it may affect persons in a situation of special vulnerability, such as children. It therefore emphasized the importance in such cases of adopting prevention and protection measures with a focus on children. Similarly, it emphasized that a community organized in stilt houses is placed in a particularly vulnerable situation if it is subject to displacement due to the cultural shock that moving from the water to a space on dry land can represent, highlighting the importance of specific actions by the State that take this situation into account.

- Internal displacement

50. The IACHR heard a case concerning human settlements formed as a result of internal displacement. In that case, it established that States must avoid eviction, relocation, or any other displacement of persons remaining in the settlement before they can return to their homes or are offered another place of residence that meets international standards. It also emphasized that States have a duty of enhanced due diligence with regard to the processing of appeals filed by victims of displacement, and that it is the obligation of the authorities to ensure that the measures ordered in such appeals are complied with and contribute effectively to ending the situation of rights violations.

- Comprehensive protection and reparation for women defenders in situations of displacement

51. The Commission resolved a case in the context of forced displacement that particularly affects women human rights defenders. It understood that in this context, the State's duty to guarantee the rights to judicial guarantees and protection, personal integrity, and comprehensive reparation requires a reinforced approach to due diligence, with a gender focus. This means that States must remove institutional barriers that hinder the early reporting and investigation of acts of displacement, sexual violence, threats, and other forms of harassment, avoiding practices that revictimize victims and ensuring effective investigations with a gender-based approach. It also emphasized that the duty of prevention requires the adoption of adequate and effective measures when there are known or foreseeable risks, considering the exacerbated risk faced by displaced women, including sexual violence, threats against them and their families, and the increased burden of care resulting from conflict and forced mobility. Finally, the IACHR affirmed that the right to comprehensive reparation includes ensuring the full compliance of plans and agreements previously made with victims, which requires concrete and verifiable actions that demonstrate the state's willingness to restore violated rights and ensure guarantees of non-repetition, especially through the effective implementation of orders and policies issued to protect displaced women.

- Decent working conditions in the maquila sector with a gender focus

52. The IACHR affirmed that the lack of effective measures to mitigate the occupational risks of women in poverty in work contexts, in accordance with Articles 24 and 26 of the American Convention, may constitute intersectional discrimination, in response to which the State must adopt specific measures to reverse the comparative disadvantages that women in poverty face in terms of their ability to access decent working conditions in the maquila sector. Thus, the Commission stated that this implies, among other things, that States have a reinforced duty to prevent occupational risks when situations of vulnerability such as those described are identified, and therefore must guarantee women's rights, particularly so that they are not objectified in production processes and, on the contrary, so that specific data-based policies are adopted to mitigate situations of vulnerability and react in a timely manner to prevent the materialization of risks to their rights.

- Judicial protection of defenders of the rights of transgender and intersex persons

53. The case refers to the State's failure to provide protection to a defender of the rights of transgender and intersex persons in the face of threats and attacks against them. In this context, the IACHR emphasized that the failure to diligently investigate reports of threats and harassment constitutes a violation of the State's obligation to guarantee the right to personal integrity and its duty to adopt protection and prevention measures. It also noted that when an LGBTI person or someone perceived as such is assaulted or killed, the State must conduct an investigation to determine whether the crime was motivated by discrimination.

- Political rights and equality before the law in the registration of candidates in an electoral process

54. In a case involving the refusal to register an independent candidate in an electoral process, the Commission insisted that the rights to be elected and to hold public office must be exercised under conditions of equality and stressed the importance of the law being applied uniformly to all candidates in such circumstances. In a more detailed analysis, the IACHR noted that, in principle, it is compatible with the American Convention to require a number of supporting signatures as a requirement for the registration of independent candidates, and that States are not necessarily obliged to regulate the procedure for verifying this requirement by law but may do so through regulations. In light of these standards, it concluded that the use of different verification methods to assess compliance with a registration requirement violates political rights and equality before the law.

- Removal of parliamentarians

55. In a case involving the removal of individuals from parliamentary positions to which they had been popularly elected, the IACHR specified that, in order to be compatible with the State's international obligations, a restriction on political rights must observe the principles of legality, necessity, and proportionality. In this regard, it stated that, even when based on a rule, a sanction does not comply with the principle of legality if that rule does not establish with a minimum of clarity the conditions and circumstances under which political rights may be restricted in its application. It also reiterated that, in accordance with Article 23.2 of the American Convention, the law may regulate the exercise of political rights exclusively by conviction by a competent judge in criminal proceedings. The Commission also emphasized that the arbitrary dismissal of persons who enjoy job security for the period for which they were elected affects not only their political rights but also their right to work. Finally, with regard to due process, it held that the imposition of disciplinary sanctions without the persons sanctioned having been previously heard, informed of the existence of accusations or charges against them, or provided with opportunities to prepare or present a defense is incompatible with the State's international obligations.

- Dismissal and permanent disqualification of a deputy

56. In a case concerning the removal of a person from a position to which they had been elected by popular vote, as well as their permanent disqualification from holding that position, the IACHR recalled the Inter-American standard that, pursuant to Article 23(2) of the American Convention, penalties of this nature may only be imposed by means of a judicial decision (judgment) by a competent judge in criminal proceedings. It also highlighted the seriousness of the penalties of removal from office and permanent disqualification for popularly elected officials, as they imply permanent separation from office. In addition, it explained that such measures not only affect political rights but also the right to job security. Finally, the Commission established that in cases where measures of this nature are imposed as sanctions, the guarantee of the right to a comprehensive review of the conviction provided for in Article 8.2.h of the American Convention applies.

- Political rights and guarantees applicable in the context of proceedings for the removal of popularly elected public officials

57. In a case involving the removal of a high-ranking elected official through a coup d'état, the IACHR referred to the relationship between democracy and the exercise and enjoyment of human rights. It emphasized that its validity in the American States constitutes an international legal obligation. It also recalled the standards related to the guarantees that must be observed in removal proceedings such as those mentioned above, highlighting, among others: the principle of legality; the duty to provide reasons; the presumption of innocence; the rights to defense; and to a proceeding conducted by competent, independent, and impartial authorities. The Commission reaffirmed the representative nature of public office and recalled that, according to case law, democratically elected officials may only be removed from office by a judgment issued by a competent judge in a criminal proceeding. Finally, it reiterated Inter-American jurisprudence, according to which job security is related to the content of Article 23(1)(c) of the American Convention on Human Rights, since the right to access public office, under conditions of general equality, must be accompanied by effective protection of tenure in office. In the specific case, the IACHR observed that the authority that dismissed the senior official did not have the legal power to do so, such that there was no doubt that the removal did not comply with the guarantee of competence and arbitrarily affected his political rights, as well as his right to work.

- Political rights, due process, and suspension of elected officials

58. The Commission ruled on a case in which it had to examine the suspension of an elected official following criminal charges, as well as his inability to exercise the mandate for which he had been democratically elected. The merits report refers to Inter-American standards on political rights and determines that the current regulatory framework established automatic suspension in the event of criminal charges, without review mechanisms and with effects that continued even after the rule was declared unconstitutional. The IACHR considered that this measure operated as an early punishment imposed without judicial intervention or due process.

- Death penalty and conditions of detention

59. In a case involving a person sentenced to death and experiencing poor conditions of detention, the Commission emphasized the high level of scrutiny that must be exercised to guarantee the rights to life, personal integrity, and due process. It also elaborated on the special duties and responsibilities of State authorities to protect persons with mental disabilities. In this regard, it explained that, in accordance with this duty, authorities must review all documentation and information in their possession that relates to the mental health of a person accused of a crime punishable by death, and that the State must provide persons accused of such crimes with the means to obtain an independent evaluation of their mental health. The IACHR also affirmed that the evaluation of the legal assistance provided by the State to a person accused of a crime punishable by death must be carried out taking into consideration that context and the magnitude of what is at stake. In addition, it stipulated that executing a person as a result of judicial proceedings that were not conducted in accordance with their rights constitutes a serious and deliberate violation of the right to life.

- Rights of persons deprived of liberty; pretrial detention; end of imprisonment; and judicial guarantees

60. In a matter related to the conditions of deprivation of liberty of a person, the Commission developed standards regarding the scope of Article 7 of the American Convention. In application of the international corpus juris on personal liberty and in accordance with Article 29 of the aforementioned instrument, the Commission highlighted the relevance of the criteria of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the jurisprudence of the European Court of Human Rights regarding the dignified treatment of persons deprived of liberty and the requirement that all sentences serve the purpose of reform and social rehabilitation. It also stated that no prison system can be based exclusively on retribution and that, even in cases of serious crimes, States must guarantee effective mechanisms for reviewing sentences that allow for the possibility of social reintegration to be evaluated. It also affirmed that any State decision affecting personal liberty must be duly justified, since a lack of justification constitutes a form of arbitrariness. In this regard, it held that the authorities must set forth the facts, reasons, and rules on which their decision is based, especially given the intensity of scrutiny required for any restriction on a right as essential as personal liberty. Finally, the IACHR recalled that the analysis of deprivation of liberty must be carried out in accordance with the principle of equality and non-discrimination. Along these lines, it emphasized that States have a duty to bring their domestic law and practices into line with their obligations under the Convention, which includes the exercise of conventionality control by all authorities.

- Right to personal integrity of adolescents deprived of liberty and duty of enhanced due diligence in the investigation of possible torture, cruel, inhuman, and degrading treatment

61. In a case involving torture and cruel, inhuman, and degrading treatment, as well as the isolation of adolescents deprived of liberty in a center for the enforcement of socio-educational measures, the Commission reiterated the Inter-American standards on the obligations of States regarding the comprehensive protection of children and adolescents deprived of liberty, governed by the principle of the best interests of the child. It also recalled the State's special position as guarantor of persons deprived of liberty, which has the legal consequence of a rebuttable presumption that the State is internationally responsible for violations of the rights to life and integrity of persons in its custody. It also noted that children and adolescents are in a particularly vulnerable situation when they are deprived of liberty, which implies specific duties on the part of the State. In this regard, the IACHR reaffirmed that, in structuring the criminal justice system applicable to adolescents, States are obliged to incorporate an approach that takes into account the specific characteristics and particular needs of this population and prioritizes prevention and protection. Furthermore, it recalled that the absolute and non-derogable nature of the prohibition of physical and psychological torture belongs to the domain of international jus cogens. In turn, the Commission mentioned that the particularly vulnerable situation of young persons deprived of liberty requires that the provisions and guarantees aimed at preventing torture and cruel, inhuman, or degrading treatment be applied with greater rigor and scope, and that a stricter threshold be applied to determine the degree of suffering that may constitute torture in the case of children and adolescents. In this context, based on international corpus iuris, it noted that the imposition of solitary confinement on adolescents should not be used as a punishment and may constitute cruel, inhuman, degrading treatment or even torture. Finally, the IACHR specified the standards under which the State must investigate acts that may constitute torture or ill-treatment and emphasized the State's duty of enhanced due diligence in the investigation, prosecution, and punishment of those responsible for possible acts of torture when the alleged victims are children and adolescents.

- Obligations of States toward children and adolescents in situations of human mobility who are deprived of liberty in detention centers administered by private entities

62. The IACHR referred to a case involving physical and sexual abuse suffered by eleven unaccompanied migrant children detained in a center administered by a private company contracted by a State. In that context, it elaborated on Inter-American standards on the detention of children in an irregular migratory situation, the prohibition of torture and other cruel, inhuman, or degrading treatment or punishment during detention, as well as the State's obligation to prevent and investigate any act of ill-treatment. In addition, it held that prolonged arbitrary detention constitutes cruel, inhuman, and degrading treatment. In order to analyze the attribution of international responsibility, the Commission referred to the Articles on State responsibility for Internationally Wrongful Acts, precedents from the International Court of Justice, as well as other international courts such as the European Court of Human Rights and international human rights protection bodies, to emphasize the duty of States to adequately supervise facilities administered by private companies, which is reinforced by the State's position as guarantor and the principle of the best interests of the child. Finally, the Commission recalled the duties to prevent and investigate acts of torture and ill-treatment suffered by victims, especially adolescents.

- Judicial protection against possible acts of discrimination by private educational institutions

63. The Commission heard a case related to the denial of access to education at a private educational institution to a child with a disability. In this context, it reiterated that, in cases alleging acts of discrimination by private individuals, it is incumbent upon the administrative and/or judicial authorities to monitor the actions of those individuals in light of Inter-American and international standards. It also noted that once the complainant has demonstrated the existence of evidence of discrimination, the burden of proof must be reversed. This is because the person who allegedly committed the act of discrimination is normally the one who has the means to disprove the occurrence of discriminatory treatment or to offer an objective justification for the difference in treatment. In this regard, it established that effective judicial protection implies that it is incumbent upon national authorities to require the accused entity or person to demonstrate that their actions did not have a discriminatory purpose or effect, or that there was an objective and reasonable justification for those actions. Finally, it emphasized that proceedings to resolve alleged crimes committed against children, by their very nature, must be expeditious.

- Right to life and obligations of States in contexts of organized crime and citizen insecurity, and use of force in entertainment gatherings

64. In a case involving two massacres committed by gang members and a third perpetrated with the intervention and acquiescence of police officers during a soccer match, the IACHR emphasized the obligations of States in contexts of organized crime and citizen insecurity, and reaffirmed Inter-American standards on the use of force, highlighting their application in the context of entertainment gatherings. With regard to the former, it underscored, among other aspects, the State's obligation to guarantee security and maintain public order, as well as its duty to prevent, repress, and investigate acts of violence. With regard to the latter, in addition to reiterating Inter-American standards relating to the principles of legality, legitimate purpose, necessity, and proportionality that should govern the use of force by police officers, it stressed the importance of also observing the principle of due diligence in cases of entertainment events, such as a soccer game. This principle requires that, when preparing and executing an operation in such circumstances, all necessary measures be taken to avoid the use of force or, if it is unavoidable, to minimize its adverse effects.

- Duty of due diligence in investigating acts of political violence; right to peace in relation to the exercise of other human rights

65. In a case related to the death of a presidential candidate who had State protection, the Commission analyzed the State's obligations to conduct investigations with due diligence to clarify acts of political violence. It also delved into the scope of the right to peace and its recognition and relationship with other rights in the American Convention. To this end, it evaluated treaties on the subject, case law from regional courts, and conclusions from United Nations bodies, and considered the right to peace in its individual and collective dimensions, together with political rights, freedom of expression, and freedom of association.

- Rights to judicial guarantees and judicial protection, and obligations of States in relation to the enforcement of pension judgments

66. In a case concerning non-compliance with a pension-related judgment, the Commission reiterated the Inter-American standards on effective judicial protection and compliance with domestic judgments in matters involving older persons. In this regard, it stated that States must guarantee mechanisms that allow for the full and timely enforcement of their judgments, since their effectiveness depends on it. It also stated that there is a reinforced criterion of speed in the obligation to comply with decisions that favor older persons, based on their situation of special vulnerability. The Commission also reaffirmed that the guarantee of a reasonable time frame is applicable to the enforcement of final court rulings, emphasizing in this context the particular effects that the passage of time has on the legal situation of older persons. On the other hand, the Commission highlighted the impact of non-compliance with domestic rulings that protect pension rights on the rights to property and social security.

c. Merits reports published

67. During 2025, in accordance with the provisions of Article 47 of its Rules of Procedure and Article 51 of the American Convention, the Commission decided to publish the following 14 merits reports:

- Report No. 113/25, Case 12.855, Analía Verónica Tapia and Family (Argentina); [7]
- Report No. 112/25, Case 13.092, Héctor Leonardo Kemelmajen and Rafael Chaikin (Argentina) [8]
- Report No. 111/25, Case 13.079, Diego Armando Pacheco (Argentina) [9]
- Report No. 110/25, Case 12.935, Hebe Sánchez de Améndola and daughters (Argentina) [10]
- Report No. 109/25, Case 12.692, M.E.F. (Argentina) [11]
- Report No. 45/25, Case 13.055, Julio César Rito De Los Santos et al. (Argentina) [12]
- Report No. 17/25, Case 12.704, Ramón Nicolás Guarino (Argentina) [13]
- Report No. 241/25, Case 12.636, Edgar Quiroga, Gildardo Fuentes, and Victoria Delgado Anaya (Colombia) [14]
- Report No. 114/25, Case 12.491 Gustavo Sastoque Alfonso (Colombia) [15]
- Report No. 89/25, Case 12.936, Oscar Alfonso Morales Díaz (Colombia) [16]
- Report No. 37/25, Case 12.952, Mariela del Carmen Echeverría de Sanguino (Colombia) [17]
- Report No. 60/25, Case 14.042, Anastasio Hernández Rojas and family (United States) [18]
- Report No. 251/25, Case 14.264, Maykel Castillo Pérez (Cuba).
- Report No. 288/25, Case 13.866, Sarah Lyn Langton and family (Venezuela).

68. In addition, considering the provisions of the 2024 annual report and the available resources, progress was made in processing the reports that the IACHR decided not to refer to the jurisdiction of the Inter-American Court (see below, para. 117); or, in the case of those States that have not recognized the jurisdiction of that Court, in accordance with the provisions of Article 47 of the Rules of Procedure. In the first half of 2026, the Commission will continue to prioritize the publication of the merits reports that are currently at this stage.

d. Activities involving petition and case management and decision-making

69. Within the framework of its Strategic Plan 2023-2027, the Commission continued to take measures to promote more timely access to Inter-American justice. These actions are aimed, on the one hand, at increasing productivity in final decisions on pending cases and reducing the caseload; and, on the other hand, to implement its Policy on Prioritizing Petitions and Cases (Resolution No. 4/23) in order to improve management and expedite decisions on the most urgent, serious, and high-impact cases in the Inter-American system, given the existing procedural backlog.

70. During 2025, the IACHR registered a total of 4,634 matters in its portfolio of petitions and cases. In this context, the work of the Processing Section, responsible for guiding the procedure in accordance with the applicable regulatory provisions, achieved high productivity by sending 10,012 communications, which allowed 78.5% of the portfolio of petitions and cases to be ready for a substantive decision. These figures translate into an estimated monthly average of 834 notifications, reflecting a sustained productivity trend comparable to the levels reached in 2024. [19] This sustained effort aims to reduce waiting times in the processing of information; ensure predictability in the procedure; and guarantee that the Commission has duly substantiated case files, in accordance with the relevant procedural rules, for the adoption of reports in contentious matters under its consideration.

71. Regarding strengthening internal processes and in order to streamline docket management in both stages, capacities were reinforced to ensure the periodic review of petitions and cases, with a view to encouraging the participation of the parties and streamlining the procedure. In terms of admissibility, the monitoring of those petitions in which the State did not submit its initial response within the time limit set forth in Article 30.3 of the IACHR Rules of Procedure was strengthened, and the corresponding request was reiterated with a view to the possible application of Article 36.3, in accordance with Resolution No. 1/16 on measures to reduce procedural backlog. Meanwhile, in the merits stage, monitoring was strengthened for cases in which the petitioning party did not submit additional observations within the time limit established in Article 37 of the Commission's Rules of Procedure, reiterating the request sent and warning of the possibility of archive pursuant to Article 42, should the lack of response persist. Although with different effects depending on the stage, both strategies contribute to making the procedure more dynamic and ensuring the timely intervention of the parties.

72. In 2025, the consolidation of the initial study and the admissibility of petitions into a single technical team—already initiated in 2024—generated significant progress, reflected in a more agile and efficient review of petitions as well as the beginning of the task of applying the prioritization criteria established in Resolution 4/2023. These measures are intended to maintain an adequate initial review of petitions within the year in which they were received and to achieve greater consistency and coherence between the initial review and admissibility decisions. It is important to note that, of the 170 admissibility reports, 27 correspond to petitions diagnosed as relating to urgent matters, mainly concerning children who could face situations of violence or whose family ties could be irreparably affected. This will enable these matters to move on to the merits stage and obtain a timelier response.

73. Among the most notable advances are those achieved in the merits stage, as 2025 was the first year in which the three case coordination units created in 2024 operated throughout the entire year. These technical areas consolidated work and organizational methodologies aimed at increasing productivity. This technical strengthening enabled the Commission to adopt an unprecedented number of merits reports, maintaining a sustained upward trend in the production of substantive decisions with greater impact for the region [20]. Thus, the Commission managed to increase the number of merits decisions produced five years ago by 97.01%.

74. During 2025, the IACHR made chronological progress in the study of cases, giving special priority to those linked to serious human rights violations, without prejudice to the cases prioritized by the Plenary in accordance with the categories established in Resolution No. 4/23, through which the IACHR adopted its Policy on the Prioritization of Petitions and Cases. The implementation of this policy—designed to ensure transparency, predictability, efficiency, and active participation by States and civil society in the [19] It should be noted that in 2025, significant challenges included the temporary suspension of financial resources during the first half of the year, as well as periods of slowness in the "GAIA" system, which was worked on to restore its optimal performance.

[20] In 2024, the Inter-American Commission adopted 121 merits reports (IACHR, Annual Report 2024, Chapter II: The Petitions and Cases System, Friendly Settlements, and Precautionary Measures, para. 20). In 2023, the IACHR adopted a total of 100 merits reports (IACHR, Annual Report 2023, Chapter II: The Petition and Case System, Friendly Settlements, and Precautionary Measures, para. 20).

planning of petitions and cases—has helped to optimize and expedite the handling of the most urgent, serious, and relevant matters for the Inter-American system.

75. All cases with the procedural process completed as of the date of planning related to urgent matters concerning persons sentenced to death were resolved. Cases related to urgent medical care for children and adolescents were also planned and decided, as well as those in which a delay could cause irreparable damage to family ties. For the first time, the IACHR is implementing procedures to ensure the participation of children in matters that involve them. In particular, the Commission conducted the first consultation with psychological and specialized support to ensure the participation of a girl in a case related to her international return.

76. Furthermore, the IACHR continued to decide cases related to circumstantial or structural situations, or cases that developed Inter-American public order in accordance with the categories of Resolution No. 4/23. The planning process for these cases was participatory and open, including a space for receiving input from States and other civil society actors, aimed at identifying issues that would contribute to the strengthening and development of Inter-American public policy. The Commission values and appreciates the contributions received for the implementation of the prioritization policy, which were weighed by the Plenary together with the technical contributions of the special, thematic, country, precautionary measures, and follow-up on recommendations rapporteurships, for the planning of cases for the 2024–2025 period. On June 4, 2025, the Commission presented the first results of this initial implementation exercise, highlighting the importance of these contributions.

77. This prioritization made it possible to address cases related to structural situations or current issues, such as discrimination in private educational institutions; the rights of defenders of the rights of transgender and intersex persons; and the right of indigenous communities to free, prior, and informed consultation in the context of climate change. In turn, cases of particular relevance to the development of standards that strengthen Inter-American public order were resolved, including those relating to the obligations of States towards children and adolescents in situations of human mobility; persons deprived of liberty in privately run detention centers; standards applicable to the protection of persons in situations of forced displacement; restrictions on the political rights of parliamentarians or popularly elected high-ranking officials; as well as the duty of due diligence in the investigation of acts of political violence and their link to the right to peace and the exercise of other human rights. Further details on these decisions can be found in the section on relevant decisions in this report.

78. The first exercise in implementing the prioritization policy has shown that, with a strategic focus on case resolution, the Commission is not only moving toward strengthening a more timely justice, but also guiding States in adopting legislative changes and modifying key State practices to ensure the protection of human rights in the region, thereby making it possible to prevent new human rights violations and provide legal certainty regarding legislation or institutional practices.

79. Within this framework, and in application of Resolution No. 4/23, the Commission carried out activities aimed at implementing the second exercise of the Policy for Prioritizing Petitions and Cases, with a view to planning cases for the year 2026. Following the results achieved in its first exercise, in June 2025 the IACHR, in a renewed commitment to a participatory and open process of identifying priority issues, once again opened a space to receive contributions from States and civil society acting as petitioners. The purpose was to identify cases with the potential to strengthen Inter-American public order and consolidate the scope of human rights standards relevant to the region, in accordance with the provisions of paragraph 7 of the aforementioned resolution. A total of 95 contributions were received. Likewise, as approved by the Commission and following the practice of the previous exercise, the special, thematic, and country rapporteurships, together with the precautionary measures and recommendation follow-up teams, conducted a study of the case docket and presented 111 case proposals that could contribute to developing Inter-American public policy or to addressing current and structural issues in the States of the region.

80. The Commission will continue to systematize and directly study these proposals to conclude its case planning exercise in 2026. It is expected that next year, depending on the resources available, the IACHR will be able to extend the application of this policy to the docket of petitions in the admissibility stage, which will enable it to have a broader and more strategic view of its entire docket of petitions and cases.

81. Furthermore, it should be noted that the Commission continues to implement its Resolution 1/16 on measures to reduce the procedural backlog, in order to apply Article 36.3 of its Rules of Procedure, which allows for more expeditious processing of cases by deferring the admissibility review until the merits debate. In 2025, the Commission approved 95 reports through the application of the aforementioned resolution. These cases are based, on the one hand, on the need to take decisive measures to reduce procedural delays and ensure that the passage of time does not prevent the Commission's decisions from having a useful effect and, on the other, on the objective of acting more swiftly in serious and urgent cases, as provided for in Article 36.3.b of the Rules of Procedure.

82. With the aim of continuing to strengthen the technical capacity of the staff responsible for managing petitions and cases, in 2025 the Continuing Education Program in Human Rights for the team of the Assistant Executive Secretary for the Petitions and Cases System was continued. The program has included a series of training activities taught by experts, aimed at staff, with the objective of strengthening and updating their knowledge on relevant topics and standards. Noteworthy activities include three workshops on "Training in the incorporation of a gender and intersectional perspective in matters submitted to the IACHR," led by expert Leticia Bonifaz; an activity on "Crimes against Humanity: Dialogues and (Dis)agreements with International Humanitarian Law," led by expert Susana SáCouto; as well as discussions led by specialists from the Assistant Executive Secretary for Petitions and Cases. The latter included activities on "Cases before the Inter-American Court of Human Rights," which promoted dialogue on matters currently pending before the court; and "Access to justice in the face of impunity," which focused on procedural legal institutions that hinder the investigation of serious human rights violations and crimes against humanity, such as the statute of limitations. The newsletter on the activities of the Assistant Executive Secretary for Petitions and Cases has also continued to be published, sharing information among technical teams on the Inter-American standards developed in the reports on admissibility and merits approved, as well as the judgments and hearings held before the Inter-American Court, among other topics.

83. Finally, an inventory of petitions and cases was carried out at the beginning of the year, through the verification, classification, and purging of physical and digital files, which made it possible to establish the correspondence between both formats and confirm a sustained trend toward digitization. As of February, of that year, the docket contained 4,785 files, of which 2,570 corresponded to the admissibility stage (70% digital and 30% physical) and 2,215 to the merits stage (22% digital and 78% physical). This has resulted in greater agility in the processing and accessibility of the files in custody of the IACHR. In this context, 150 boxes of inactive physical files were purged and prepared for eventual transfer to the Central Archives, all duly identified to ensure their custody, traceability, and preservation.

3. Archive

84. With regard to petitions under initial review, the Commission, as part of its annual docket management exercise, individually examined cases in which, having previously notified the petitioner of the filing[21], no response had been received. Consequently, on December 4, 2025, the IACHR decided to definitively archive 48 petitions under initial review. In this regard, it should be noted that in almost half of the archived petitions (48%), the initial complaint constitutes the petitioner's only action before the Commission.

[21] With regard to the criterion set forth in Article 42.1.b of the Rules of Procedure, the IACHR considers procedural inactivity on the part of the petitioner for more than two years in petitions under initial review, with a decision to proceed, to be unjustified. Another serious indication of lack of interest in the processing of a petition, under the terms of the aforementioned article, is the failure to respond to a request made for the purpose of completing the relevant parts of a complaint for eventual notification to the State.

85. Likewise, on December 23, 2025, the IACHR archived 254 petitions and cases in contentious proceedings, in accordance with Article 42 of its Rules of Procedure. Except in those situations where the petitioner expressly withdrew the petition in accordance with Article 41 of the same Rules of Procedure, the Commission provided warning of the archive without having received any response.

86. In this regard, it should be noted that, of the total number of cases archived, 155 petitions were in the admissibility stage, representing 5% of the docket at that stage; 98 cases were in the merits stage, equivalent to 4% of the docket in the merits stage; and one case was being processed under the friendly settlement procedure.

87. Regarding petitions archived at the admissibility stage, it should be noted that, of the 155 petitions archived, 124 (80%) showed procedural activity only during the initial review stage; once the start of the contentious proceedings had been notified, no further action was taken by the petitioner. The average time elapsed from receipt of the petition to notification of the start of proceedings to the State was 3 years and 7 months. There were also nine withdrawals, for various reasons, including the lack of substance to the allegations or a lack of interest in continuing with the proceedings, given that favorable decisions had been obtained at the domestic level or that some reparation had been obtained that made it moot to continue the proceedings before the IACHR.

88. Regarding the cases archived at the merits stage, it should be noted that in 42 of the 98 cases (42.85%), there was no procedural activity on the part of the petitioner after the State was notified of the commencement of proceedings. At this stage, the cases were closed mainly due to the petitioner's failure to submit additional observations on the merits, as provided for in Article 37.1 of the Commission's Rules of Procedure, which accounted for 79% of the cases closed. Likewise, in 13% of the cases, the closure was due to procedural inactivity for more than three years, and in the remaining 8%, it was due to withdrawals. Of the latter, it was noted that in some cases the decision not to proceed with the complaint was linked to harassment and fear of reprisals by the alleged victims and/or their representatives, allegedly attributable to State officials or undertaken with their collaboration or acquiescence. In this regard, States are reminded that the right of individuals to access and resort to the Inter-American Human Rights System implies the obligation to guarantee such access in conditions free from pressure, intimidation, or reprisals of any kind.

89. It is important to remember that, since 2018, the IACHR considers it necessary to confirm the petitioner's interest in continuing with a proceeding when there has been a period of inactivity for three years. This is relevant to ensure that the reasons that gave rise to the petition continue to exist over time, to keep the proceedings up to date, and thereby to ensure that the IACHR can concentrate its available resources on cases that are active. In the absence of such confirmation, the Commission may proceed to close the case. In turn, the Commission has understood the failure to submit observations on the merits by the petitioner, a requirement under Article 37.1 of the IACHR Rules of Procedure, as a serious indication of lack of interest that may lead to the case being closed under the terms of Article 42.1.b of the same instrument.

90. The following is a list of petitions under consideration that the Commission decided to close in 2025.

4. Portfolio meetings and information to member states

91. With the aim of guaranteeing access to information related to the fulfillment of its mandate and promoting a culture of active transparency with regard to the information under its control, the Assistant Executive Secretary for Petitions and Cases, at the request of the Commission, provided information on the status of the portfolio of petitions and cases pending before the IACHR on 21 occasions, with respect to 19 member states of the Organization of American States (OAS).

92. Of the total, 11 corresponded to meetings—virtual, in-person, and hybrid—aimed at a detailed review of the dockets, which were arranged with the States of Argentina, the Bahamas, Barbados, Bolivia, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, and Mexico. It should be noted that, in the case of Barbados, this was the first meeting of this nature held by the Commission's Executive Secretariat, constituting a significant milestone and a first step toward bringing the country closer to the petition and case system.

93. Of the remaining 10, one referred to a specific request submitted by Bolivia regarding the status of its portfolios of petitions and cases, while another was provided as a courtesy in view of the impossibility expressed by the State of Peru to hold the meeting previously agreed upon for that exercise. The remaining eight responded to the ex officio referral of information regarding Antigua and Barbuda, Belize, Dominica, Guyana, Haiti, Jamaica, the Dominican Republic, and Suriname, confirming the IACHR's commitment to promoting transparent, efficient, and user-oriented management of the Inter-American system.

5. Hearings on contentious cases

94. During 2025, in accordance with the provisions of Article 64 of the Rules of Procedure, the Commission held a total of four public hearings and one private hearing on cases pending before it. At these hearings, the Commission received testimonial or expert evidence and heard arguments from the parties involved.

95. Some of the hearings were held at the request of a party, while others were convened ex officio by the IACHR, given that they were related to matters under its consideration and deliberation. This allows the Commission to have more evidence on the issues under debate between the parties, as well as updated information before issuing its ruling.

96. Specifically, the IACHR held public hearings in the following cases:

- Case No. 14.458, Diego Lamagna and family et al. v. Argentina, March 3, 2025[22].
- Case No. 13.147, Ricaurte Losada Valderrama v. Colombia, July 25, 2025[23].
- Case No. 14.407, Persons Affected by the Closure of the Pachamama Foundation v. Ecuador, November 17, 2025.
- Case No. 15.475, Gloria Patricia Porras and her relatives v. Guatemala, November 18, 2025[24].

97. The Commission also held a private hearing in the following case:

- Case No. 15.425, Ladies in White v. Cuba, November 17, 2025.

6. Cases in transition

98. After a merits report is adopted in accordance with Article 50 of the American Convention and Article 44 of the Rules of Procedure, the Executive Secretariat proceeds to notify the parties. As a result of the increase in the productivity of merits reports, such notification is carried out in an orderly and progressive manner. With the aim of increasing the transparency and predictability of cases that already have a decision that is pending notification, in its 2024 annual report, the IACHR authorized the Executive Secretariat to inform the parties to the specific case of the decision adopted while awaiting its formal notification. This communication allows the dispute between the parties to be closed, in accordance with the provisions of Article 44 of the Commission's Rules of Procedure, without triggering the time limit provided for in Article 51 of the American Convention or affecting the confidential nature of the report issued in accordance with Article 50 of the American Convention. This practice ensures transparency with respect to the date of approval and, at the same time, allows the State to anticipate the reports on the merits of which it will be notified, to organize its institutional capacities to address them, in accordance with Articles 45 and 46 of the Rules of Procedure.

99. As announced in the aforementioned annual report, this practice would begin to be implemented in 2025. However, its implementation was initially impacted at the beginning of the year due to available resources and was instead undertaken in a sustained manner during the second half of the year. As of the closing date of this report, the IACHR had provided preliminary notice in 90 decisions on the merits . During 2026, the IACHR will continue to report on the decisions that were adopted this year.

100. However, Article 51.1 of the American Convention on Human Rights establishes that, after being notified of the report issued in accordance with Article 50 of the same instrument, the Commission may submit it to the jurisdiction of the Inter-American Court within three months. However, based on the requirements established in Article 46 of its Rules of Procedure, the IACHR may suspend this period and extend it for a specific period, provided that the State has demonstrated its willingness and ability to implement the recommendations and expressly and irrevocably accepts the suspension of the period. This has led to the implementation of the Commission's recommendations in the merits reports of several cases, in which it plays an active role in monitoring the status of compliance with the recommendations. The IACHR currently has 139 cases at this stage, which are reviewed periodically to decide in a timely manner whether to refer them to the Inter-American Court or publish them.

[22] In accordance with the provisions of Article 17.2.a of the Commission's Rules of Procedure, Commissioner Andrea Pochak, an Argentine national, did not participate in the public hearing.

[23] In accordance with the provisions of Article 17.2.a of the Commission's Rules of Procedure, Commissioner Carlos Bernal Pulido, a Colombian national, did not participate in the public hearing.

101. As part of the Commission's active role in this phase, working meetings on cases in transition continued to be held, chaired by the Commissioners and Rapporteurs from each country. During 2025, the IACHR held 25 virtual working meetings with the parties. The purpose of the meetings was to obtain information on the progress made by the State in complying with the recommendations issued by the Commission in its merits reports and to support the parties in the dialogue on the measures necessary for compliance. As a result of these meetings, specific advances were made, including the creation of roadmaps for the implementation of the recommendations; the development of proposals and counterproposals to reach compliance agreements; the start of the implementation of rehabilitation measures; and the delivery of timelines for actions to be taken in the short and medium term. The working meetings also served to evaluate the possibilities of continuing to monitor compliance during the transition stage or submitting the case to the contentious jurisdiction of the Inter-American Court.

102. The Commission recognizes and appreciates the goodwill of the States that participated in these meetings, which were attended by delegations that included authorities from the various institutions involved in complying with the recommendations and provided updated information on the progress made in implementing various measures. It also values the participation of the victims and their representatives and the information they have provided.

103. In 2025, the IACHR continued to send written communications during this stage, requesting specific information and preparing technical notes to promote compliance with the recommendations, ensuring comprehensive reparation in accordance with the standards of the Inter-American system. Within this framework, the Commission prepared eleven technical notes. Eight of them included precedents on compensation measures, based on cases decided by the Inter-American Court, with the aim of facilitating dialogue between the parties. The IACHR also evaluated two specific proposals for monetary compensation presented by the State, verifying their compliance with Inter-American standards. Finally, another technical note was intended to support the parties by clarifying the scope of the States' obligation to bring their domestic legislation into line with those standards, in accordance with the recommendations made in the Merits Report.

104. In the face of an extension under the terms of Article 46 of the Commission's Rules of Procedure, the States involved have had to demonstrate their willingness and ability to comply with the recommendations of the respective Merits Report in order for the Commission to extend the deadline again. In 2025, the IACHR adopted a total of 491 decisions, in which it evaluated the granting of a new extension, publications, or referrals of cases to the Inter-American Court.

105. During 2025, information was received on progress made by some States in complying with merits reports. In particular, the Commission recorded 561 measures adopted by States, including the payment of compensation to victims and negotiation processes between the parties based on the principle of agreement; progress in domestic judicial proceedings to investigate the human rights violations declared in the report, including the identification, capture, and conviction of some of those responsible; the provision of health services to victims by state institutions; and the signing of compliance agreements that include measures for financial reparations, satisfaction, and guarantees of non-repetition. The IACHR noted favorably that some States implemented the training recommended in the Merits Report, among other topics, in relation to standards on the use of force; equality and non-discrimination; prevention of acts of torture; application of a gender perspective in the deprivation of liberty of pregnant women, nursing mothers, and women in the postpartum period; and principles of international humanitarian law.

106. Within the framework of such compliance, efforts were made to actively promote negotiation processes and agreements to comply with the recommendations contained in merits reports. During 2025, the Commission took note of the signing of twelve agreements between the parties on compliance with cases in transition and continued to monitor the progress of 15 agreements that had been signed in previous years.

107. These activities enable the IACHR to advance in the implementation of its strategic plan, adopting measures so that more victims of human rights violations obtain justice through compliance with the decisions in the merits reports and the guarantee of comprehensive reparation, which involves strengthening the management and handling capacities of cases in transition in its Assistant Executive Secretary for Petitions and Cases.

108. At its 194th session, held from November 10 to 21, 2025, the Commission analyzed several of the tools and practices it has developed during the transition phase with the aim of promoting compliance with the recommendations contained in the merits reports in transition. In this regard, the IACHR approved the initiation of a process in 2026 aimed at making the practices and tools it has adopted in the management of cases at this stage more transparent, as well as providing greater predictability regarding the criteria for the publication of reports and their submission to the Inter-American Court of Human Rights.

C. Advances and challenges on negotiation and implementation of friendly settlements agreements

1. Introduction

109. The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights, presents in this chapter the work of promoting negotiations and compliance with friendly settlement agreements, and for the visibility of the efforts made by the IACHR in the framework of its Strategic Plan 2023-2027, to potentiate the friendly settlement mechanism, as an effective tool for the attention of matters that fall under the system of individual petitions and cases, as well as for obtaining full reparation by victims of human rights violations and to expand the use of the friendly settlement procedure as a strategy to address the procedural backlog [25].

110. The Commission addresses in this chapter first the relevant results in the negotiation processes and implementation of friendly settlement agreements, including the agreements fully complied with in 2025; the specific advances in the implementation of measures of friendly settlement agreements; the new agreements signed during the year; and the new friendly settlement follow up processes. On the other hand, the activities for the promotion of friendly settlement agreements carried out during the year are addressed, which includes the actions taken to promote negotiations and compliance with agreements; as well as the steps taken to promote the exchange and dissemination of good practices on the mechanism. Likewise, the compliance status of the friendly settlement reports approved by the Commission is presented in the light of article 49 of the American Convention and the good practices and setbacks observed in 2025 regarding friendly solutions are raised.

111. Lastly, it should be noted that in accordance with the provisions of Article 17.2.a of the Commission's Regulations, none of the Commissioners participated in the debate nor in the conclusions of the matters related to their countries of nationality.

[25] In this regard, the Commission notes that, starting in 2019, it has published the progress and setbacks regarding friendly settlements as an independent chapter in its Annual Report for greater visibility of the mechanism and its transformative impact. See IACHR, 2019 Annual Report, Chapter II, Section G, Friendly Settlements.

2. Relevant results on negotiation and implementation of friendly settlement agreements

a. Friendly settlement agreements fully implemented in 2025

112. The Commission notes with satisfaction that, in 2025, progress was made in terms of full compliance with 11 friendly settlement agreements. Listed below are the matters that reached full compliance this year:

- Case 13.888, Diego Pablo Paredes, Argentina
- Case 14.778, Graciela Edit Abecasis, Argentina
- Case 14.769, Claudia and Ana María Kleinman, Argentina
- Case 14.835, Lilia Ana Villagra, Argentina
- Case 14.836, Lydia Cristina Vieyra, Argentina
- Case 14.940, Horacio Ricardo Neuman, Argentina
- Case 11.289, José Pereira, Brazil
- Case 12.674, Marcio Lapoente da Silveira, Brazil
- Case 13.661, Giorgio Vera Fernández, Chile
- Case 13.125, Ricardo Antonio Elías and family, Colombia

113. The Commission considers that this progress is very important, and commends the states of Argentina, Brazil, Chile and Colombia for advancing in the full implementation of friendly settlement agreements and urges them to continue making use of the mechanism for resolving matters that are pending in the system of individual petitions and cases by having recourse to this non-contentious procedure.

b. Progress toward implementing measures of friendly settlement agreements in 2025

114. The Commission is pleased to share the progress in the implementation of measures in 62 friendly settlement agreements. In addition, it was observed in the Commission's analysis that, in 2025, 11 petitions and cases reached total compliance, and 16 cases advanced towards partial compliance.

115. On the other hand, the Commission verified that progress was made in implementing 113 measures, attaining total compliance with respect to 69 measures of reparation; partial substantial compliance with respect to 23 measures of reparation; and partial compliance with respect to 21 measures of reparation. Of the 113 measures that saw progress in 2025, 38 are structural and 75 are individual in nature.

116. In this regard, the Commission noted that the countries that registered the highest levels of progress in the implementation of measures were, in the first place, Colombia, with 74 advanced measures in 2025, of which 40 achieved full compliance, 14 partial substantial compliance and 20 partial compliance. Likewise, Argentina made progress in complying with 20 measures (16 with full compliance and 4 with partial substantial compliance). Additionally, Mexico advanced in 5 measures, 3 with total compliance and 2 at the partial substantial level of compliance.

117. Other States that showed progress in the implementation of friendly settlement agreements included Chile, which achieved full compliance with 4 measures; Guatemala, which fully complied with 3 reparation measures; and Brazil, which fully complied with 2 measures and achieved substantial partial compliance with 1 additional measure. For its part, Bolivia made progress on 2 measures (1 fully complied with and 1 with substantial partial compliance); Honduras achieved substantial partial compliance with 1 measure; and Panama reached partial compliance with another.

118. The following is a detail of the specific progress in each case by country in the levels of total, partial substantial, and partial compliance with the clauses of the friendly settlement agreements as of 2025:

119. The Commission values the efforts of the states of Argentina, Brazil, Bolivia, Chile, Colombia, Guatemala, Honduras, Mexico and Panama and welcomes the progress they have made with implementing the clauses in the friendly settlement agreements that contain commitments to victims and their next of kin and on their compliance with the settlement agreements approved by the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights. The Commission reiterates that said compliance is vital for legitimization of the friendly settlement mechanism and for forging trust in the agreements and in the good faith of States wishing to comply with their international commitments. At the same time, the Commission wishes to take this opportunity to urge all States using the friendly settlement mechanism to complete compliance with measures currently being implemented, so that the IACHR can certify total compliance with the friendly settlement agreements and stop monitoring them.

122. The Commission commends the States of for their openness to engage with dialogue with the various alleged victims and their representatives to find, together, formulas of reparation, provided that they are in accordance with human rights standards, take into account the needs and interests of the parties, and are capable of being addressed through the friendly settlement mechanism, which will be assessed at the appropriate time.

e. New friendly settlement monitoring processes

123. The Commission announces with satisfaction that, in 2025, 19 reports approving friendly settlements were published, for which these matters came to be monitored, for the first time, in the follow up mechanism of the Annual Report of the IACHR. They are listed next, in alphabetical order by the state concerned and chronological order based on the date the Commission's decisions were issued:

124. Consequently, the Commission commends the states of Argentina, Bolivia, Chile, Colombia and Guatemala, and urges them to continue taking actions to comply with those friendly settlement agreements that remain under follow up stage, for the next Annual Report in 2026. For more information on the content of these agreements and the levels of implementation achieved, visit to the IACHR Friendly Settlement Reports website.

3. Activities carried out to promote friendly settlements in 2025

a. Activities to foster the negotiation and implementation of FSAs

125. As regards the line of work that involves actively facilitating the negotiation of and compliance with friendly settlement agreements, in 2025 the Commission held 11 working meetings to foster the negotiation and implementation of friendly settlement agreements in different matters from Argentina, Chile, Colombia and Mexico. Moreover, the Commission facilitated 21 technical meetings to foster friendly settlement efforts and/or preparatory meetings over the year, in various matters from Argentina, Bolivia, Chile, Colombia, Ecuador, Guatemala, Mexico and Panama. Accordingly, in 2025 a total of 32 dialogues tables were facilitated with the parties to advance in friendly settlements.

126. Throughout 2025 the Commission held 7 periodic meetings to review the portfolios of negotiation and monitoring of friendly settlements with Argentina (1); Bolivia (1); Chile (1); Colombia (2); Guatemala (1) and Mexico (1).

127. In 2025, the Commission issued 11 press releases on friendly settlements[30] and maintained the practice of making visible the progress in the homologation and total compliance of friendly settlement agreements to encourage the authorities in charge of the execution of those measures to follow through on the commitments assumed by the States in friendly settlement agreements.

128. In 2025, the IACHR cleared up 48 matters under the friendly settlement mechanism through 19 homologations, 23 instances of ending negotiations at the request of the parties, 1 matter decided motu proprio under Resolution 3/20, 1 archive of a matter in the merits stage undergoing friendly settlement negotiations and 4 matters archived in the monitoring phase due to inactivity, loss of contact with victims or at the request of the petitioner. With regard to the foregoing, it should be noted that the Commission examined the following matters in the friendly settlement follow-up stage, the analysis of which is detailed in the corresponding country sheet, and on that basis proceeds to archive them at this time:

Petition/Case	Name	Country
Case 12.536	Raquel Natalia Lagunas y Sergio Antonio Sorbellini	Argentina
Petition 535-17	Luis Gerardo Bermúdez	Colombia
Case 13.226	Dora Inés Meneses Gómez and others	Colombia
Case 12.631	Karina Montenegro and others	Ecuador

[30] In this regard, see Press Releases from the IACHR on Friendly Solutions in 2025. Available at: OAS :: IACHR :: Friendly Settlement :: Press Releases related to friendly settlements.

129. The Commission also provided technical advice to the parties in 1 matter subjected to the friendly settlement mechanism involving Colombia providing information on general guidelines for drafting FSAs aimed at establishing compliance measurement indicators that facilitate their full implementation.

130. Lastly, the Commission participated in 10 ceremonies for signing and/or acknowledgements of responsibility in compliance with various friendly settlement agreements regarding Colombia[31] and Mexico including:

No.	Name	Country	Date MM/DD/YY
1.	Zenón Alberto Medina López and relatives	MX	3/26/2025

10.	Jessica Liliana Ramírez Gaviria	CO	10/16/2025

131. The Commission appreciates and welcomes the good will of the States of Colombia and Mexico in implementing these important measures of redress—in face-to-face, virtual and hybrid modalities—and for disseminating them via various media and networks.

b. Activities to promote the sharing and dissemination of best practices in friendly solutions and to develop tools to facilitate access to information regarding the friendly settlement procedure for users of the Inter-American Human Rights System (IAHRS)

132. Relating to the IACHR's line of action on the promotion and dissemination of good practices in friendly settlements, it is worth noting that, in 2025, different training activities were carried out, as well as the dissemination of good practices regarding friendly solution.

133. From April 22 to 26, 2025, the Commission conducted a working visit to Colombia, led by the Country Rapporteur Commissioner. The primary objective was to promote the implementation of comprehensive reparations within the framework of friendly settlement petitions and cases, as well as in other transition cases. Additionally, promotional activities regarding the mechanism of precautionary measures were carried out. In this context, Commissioner Caballero and the technical team of the IACHR Executive Secretariat participated in significant events, including the signing of friendly settlement agreements and acknowledgments of responsibility. Working meetings were also organized to monitor the implementation of friendly settlement agreements approved by the IACHR.

[31] See, Press Release No. 83, IACHR concludes working visit to Colombia on friendly settlements and precautionary measures, published on April 29th, 2025.

134. In particular, on April 24th, the technical team of the IACHR Executive Secretariat held the IX Training Workshop for officials on procedural aspects of friendly settlements. This training space significantly strengthened the technical capacities of Colombian officials responsible for implementing friendly settlement agreements, directly contributing to the country's progress in restorative justice. Using a theoretical-practical approach, the workshop facilitated understanding of the IACHR's role, the legal and procedural requirements of the mechanism, and the specific challenges encountered during the negotiation and implementation stages. It also promoted inter-institutional dialogue and collective analysis of best practices. This event, attended by more than 80 people, reinforced coordination among government entities, consolidated essential knowledge for the timely management of reparation commitments, and improved the technical quality of teams responsible for leading friendly settlement processes across the country.

135. Also, on September 4, 2025, the technical team of the Section of Friendly Settlements of the IACHR participated in the thirteenth edition of the "Héctor Fix Zamudio" Academic Program at UNAM, through a session dedicated to the friendly settlement procedure (FSP). This contributed qualitatively to strengthening specialized knowledge and improving students' practical skills regarding the functioning of the IACHR, particularly the Friendly Settlements Mechanism. The class allowed for an in-depth exploration of procedural matters, the normative evolution of the mechanism—including the application of Resolution 3/20—and an analysis of reparation measures used in Inter-American practice, supported by concrete examples from friendly settlement reports. Through a systematic presentation and the use of methodological tools inspired by collaborative conflict resolution, the activity helped clarify the quasi-judicial role of the IACHR in facilitating agreements, differentiating the components of reparations, and identifying current challenges in negotiating and implementing Friendly Settlement Agreements (FSAs). Overall, this academic contribution strengthened the comprehensive training of 42 students in the educational program by providing essential technical insights to understand the IACHR's alternative dispute resolution mechanisms, reinforcing the connection between theory and practice, and promoting a more strategic view of access to justice and comprehensive reparation within the Inter-American framework.

136. Furthermore, the Commission conducted several promotional activities in Guatemala from November 3 to 5, 2025[32], as part of the expansion efforts of the friendly settlement mechanism. On November 4, the country's Rapporteur Commissioner, Andrea Pochak, convened a high-level meeting with authorities involved in consensus-building processes and the implementation of friendly agreements. The objectives of this meeting included strengthening dialogue and technical cooperation, fostering friendly settlement processes within the country, and promoting more efficient, coordinated, and results-oriented management for the benefit of victims of human rights violations. During this session, the Commissioner reaffirmed the IACHR's commitment to support the State in revitalizing the use of friendly settlements in accordance with the guidelines established in Resolution 3/20 and to advance the development of a modern, sustainable, and victim-centered reparations policy.

137. On the other hand, during the same visit, the technical team of the Executive Secretariat of the IACHR held two training activities: one for civil society organizations and another for government officials of Guatemala. The III Training workshop for civil society on procedural aspects of friendly settlements carried out on November 4th gathered about 30 petitioners and organization representatives to deepen their understanding of procedural and practical aspects, including a negotiation simulation emphasizing active participation of victims. This training enhanced organizations' and victims' ability to engage strategically and informedly in the friendly settlement mechanism, improving their knowledge of procedural aspects, reparation standards, and negotiation dynamics. It reduced asymmetries between civil society and the State, promoted empowered victim participation, and strengthened networks for advocacy and dialogue. Additionally, it clarified reparation expectations, improved the technical quality of proposals and negotiations, and fostered sustainable agreements aligned with Inter-American standards.

[32] See, IACHR, Press Release No. 227, IACHR completes promotional activities about friendly settlements in Guatemala, November 12, 2025.

138. Finally, on November 5, 2025, the IX Training workshop for officials on procedural aspects of friendly settlements was held, strengthening the technical and procedural capacities of 79 authorities responsible for implementing friendly resolution processes in Guatemala. The workshop used a theoretical-practical approach to the regulatory frameworks, previous experiences, and current challenges in processing FSAs. The activity clarified the institutional roles of the State and the IACHR, enhanced understanding of the content, stages, and standards applicable to FSPs, and fostered a collective analysis of the obstacles that cause procedural delays, promoting tailored responses and greater consistency in case management. Through a practical negotiation simulation and a final reflection on best practices, the workshop fostered dialogue skills, collaborative strategies, and the ability to identify appropriate and feasible reparative measures.

4. Status of compliance with reports on friendly settlement agreements, approved pursuant to article 49 of the American Convention on Human Rights

139. In compliance with its conventional and statutory attributes, and in accordance with article 48 of the Rules of Procedure, the IACHR makes the follow-up to its own decisions regarding friendly settlements. This Commission practice began in 2000 and from this moment onwards, information has been requested annually from parties of different petitions and cases to follow-up on friendly settlement reports published in light of article 49 of the American Convention and update the status of compliance of each of the matters under the supervision of the IACHR. Additionally, the IACHR receives information at hearings or working meetings held during the year, and which is also taken into consideration for the analysis of the state of compliance with friendly settlement proceedings as appropriate in each case.

140. For the elaboration of this Chapter, the Commission requested information to the users of the follow up of friendly settlement tool and analyzed in this report the information submitted by the parties until September 15, 2025[33]. Any information received thereafter did not make it into the Chapter could be taken into consideration for the 2026 Annual Report. The parties were duly advised of this information in the context of the requests for information for the preparation of this Chapter of the Annual Report. It should also be noted that the Commission took into account on exceptional basis information received after the closing date in those cases, where working meetings were held in the framework of the working meeting days as well as during the Period of Sessions that generated subsequent actions carried out based on the work lines developed in those meetings or in those matters in which the parties sent partial information within the term provided and after the period they added complementary or clarifying information.

141. The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights continues to make efforts to communicate more clearly the progress made toward implementing friendly settlement agreements. To that end, the Commission prepared detailed compliance monitoring sheets on each active case, identifying both the individual and structural impacts in each case. In the table listed below the link to the record analysis of compliance with each one of the friendly settlement agreements that are currently under follow up stage can be accessed, and the level of general compliance of each case can be observed along with the percentage of execution of the agreements. This allows the parties to see the level of implementation of the agreement beyond the most categories of compliance, partial and pending. Finally, in this opportunity the Commission maintained the categories of analysis of the information supplied by the parties,[34] as well as the categories for the [33] In accordance with Section 6 concerning Challenges and Setbacks in the implementation of friendly settlement agreements and considering the change in the Commission's composition effective as of December 31, 2025, the Commission found it necessary to obtain information earlier for the analysis of the Annual Report, which was previously due by October 15 annually. Notwithstanding this, due to the change in methodology, information received after that date was incorporated if available within each file during analysis, including documentation received in October and November 2025.

• Relevant information provided: the information provided is relevant, updated and extensive on measures adopted related to compliance with at least one of the clauses of the friendly settlement agreement, within the period specified by the IACHR.

• Information provided that is not relevant: the information was provided within the period specified by the IACHR but does not refer to the measures adopted regarding compliance with at least one of the clauses of the friendly settlement agreement pending compliance, is outdated, or is repetitive to the information presented in previous years without presenting new information.

individualized analysis of the clauses of the friendly settlement [35] and the categories of the general analysis of the fulfillment of the friendly settlement agreements traditionally used. [36]

142. In light of the above, the commission observes that the status of compliance with friendly settlement agreements in 2025, is as follows:

CASE/PETITION [37]	MONITORING SHEET	FULL COMPLIANCE	PARTIAL COMPLIANCE	PENDING COMPLIANCE	COMPLIANCE PERCENTAGE [38]	STATUS OF COMPLIANCE
1. Case 11.307, Report No. 103/01, María Merciadri de Morini (Argentina) [39]	Link to monitoring sheets on matters related to reports of friendly settlement agreements of Argentina that are subject to monitoring (only available in Spanish)	X			100%	Closed
2. Case 11.804, Report No. 91/03, Juan Angel Greco (Argentina)			X		63%	Active
3. Case 12.080, Report No. 102/05, Sergio Schiavini and María Teresa			X		50%	Closed

• Information not provided: information on measures adopted to comply with clauses of the friendly settlement agreement was not provided; The IACHR is expressly informed that the information will not be presented; or extension(s) to provide information were requested and, in the end, the information was not provided.

[35] The individual compliance status categories of its friendly settlement agreement clauses are listed below:

• Total compliance: a FSA clause in which the State has begun and satisfactorily completed the measure for compliance.

• Partial Substantial compliance: a FSA clause in which the State has adopted relevant measures for compliance and has provided evidence thereof, but the Commission finds that the measures for compliance thereof have still not been completed.

• Partial compliance: a FSA clause in which the State has adopted some measures for compliance, but it still must adopt additional measures.

• Compliance pending: a FSA clause in which the State has not adopted any measure to comply with the measure; or the steps taken have still not produced concrete results; or the measure(s) adopted is/are not relevant to the situation under examination.

• Non-compliance: a FSA clause in which, due to the State's conduct, it is not possible for the State to comply, or the State has expressly advised that it will not comply with the measure.

[36] The Commission decided to maintain the traditionally used categories of comprehensive examination of petitions and cases, which are:

• Total compliance: those cases in which the State has fully complied with all of the FSA clauses published by the IACHR. The Commission considers as complied with all the clauses of the FSA in which the State has started and satisfactorily completed the measures for compliance of all the clauses of the agreement.

• Partial compliance: those cases in which the State has partially complied with the FSA clauses published by the IACHR, either by having complied with only one or some of the FSA clauses, or through incomplete compliance with all of the FSA clauses; those cases in which the State has fully complied with all of the FSA clauses published by the IACHR except for one of them, with which it has been unable to comply.

• Compliance pending: those cases in which the IACHR considers that there has been no compliance with the FSA clauses published by it, because no steps were taken to that end; or the steps taken have still not produced concrete results; because the State has expressly indicated that it will not comply with the FSA clauses published by the IACHR; or the State has not reported to the IACHR and the Commission has no information from other sources to suggest otherwise.

[37] The cases in which there is a repetition of the matter number followed by a letter refer to negotiation processes in which the figure of the disaggregation was applied due to the existence of different beneficiaries of separate FSA; to address different claims according to the interests of the victims and/or petitioners, or because of the loss of contact and/or lack of will of any of the victims and/or petitioners to advance through the friendly settlement procedure, among other scenarios.

[38] The percentage of compliance was calculated taking into consideration the total number of measures established in each agreement as a 100%, and the number of clauses that have been totally complied with.

[189] See IACHR, Annual Report 2018, Chapter II, Section G. "Status of Compliance with the Recommendations Issued by the IACHR in Merits Reports and Friendly Settlement Agreements Approved by the IACHR." The Commission notes the lack of progress in compliance with the friendly settlement agreement since its approval. Therefore, on January 8, 2019, the IACHR decided, in accordance with Articles 42 and 48 of its Rules of Procedure, to conclude its monitoring of compliance with the friendly settlement agreement and to close the matter. The IACHR considers that the State did not comply with any of the measures set forth in the friendly settlement agreement and therefore compliance with it is pending.

5. Good practices in implementing Friendly Settlement Agreements observed in 2025

143. In this opportunity, the Commission was informed that in 2025, Colombia, through the National Agency for Legal Defense of the State [ANDJE in Spanish] developed a series of four video podcasts titled "Beyond the File: Compliance with Recommendations and Friendly Solutions with a Gender Perspective." This series explores Inter-American standards from a gender perspective and shares experiences of implementing reparation measures in cases resolved through friendly settlements, such as Case 13.974 Claudia Baracaldo Bejarano. The series highlights inter-institutional dialogue and was created in an educational, respectful, accessible format with participation from victims, representatives, social organizations, and state professionals. The Commission considers this a good practice for strengthening public education on the mechanism and promoting equality and non-discrimination.

144. Likewise, the Commission positively notes that the State established a monthly dissemination schedule to ensure broad and sustained outreach of the content. The episodes were published between October and December 2025 on the digital platforms of ANDJE, allowing them to reach diverse audiences throughout Colombia and abroad. The Commission considers that this type of digital strategy strengthens transparency, promotes citizen engagement with the friendly settlement mechanism, and contributes to building public memory of progress in implementing measures adopted by Colombia.

145. On the other hand, the Commission recognizes the launch of the second Bulletin, "Friendly Solutions and Compliance with Recommendations in Colombia: a mechanism for reconciliation," published on the ANDJE's specialized website, as a good practice. This communication tool provides updated information on progress in implementing high-impact measures. It also represents a significant effort in active transparency and public education about the role of the friendly settlement mechanism in comprehensive reparation and social reconciliation. The Commission particularly values the annual continuity of this bulletin, as it helps establish a robust institutional archive that systematizes advances and challenges in the execution of international commitments made by Colombia.

146. Similarly, the Commission welcomes, as a good practice, coordination between the ANDJE and the Victims Unit to develop a joint psychosocial support strategy before, during, and after the Acts of Acknowledgment of Responsibility. This inter-institutional coordination arises from the identification of complex emotional needs that victims may experience in these spaces and aims to ensure that reparative acts have a transformative and safe impact on families. The strategy included training State officials in emotional containment, self-care tools, and differential approaches, as well as the definition of joint work lines for future acts. The Commission particularly notes the development of the booklet "Psychosocial Support for Victims Recognized Before the IACHR," made available to the public through the State's website, as a practical tool to strengthen the dignity and differential treatment of victims.

147. Additionally, the Commission highlights that Colombia continues to strengthen the Friendly Settlements and Recommendations Compliance website, which provides clear, accessible, and up-to-date information to the public. The expansion of content in 2025—including the historical record of acts of signing and/or acknowledgment of responsibility, bulletins, the psychosocial booklet, and soon, the series of video podcasts—contributes to maximizing the public visibility of progress in reparation, satisfaction, and guarantees of non-repetition. The Commission considers that this site is becoming an innovative tool in the region for sharing best practices, facilitating citizen and institutional follow-up, and promoting a culture of transparency around the friendly resolution mechanism.

148. Finally, the Commission recalls that, in its 2024 Annual Report, it expressed concern about the actions of Prosecutor's Office 135 Judicial II for Administrative Matters in Bogotá in Case 14,093, Ernesto Ramírez Berríos, for having filed an appeal against the approval of the friendly settlement agreement advanced under Law 288 of 1996. On that occasion, the Commission warned that the arguments presented—related to alleged incompetence of the ANDJE, the absence of a prior written and explicit decision that authorized the economic compensation process, and the alleged lack of motivation of the Ministerial Committee's opinion—ignored the commitments made in the friendly settlement agreement approved through Report No. 285/22. It also warned about the legal and trust effects that such actions could generate both in this case and in other similar processes, recalling Colombia's positive track record in the use of Law 288 of 1996 as a regional best practice for implementing economic compensation measures within the framework of friendly settlement agreements.

149. On this regard, this year, the Commission was informed of the decision issued by the Administrative Litigation Chamber, Third Section, Subsection A of the Council of State, which confirmed the approval of the Extrajudicial Settlement Agreement entered into to comply with the economic compensation measure provided for in the friendly settlement agreement of said Case Ramirez Berrios. The Commission notes that this decision definitively resolved the questions raised by the Attorney General's Office 135 Judicial II, by expressly recognizing that the National Agency for Legal Defense of the State has the authority to represent the Colombian State within the Inter-American Human Rights System and to carry out the compensation procedures in accordance with Law 288 of 1996; that Report No. 285/22 constitutes the prior, written, and explicit decision required to activate the procedure; and that the favorable opinion of the Committee of Ministers is a valid and effective administrative act. The Commission emphasizes that this decision represents a significant advance and a good institutional practice, as it establishes a robust precedent that strengthens the legal certainty of the friendly settlement mechanism, reaffirms the coherence of the State's policy in this area, and helps prevent future obstacles in the implementation of agreements. This results in greater confidence among victims in the process and in the consolidation of the use of alternative dispute resolution methods in contexts of serious human rights violations.

150. Furthermore, the Commission was informed that on October 17, 2025, the Plurinational State of Bolivia published the "Booklet of Friendly Settlements approved by the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights," a technical tool that systematizes the agreements signed between 2005 and 2025, as well as the reparations measures implemented in each case. The document serves as an accessible and specialized resource for public officials, state institutions, and civil society organizations, and reflects a sustained effort by the Bolivian State to strengthen transparency, standardize institutional criteria, and promote a culture of respect for Inter-American standards regarding reparations and friendly settlements.

151. This booklet contains a thematic classification of reparation measures, covering satisfaction measures, guarantees of non-repetition, justice measures, restitution, and economic reparations, as well as the applicable domestic regulations. This product facilitates operational understanding of the mechanism and enables identification of State progress in legislative reforms, institutional strengthening, awareness-raising actions, and measures to prevent human rights violations. The Commission values this systematization as a good regional practice, as it provides technical clarity and promotes the professionalization of the state teams involved in friendly settlement processes.

152. Additionally, the Commission recognizes the Presentation Event of the Booklet, arranged in a conversational format at the Manuel Morales Dávila Auditorium of the Attorney General's Office, as a good practice. The event included interventions from government authorities and civil society, as well as the dissemination of audiovisual materials from the IACHR on the friendly settlement mechanism. The event was conceived as a space for training and awareness-raising for officials and institutional actors, with the goal of disseminating the legal foundations, impacts, and accumulated experience in Bolivia regarding the use of the mechanism, as well as promoting transparency and access to information about the approved agreements.

153. In this event, the Commission had an institutional presence through the projection of a pre-recorded video by the President and Country Rapporteur, Commissioner José Luis Caballero Ochoa, who highlighted the value of the friendly settlement mechanism as a cooperative means for victim reparations, acknowledgment of state responsibility, and the adoption of structural measures with transformative impact. The Commission particularly welcomed that the booklet includes technical content that facilitates the training of officials, the standardization of criteria, and the dissemination of good practices in gender issues, sexual violence, torture prevention, and the protection of detained persons, highlighting the progress made in cases such as M.Z., Marcela Alejandra Porco, and Javier Charque Choque. With this, the Commission reaffirms that this publication constitutes a regional best practice that strengthens cooperation between the State, victims, and the Inter-American System.

154. Finally, the Commission notes that the initiative is part of a broader process of institutionalizing the friendly settlement mechanism in Bolivia, supported by the work of the State's Council on Friendly Settlements on Human Rights Matters [Consejo Estatal de Soluciones Amistosas en Materia de Derechos Humanos, CESADH in Spanish] and the Office of the Attorney General. Publication of the booklet, along with its public dissemination, helps to strengthen a more robust operational framework by facilitating the practical application of the mechanism and improving coordination among the responsible government institutions for the implementation of agreements. The Commission considers that this effort reflects a renewed commitment by the Bolivian State to comprehensive reparation, the prevention of human rights violations, and the strengthening of national capacities to implement friendly settlements effectively and sustainably.

6. Challenges and setbacks in implementing Friendly Settlement Agreements observed in 2025

155. The Commission has identified the persistent lack of inter-institutional coordination as one of the main challenges in some States in the region. The Commission has noted the lack of consultations that must be held prior to the expression of interest by the State to initiate a friendly settlement process, with the entities that are responsible for the negotiation and implementation of friendly settlement agreements. The Commission has also noted the lack of efforts by States to design transition mechanisms for outgoing and incoming authorities in the context of changes of administration. In this regard, during the current year, the Commission noted a significant delay in the time taken by several States to provide a response on the viability of the victims' requests within the framework of the FSA negotiations, despite the fact that these matters had already been transferred to the negotiation portfolio, and on which the round of consultations on the technical viability of the negotiation and confirmation of the willingness of the authorities involved should have been carried out before deciding to initiate the process of dialogue. This has resulted in an unnecessary drain on the technical and material resources of both the State and the victims of human rights violations, who have placed their trust in the friendly settlement mechanism and are awaiting a resolution within this framework.

156. The Commission again regrets the lack of progress in the implementation of the friendly settlement agreement signed in the Case 13.017A (Relatives of Victims of the Military Dictatorship, October 1968-December 1989), respecting Panama, despite that six years have elapsed since its approval. In this regard, the Commission once again urges the State of Panama to make efforts to implement these measures, reminding it that, as subjects of international law, States have the obligation to comply with the decisions of the bodies of the Inter-American system.

157. On the other hand, regarding follow-up of the friendly settlement agreement reached in Case 14.145 Eleazar Vargas Ardila with respect to Colombia, the Commission observes with concern that, although the conciliation agreement was signed on March 17, 2025, and duly forwarded by the Attorney General's Office to the Administrative Court of Cundinamarca for approval, the judicial process has faced significant obstacles. It notes that on June 11, 2025, the Court approved only the amounts for moral and direct damages, but denied recognition of lost profits, finding that the measure created an alleged duplication with the educational aid granted in the friendly settlement agreement. The Commission warns that this interpretation has led to appeals by all intervening parties, due to concerns that such a decision could set a precedent that undermines the coherence, effectiveness, and legal certainty necessary for the future implementation of friendly settlement agreements in Colombia.

158. The Commission deeply regrets that the decision adopted by the Administrative Court seems to overlook the historical and well-established practice of the Colombian State in using the friendly settlement mechanism, particularly regarding the coexistence —never exclusion— between economic compensations processed under Law 288 of 1996 and social rehabilitation measures, such as educational aid offered in numerous friendly settlement agreements over more than a decade. The Commission recalls that both components serve different purposes within comprehensive reparation: while educational aid aims to restore life projects and provide opportunities for personal development, lost profits are intended to compensate for specific damages resulting from the violation of human rights. In this context, excluding the recognition of lost profits due to the existence of a social rehabilitation measure is incompatible with Inter-American standards, the consistent practice of States in the region regarding the utilization of this mechanism, and the commitment undertaken by the State during the negotiation of the agreement.

159. For these reasons, the Commission considers it essential that the Administrative Tribunal has access to the background, the comparative information, and the accumulated experience from other friendly settlement agreements signed by Colombia, so that its legal analysis is conducted with full knowledge of the scope and coherence that have characterized the use of this mechanism in the country. The Commission urges the Colombian State to take the necessary actions to ensure that the appeals filed are resolved as quickly as possible and in accordance with the purpose and spirit of the agreement, guaranteeing that the victims receive full reparation. Likewise, it reiterates that building trust between the State and the petitioners depends on full and good-faith compliance with the commitments made, making it essential to avoid interpretations that could cause setbacks or negatively affect the effectiveness of the friendly settlement mechanism.

160. On the other hand, the Commission notes with satisfaction that in recent years, the friendly settlement mechanism has solidified its role as a constructive and widely used avenue for the cooperative resolution of disputes within the Inter-American System. This sustained growth is reflected in a steady increase in approved agreements and in cases progressing toward negotiation and follow-up. The mechanism's dynamism has created new opportunities to strengthen the technical support provided by the Commission and has also highlighted the need to continue optimizing its monitoring methodologies to adequately reflect the progress made by States in fulfilling their commitments to comprehensively repair victims. This process of improvement should enhance the mechanism's positive impact and ensure that its future development remains aligned with the best practices of the Inter-American system.

161. To provide a comprehensive view of this evolution, the Commission presents below a consolidated table of the mechanism's main management indicators from 2018 to 2025. The information shows a progressive increase in both the number of approved agreements and the number of active cases in negotiation and follow up stage, as well as a natural expansion of the universe of measures under supervision. This quantitative growth reflects users' confidence in the mechanism and the importance of the work carried out by States and petitioners to move toward compliance. It also helps identify areas where it is strategic to strengthen tools, methodologies, and work processes that facilitate more efficient, systematic, and results-oriented support, promoting the full implementation of agreements:

Year	Total approvals per year	Total closures per year	Total active cases in F/up Stage [191]	Annual increase of FSA measures	Total historical registered measures	Total cases approved	Total historical closed cases	Total cases under negotiation [192]	Total active cases
2019	14	14	73	148	967	141	68	76	149
2020	25	28	71	175	1142	166	95	86	157
2021	15	13	73	126	1268	181	108	100	173
2022	23	9	87	154	1422	204	117	91	178
2023	32	18	101	262	1684	236	135	84	185
2024	13	16	98	147	1831	249	151	103	201
2025	19	16	101	197	2028	268	166	99	200

162. In alignment with this ongoing improvement strategy, during 2025, the Commission implemented a series of measures to optimize and facilitate the continuation of follow-up processes for friendly agreement, as well as to encourage the participation of involved parties in submitting information. These measures included simplifying technical sheets, expediting the information request schedule and submission deadlines, adopting more succinct forms for receiving inputs—comprising specific questions regarding the information the Commission requires to make its assessments—and exploring technological tools that streamline the systematization of received data. These initiatives have enabled sustained follow-up and fostered a more transparent and prompt flow of information, without compromising the guarantees or standards pertinent to the monitoring of agreements.

163. In this context, the Commission emphasizes the importance of promoting a collaborative dialogue among States, victims, their representatives, and other users of the mechanism, to advance toward sustainable, transparent, and results-oriented follow-up methodologies that enable the achievement of verifiable outcomes. This will allow for aligning expectations, strengthening the quality of the information presented, and encouraging the parties to jointly explore approaches that facilitate compliance and case closure. The Commission reaffirms its commitment to continue improving its procedures and to work with States and with civil society organizations to effectively implement agreements, thereby consolidating the mechanism as a strategic tool for rights protection and friendly dispute resolution in the region.

164. The Commission also emphasizes that many of the clauses subject to supervision through this monitoring process are too broad and require the parties to hold a mutual dialog and keep minutes or memoranda of understanding to determine the content and definition of what was agreed upon, establishing components for clear measurement and roadmaps for short-term work to complete execution. The Commission makes itself available to users of the friendly settlement mechanisms to facilitate dialogue focused on securing that consensus.

165. Lastly, the Commission reminds that it is fundamental for States to move forward in establishing administrative, legislative, or other mechanisms to streamline the processes to negotiate and implement friendly settlement agreements and guarantee that the commitments made are fully executed.

D. Cases before the Inter-American Court of Human Rights

166. During 2025, the Commission continued to exercise its conventional and regulatory mandates before the Inter-American Court, which included the following areas: (i) submission of contentious cases; (ii) appearance and participation in public and private hearings; (iii) comments on requests for advisory opinions submitted by States; and (iv) submission of written observations on State reports in cases under supervision of compliance with judgments.

167. In addition, as of September 1, 2022, the Court began to notify its judgments publicly. In the acts of notification of the judgment, the Court reads the central points and operative provisions of the corresponding ruling. During 2025, the Commission participated in 18 acts of reading of judgments.

168. The activities and results obtained during the current year are described below.

1. Submission of contentious cases

169. The referral of cases to the Inter-American Court is based, in accordance with Article 45 of the Rules of Procedure, on the criterion of obtaining justice, which is determined on the basis of the status of compliance with the r`7ecommendations issued and other criteria established in that article[193], including the position of the petitioning party.

170. In accordance with Article 51 of the American Convention and Article 45 of the Rules of Procedure, during 2025 the Commission submitted 33 cases to the jurisdiction of the Inter-American Court. In those cases, when evaluating the request for additional extensions, the Commission observed that, although in some cases there had been efforts by the State, no substantial progress had been made in complying with the recommendations. Therefore, taking into account the need for justice and reparation for the victims, it decided to proceed with the referral.

171. The referral of these cases allows the Inter-American Court to rule on the responsibility of the States and issue the corresponding reparations in favor of the victims. In addition, the Court will have the opportunity to develop or deepen its jurisprudence in relation to the aspects of Inter-American public order raised by these cases, as well as on the scope of the rights recognized in the American Convention on Human Rights and other Inter-American instruments, with an impact that transcends the interests of the parties involved.

172. The Commission has 84 active cases that have been referred to the Inter-American Court of Human Rights. In proceedings before the Court, the IACHR participates in all matters, in accordance with the provisions of the American Convention and the Rules of Procedure of the Court. Among other actions, the Commission submits its observations regarding possible preliminary objections and acknowledgments of responsibility; offers expert evidence when Inter-American public order is significantly affected; and submits its oral and written observations regarding the parties' arguments, as well as regarding any evidence that may be presented subsequently. The IACHR also participates in hearings in cases in which the Court summons it.

173. The public order aspects of the cases submitted to the Inter-American Court in 2025 include: (i) compatibility of the institutionalization of persons with disabilities in mental health centers with the rights recognized in the American Convention, and state obligations to guarantee their reintegration into the community on conditions of equality and autonomy; (ii) equality, non-discrimination, and effective access to justice for women with disabilities, especially in the investigation and punishment of cases of sexual violence, in accordance with Inter-American standards; (iii) obligations regarding the rights of pregnant, breastfeeding, and postpartum women deprived of liberty, as well as children born to or living with mothers in prison; iv) the rights of Afro-descendant tribal peoples, including the state's duty to guarantee their participation in public and legislative decisions that affect them, and to establish mechanisms for self-identification and reliable data for culturally relevant policies; v) equality and non-discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation, protection of family ties and the filiation rights of same-sex couples, and the State's obligation to apply the principle of the best interests of the child in cases of assisted reproduction; vi) duty of due diligence in the investigation of violent deaths of adolescents; vii) guarantees applicable to the selection and appointment procedures for judges based on the principles of equality and non-discrimination, independence, and impartiality; and viii) state obligations regarding investigation and enhanced due diligence in cases of disappearances of human rights defenders.

174. It should be noted that, with regard to the number of cases sent to the Court this year, as stated above, the Commission found that several of the cases in the transition stage met the requirements for granting an extension under the terms of Article 46 of the Rules of Procedure; therefore, at the time, it did not consider it necessary to send the case to the Inter-American Court. Additionally, the Commission notes that it decided not to refer eight cases to the Inter-American Court and to proceed with their publication, as it did not consider that there was a need for justice in such cases that would warrant referral to the Inter-American Court, primarily under Article 45 of the Rules of Procedure of the IACHR and Article 51.1 of the American Convention on Human Rights, given the substantial progress made on the recommendations in the merits report.

175. The cases that were submitted to the Inter-American Court are described below, including a breakdown by date of submission and by country.

1. Marcelo Néstor Pancia v. Argentina[194]

176. The case concerns Argentina's international responsibility for violating Marcelo Néstor Pancia's rights to a fair trial, to appeal his conviction, and to personal liberty.

177. Mr. Pancia was arrested on February 3, 1997, by members of the Córdoba Provincial Police on a public road as part of a police investigation initiated in response to a report of a stolen motor vehicle. On the same day, the judge in charge of the Sixth Investigating Court of the Province of Córdoba issued an arrest warrant against Mr. Pancia on the grounds that there were "sufficient reasons to suspect" his involvement in the crime of aggravated robbery with the use of a firearm. On February 7, the Investigating Judge ordered the opening of criminal proceedings, and on February 10, Mr. Pancia's preliminary statement was taken in the presence of his defense attorney. On March 11, the judge issued a preventive detention order against Mr. Pancia in accordance with the provisions of Article 281, paragraph 1, of the Criminal Procedure Code of the Province of Córdoba, considering him to be an alleged co-perpetrator of the crime of aggravated robbery involving the use of a firearm.

178. On June 3, 1997, the investigating judge decided to refer the case to trial, which was assigned to the Fifth Criminal Court of Córdoba. On June 10, Mr. Pancia submitted a brief revoking the appointment of his defense attorney, Dr. Juárez, and appointing Dr. Graciela del Lourdes Díaz as his replacement. However, on February 25, 1998, Ms. Diaz resigned from her position, and on March 10, 1998, legal advisor Battistelli appeared in the case file and accepted the defense of the accused Pancia.

179. On April 15, 1998, the oral hearing was held before the Fifth Criminal Chamber of the City of Córdoba. On that occasion, the defense attorneys for the defendants requested that the proceedings be conducted as a summary trial, as regulated in Article 415 of the Criminal Procedure Code of the Province of Córdoba, and the prosecutor agreed to request a sentence of no more than five years and six months in prison. At the same hearing, Mr. Pancia confessed his participation in the alleged crime, and his legal counsel "agreed with the prosecutor's assessment of the evidence and the legal classification of the crime, stating that the unlawful deprivation of liberty was absorbed by the robbery and requesting, therefore, that the minimum sentence be applied".

180. On April 23, 1998, the Fifth Chamber issued its guilty verdict, declaring Mr. Néstor Marcelo Pancia a co-perpetrator of the crime of aggravated robbery with the use of a weapon and imposing a sentence of 5 years and 2 months in prison.

181. On May 4, 1998, the Fifth Chamber received an appeal in pauperis signed by Mr. Pancia. In that brief, the victim pointed out that the sentencing court had erred in the application of substantive law, since the criminal offense that should have been applied to his conduct was not aggravated robbery with the use of a firearm but simple robbery. Finally, Mr. Pancia requested that his legal counsel be granted a hearing in order to comply with the formal requirements.

182. In a legal opinion received by the court on June 2, 1998, Dr. Laura Battistelli argued that the brief submitted by her client "questions the fact established by the Court" regarding the operability of the weapon used in the criminal act and that Mr. Pancia's allegations were incorrect in light of the ballistic expert reports included in the case and that "this defense cannot endorse this type of argument for ethical reasons and out of respect for the Court [...] it is not serious for this defense to uphold the defendant's appeal."

183. On June 25, 1998, the Fifth Criminal Chamber of Córdoba decided to "reject as inadmissible" the appeal filed by Mr. Pancia. In a letter dated July 31, 1998, Mr. Pancia expressed his disagreement with the decision of the Fifth Chamber, stating that "it is not intended to reevaluate the facts or the evidence [...] but it is nonetheless true that when the court arbitrarily excludes essential or decisive evidence, it illegitimately disregards in its reasoning one of the elements it has a duty to assess, and the judgment will be NULL AND VOID." He also stated that he found himself in a situation of "lack of legal assistance," in violation of due process and the right to defense, because his public defender refused to sign the appeal filed in pauperis.

184. On October 8, 1998, the Criminal Chamber of the Superior Court of Justice of the Province of Córdoba decided "not to proceed" with the brief filed by Mr. Pancia because the deadlines established in procedural law for filing a complaint with that superior court for denial of the appeal had expired. In response to this decision, on October 15, 1998, Mr. Pancia filed an extraordinary federal appeal in pauperis with the Superior Court of Justice. On February 26, 1999, the Superior Court of Justice of the Province of Córdoba decided to declare the extraordinary appeal "formally inadmissible." Finally, Mr. Pancia filed a complaint directly with the Supreme Court of Justice of the Nation for denial of the extraordinary federal appeal. On October 23, 2001, the Supreme Court of Justice of the Nation decided to dismiss the complaint for denial of the extraordinary federal appeal filed by Mr. Pancia's public defender.

185. In its Admissibility and Merits Report No. 275/22, the Commission noted that Mr. Pancia's pretrial detention from March 11, 1997, to April 23, 1998, was based exclusively on the crime for which he was being prosecuted and not on the verification of the existence of procedural risks. Therefore, the Commission concluded that the precautionary measure of deprivation of liberty imposed on the petitioner was not sufficiently justified in terms of achieving a legitimate purpose compatible with the American Convention and, therefore, violated the right to personal liberty. Furthermore, in view of the legal framework in force at the time, the IACHR concluded that the State violated its duty to adopt domestic legal provisions. The Commission emphasized that, after the events of the present case, reforms were made to the criminal procedure system of the Province of Córdoba that brought the requirements for ordering a precautionary measure of pretrial detention into line with human rights standards on the matter.

186. With regard to the petitioner's right to exercise control over the evidentiary activity carried out in the context of the case brought against him, the Commission noted that the Ballistics Section of the Judicial Police Department prepared a ballistics report on the weapon, indicating that both the weapon and the bullets it contained were operationally fit for firing. This report was included in the court file on February 19, 1997, without any record in the file of the participation of an expert witness on behalf of Mr. Pancia in the inspection or that the investigating court or the Judicial Police itself had informed him of the conduct of said expert examination. In this regard, the Commission considered that there were omissions with regard to the expert evidence, which are of paramount importance given that Mr. Pancia's defense throughout the proceedings revolved around the inoperability of the weapon seized at the time of his arrest and, consequently, the inapplicability of the criminal offense of aggravated robbery with the use of a firearm. Therefore, the Commission concluded that the State is internationally responsible for violating the right to defense in court.

187. The Commission also analyzed issues related to the performance of Mr. Pancia's public defender. The Commission considered that the incompatibility of criteria between Mr. Pancia and his public defender and the corresponding breakdown of the relationship of trust between them should have been addressed as soon as it arose, both by Dr. Battistelli herself and, in particular, by the judges responsible for ensuring that the defendant could exercise his right to a defense at trial. In effect, the Commission understood that the public defender should have recused herself from the case upon being notified of the existence of the in pauperis appeal filed by Mr. Pancia if she did not agree with her client's decision to exercise his legal right to appeal the conviction. Similarly, the Commission considered that the judges of the Fifth Criminal Chamber and the Criminal Chamber of the Superior Court of Justice should have taken note of this divergence of opinion between the defense attorney and the defendant and taken the necessary measures to ensure that Mr. Pancia was not left without legal representation.

188. Additionally, the Commission noted that Article 2 of Provincial Law 7982 provides that free legal assistance "shall be provided by the Judiciary, through the Permanent Assistance Desk and the Body of Legal Advisors...," and that Article 6 states that "the Superior Court of Justice shall determine the secretaries and assistants with whom…" the Body of Legal Advisors "shall be staffed" and that "when Legal Advisors have not been appointed to act before a particular court, the assignment may be made by the Superior Court of Justice." In light of these rules, the Commission agreed with the petitioners' assertion regarding the lack of functional autonomy of the Legal Advisors Corps with respect to the Judicial Branch of the Province of Córdoba. The Commission noted that this lack of autonomy is especially problematic in cases such as this one, where the person on trial questions the work of his own personal defense attorney, since the law does not provide for any other way to supervise the actions of public defenders other than through the jurisdictional control exercised by the judges themselves.

189. Based on the foregoing considerations, the IACHR concluded that the Argentine State was responsible for violating Mr. Pancia's right to an effective defense at trial.

190. Finally, the Commission considered that the regulatory restriction existing in the text of Article 468 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and the manner in which the judicial authorities acted in the case implied a violation of the right to appeal the conviction and to judicial protection.

191. Based on its analysis of the facts and the law, the IACHR concluded that the Argentine State is responsible at the international level for violating the rights to personal liberty, to a defense at trial, and to appeal a conviction before a higher judge or court, as enshrined in Articles 7(1) and 7(3), 8(2)(h), and 25 of the American Convention on Human Rights, respectively, in relation to Articles 1.1 and 2 of the same instrument, in the terms described in this report. The Commission also concluded that the State violated Articles 8.2 c, e, and f) of the American Convention in relation to Article 1.1 of the same instrument.

2. Simeón Caballero Denegri and Andrea Victoria Denegri Espinoza v. Peru

192. The case relates to the international responsibility of the Peruvian State for the irregular actions of the Peruvian judicial authorities in the process of establishing paternity outside of marriage brought by Ms. Andrea Victoria Denegri Espinoza on behalf of her son, Simeón Miguel Caballero Denegri.

193. On August 15, 1997, Ms. Andrea Victoria Denegri, representing the child, Simeón Miguel Caballero Denegri, filed a lawsuit seeking a judicial declaration of extramarital paternity against the heirs of the alleged father, Mr. Simeón Caballero Bustamante, who had died on March 12, 1991.

194. This lawsuit was admitted by Resolution No. 02 of September 8, 1997, by the First Family Court of Lima. In the same resolution, the court ordered that "six means of evidence" be considered, among which was DNA testing to be performed on the bodies of Mr. Caballero Bustamante and Simón Miguel Caballero Denegri.

195. Ms. Denegri also filed a request for a precautionary measure seeking to prohibit the cremation or removal of the body from the cemetery so that DNA testing could be performed. On September 9, 1997, the First Family Court of Lima ruled that the request for a precautionary measure met the legal requirements and indicated that irreparable harm was imminent and therefore granted the requested precautionary measures.

196. On April 21, 1998, the Sixth Civil Family Chamber of the Superior Court of Justice of Lima heard an appeal against the decision granting the precautionary measures to Ms. Denegri Espinoza and revoked that decision on the grounds that it did not meet the requirements of Article 611 of the Code of Civil Procedure, including the requirement that the plaintiff had not satisfactorily indicated "in what manner or way the heirs of the defendant estate would be carrying out acts for the exhumation, transfer, or cremation of the deceased [...], and therefore there is no evidence of periculum in mora." In compliance with the order of the Sixth Civil Family Chamber of the Superior Court of Justice of Lima, the First Family Court of Lima issued a ruling on May 7, 1998, ordering the annulment of the ruling granting precautionary measures. On the same day, the Ministry of Health issued Directorial Resolution No. 014-98 authorizing the exhumation and cremation of the remains of Mr. Simeón Caballero Bustamante, which was carried out on May 8, 1998.

197. Due to the loss of this evidence, the First Family Court of Lima ordered ex officio that DNA tests be carried out on the child Caballero Denegri, Ms. Andrea Victoria Denegri Espinoza, and the defendants, to be compared at a later date. However, after multiple summonses in which, despite being notified of the lawsuits, they did not appear for the test, the Court decided to dispense with it. On January 23, 2001, the First Family Court of Lima issued judgment No. 1438 in the process of extramarital judicial declaration. The court indicated that in the best interests of the child, it was necessary to rule in favor of the petition, based on the assessment of the evidence in conjunction with the procedural conduct of the parties, which was confirmed by the Specialized Family Chamber of the Superior Court of Justice of Lima.

198. The defendants appealed the ruling issued by the Specialized Family Chamber of the Superior Court of Justice of Lima to the Permanent Civil Chamber of the Supreme Court of Justice, which, on December 23, 2002, issued a ruling upholding the appeal on the grounds that there was no conclusive evidence to prove paternity.

199. In its Merits Report No. 284/22, the Commission found, first, that the reasons given by the Sixth Civil Family Chamber of the Superior Court of Justice of Lima for its decision to revoke the precautionary measure granted by the First Family Court of Lima disregarded the State's obligation to always observe the best interests of the child and, consequently, to provide special protection to Simeón Miguel Caballero Denegri. The Commission considered that revoking the precautionary measure intended to protect the main evidence in the child's filiation proceedings, on the grounds that there was no proof of payment of the financial bond as a counter-guarantee, or due to a lack of more specific arguments than those already provided, did not take into account his best interests, was disproportionate to his rights, and disregarded the State's obligation to provide him with special protection.

200. In this regard, the Commission indicated that the lifting of the precautionary measure had a negative impact on Simeón Miguel Caballero Denegri's ability to clarify his identity and thus also guarantee the enjoyment of his other rights, such as the right to a name, an attribute of personality that allows the individualization of a person in society, and in this specific case, to clarify whether the surname he bore was really that of his father. The Commission also stated that this had an impact on the possibility of guaranteeing another element of the right to identity, namely the right to family and private and family life.

201. The Commission also considered that the judicial remedy to request a declaration of extramarital paternity in the present case was made materially illusory, becoming a mere formality, since, given the statement made by the child's mother that the DNA test was the only conclusive evidence she could provide, and given that the alleged father had died, the precautionary measure protecting the evidence was lifted, thereby preventing a substantive ruling on the grounds invoked in the action for declaration of extramarital paternity, thus affecting the suitability of the process.

202. Additionally, the Commission noted that the decision to lift the precautionary measure disregarded the minimum guarantees that must be respected in any proceeding where decisions are made that may affect the rights of individuals, disregarding the obligation to take into consideration the arguments of the parties and to account for them in the reasoning behind the decision, which did not occur, because despite having expressly pointed out the importance of guaranteeing such evidence and the reasons why it was at risk, reasons that were precisely those that materialized, the Sixth Civil Family Chamber of the Superior Court of Justice of Lima did not present any consideration in this regard when revoking the precautionary measure, limiting itself to stating the reasons why it was making the decision.

203. Consequently, the Commission determined that by failing to guarantee special protection measures in consideration of his status as a child in the process of judicial declaration of extramarital paternity, placing requirements such as the payment of a financial bond or the lack of further argumentation regarding the need for the precautionary measure above all else, the Peruvian State is responsible for the violation of the rights to judicial guarantees, family protection, name, judicial protection and the rights of the child.

204. Based on the findings of fact and law, the Inter-American Commission concluded that the State is responsible for violating the rights of the child, the right to a name, to family protection, and to private and family life established in Articles 11.2, 17, 18, and 19 of the American Convention, in relation to Article 1.1 of the same instrument, to the detriment of Simeón Miguel Caballero Denegri. Similarly, the Commission determined the State's responsibility for the violation of the rights to judicial guarantees and judicial protection, contained in Articles 8 and 25 of the American Convention in relation to Article 1.1 of the same instrument, to the detriment of Simeón Miguel Caballero Denegri and Andrea Victoria Denegri Espinoza.

3. H.O.V.T. et al. v. Guatemala [195]

205. The case concerns the international responsibility of the State of Guatemala for illegal and arbitrary detentions, acts of harassment, and ill-treatment committed against M.I.V.T., F.L.V.T., H.O.V.T., Walter Haroldo Caña Chiroy, and Mario Lisandro Pocón, acts of sexual harassment against Claudia Torres, and the murder of H.O.V.T.

206. H.O.V.T. was 13 years old at the time of his death. Walter Haroldo Caña Chiroy and Mario Lisandro Pocón Ramos were 27 years old. Claudia Torres, H.O.V.T.'s mother, sold various products and frequently went to sell to National Civil Police (PNC) officers at the San Pedro Sacatepéquez station. Starting in 2004, Ms. Torres reported on several occasions that she was being sexually harassed by a PNC officer named Maquiz.

207. On October 4, 2004, H.O.V.T. was arrested for alleged involvement in aggravated robbery. On October 6, 2004, the First Juvenile Court ruled in his favor on a writ of habeas corpus, and he was released the following day, having been deprived of his liberty for three days. H.O.V.T. reported in an interview with the Public Defender's Office that, during his arrest, he was beaten by the police and received death threats. In particular, he stated that the police told him to raise his hands and, after he did so, they hit him on the head with something, causing him to cry. Similarly, when he was released, they threatened to kill him. For his part, F.L.V.T., also Mrs. Torres' son, stated that he was being harassed by the PNC.

208. On November 7, 2004, M.I.V.T., Walter Caña, and Mario Pocón were arrested inside the latter's residence by police officers for allegedly being involved in the crimes of aggravated robbery, kidnapping, and illegal possession of ammunition for firearms. On November 8, 2004, the mothers of the victims filed a complaint regarding this arrest with the PNC's Office of Professional Responsibility. In particular, Mrs. Torres stated that her son had been assaulted by PNC officers "as his face was swollen, and the other two detainees had also been assaulted without receiving medical assistance".

209. On June 14, 2005, the Eighth Judge of the First Criminal Court ordered the provisional closure of the proceedings, considering that "upon analyzing the case files, the judge has concluded that there is insufficient evidence to bring the present case to trial, and therefore the present proceedings should be closed and resolved in accordance with the law".

210. On February 12, 2005, unknown individuals fired shots at H.O.V.T. while he was walking in San Pedro Sacatepéquez, causing his death. Furthermore, in 2009, Mario Pocón was murdered. According to the petitioner, he had also been previously threatened by members of the PNC. On February 14, 2010, Walter Caña was murdered after receiving multiple gunshot wounds to the skull and chest in San Pedro Sacatepéquez.

211. The petitioner filed several complaints regarding the death of H.O.V.T., which led to the initiation of criminal proceedings by Agency 1 of the San Juan Sacatepéquez Prosecutor's Office of the Public Prosecutor's Office. On March 9, 2006, Ms. Torres filed a complaint with the Criminal Investigation Service of the PNC, stating that she believed her son's death was related to the problems they had had with the PNC. Regarding this investigation, the State stated that the case had been closed because the Public Prosecutor's Office had been unable to obtain the evidence and means of conviction necessary to identify and single out those responsible for the death of H.O.V.T., despite the various steps taken.

[195] In accordance with Article 17.2.a of the Commission's Rules of Procedure, Commissioner Edgar Stuardo Ralón Orellana, a Guatemalan national, did not participate in the discussion or decision on this matter.

212. Regarding the death of Mario Pocón, the State merely indicated that an investigation was launched in which a series of steps were taken. However, on April 2, 2019, the proceedings were closed because there was insufficient evidence to locate those allegedly responsible for his death. Finally, regarding the death of Walter Caña, the State indicated that, according to investigations by the PNC's Specialized Criminal Investigation Division of the Department of Crimes Against Life, the crime was presumably committed by members of the Security Committee of the Municipality of San Pedro Sacatepéquez, and the motive was possibly personal revenge. On January 15, 2019, the investigation was also closed due to insufficient evidence from the crime scene.

213. In its Merits Report No. 344/22, the Commission considered that the detention of H.O.V.T., the express and repeated death threats and threats of injury in the context of this detention, as well as the threats to his brother and parents, taken together and not having been refuted in an investigation, provided serious and sufficient evidence to conclude that state agents were involved in the death of H.O.V.T. The Commission noted that the State did not provide evidence to refute such serious allegations, nor did it offer a duly proven alternative hypothesis that would have led to the dismissal of the aforementioned evidence. Based on these considerations, the IACHR found that the State of Guatemala is responsible for the violation of the right to life of H.O.V.T. Similarly, given that the victim was a minor at the time of his death, the violation of his right to life also constituted a violation of his rights as a child.

214. The Commission also noted that the State did not deny knowledge of the alleged ill-treatment and did not provide an explanation for the victims' injuries. In this regard, to the extent that the injuries occurred while the victims were in State custody, the Commission indicated that it was incumbent upon the State to provide a satisfactory and convincing explanation of what had happened, which did not occur in the present case. For these reasons, the IACHR found that the State was responsible for violating the right to personal integrity of M.I.V.T., H.O.V.T., Mario Pocón, and Walter Caña.

215. On the other hand, with regard to the right to personal liberty, the Commission determined that the State did not prove that the arrests of H.O.V.T., M.I.V.T., Mario Pocón, and Walter Caña were made in flagrante delicto, nor is there an arrest warrant in the case file that would have authorized the legitimate restriction of their right to personal liberty. As for F.L.V.T., the IACHR noted that he reported that on several occasions the police detained him to search him and beat him for no reason, for which the State also failed to present any justification or evidence that would allow the Commission to conclude that these arrests were carried out in accordance with the guarantee of legality.

216. With regard to the arbitrariness of the detention, the IACHR considered that the methods used by the security agents were incompatible with respect for the fundamental rights recognized in the Convention, and that the detentions of the victims in this case were not only illegal but also arbitrary. In this regard, the Commission determined that the State had violated the right to personal liberty.

217. In addition, the IACHR noted that the facts remain in complete impunity, more than 17 years after the death of H.O.V.T., 13 years since the death of Mario Pocón, and 12 years since the death of Walter Caña. It therefore considered that the internal investigations and proceedings had not constituted effective remedies to guarantee access to justice, determine the truth of the facts, conduct a due diligence investigation, and ultimately punish those responsible. Therefore, the IACHR concluded that the State is responsible for the violation of the rights to judicial guarantees and judicial protection.

218. Regarding the alleged ill-treatment during the victims' detention and custody, the Commission observed that the State not only failed to refute the allegations of violations of personal integrity committed by its agents but also acknowledged in principle the possible responsibility of State agents in acts of aggression against the victims. Furthermore, although the State was aware of a series of ill-treatment committed against the victims, there is no record of it having initiated a criminal investigation to prosecute and punish those responsible, as would be required under the obligations imposed by both the American Convention and the Inter-American Convention to Prevent and Punish Torture. In view of this, the IACHR found that the State is responsible for violating the articles on judicial guarantees and judicial protection with respect to these acts as well.

219. In addition, the IACHR noted that no investigation was conducted into the allegations of sexual harassment allegedly committed by a police officer. On the contrary, according to Claudia Torres, these allegations led to reprisals that included harassment and threats against her children and, ultimately, in her opinion, the murder of her son H.O.V.T. by State agents. The Commission considered that the absolute failure to exercise enhanced due diligence in response to a complaint of sexual violence validated the violations arising from the harassment, particularly to physical and mental integrity, privacy, and the right to equality.

220. Finally, the Commission considered that the loss of their loved ones, as well as the absence of truth and justice, caused suffering and anguish to the detriment of the relatives of H.O.V.T., Mario Pocón, and Walter Caña, in violation of their right to mental and moral integrity.

221. Based on these factual and legal considerations, the Inter-American Commission concluded that the State is responsible for the violation of Articles 4.1 (right to life), 5.1, 5.2 (right to personal integrity), 7.1, 7.2, and 7.3 (right to personal liberty), 8.1 (judicial guarantees), 11 (protection of honor and dignity), 19 (rights of the child), 24 (equality before the law), and 25.1 (judicial protection) of the American Convention on Human Rights, in relation to the obligations established in Article 1.1 of the same instrument, as well as Article 7 b) of the Inter-American Convention on the Prevention, Punishment, and Eradication of Violence against Women (Convention of Belem do Para), in the terms described in the report. Similarly, the Commission concluded that the State is responsible for the violation of Articles 1, 6, and 8 of the Inter-American Convention to Prevent and Punish Torture to the detriment of H.O.V.T., M.I.V.T., Walter Caña Torres, and Mario Pocón.

4. Marcelo Fabian Nievas v. Argentina[196]

222. The case concerns Argentina's international responsibility for failing to effectively investigate, punish, and prosecute those responsible for the injuries that led to the death of Marcelo Fabián Nievas.

223. On November 22, 1981, Marcelo Fabián Nievas, 17, was found with a gunshot wound by a Federal Police officer on a street in the city of Caseros, Buenos Aires province. He told the officer that moments earlier three individuals had assaulted him with a firearm, and because he had refused to hand over a ring, they shot him, wounding him on the forehead.

224. That same day, he was admitted to the Alejandro Posadas National Hospital and underwent surgery. On November 28, 1981, the victim began to show signs of rapid and progressive sensory depression, tachypnea, cyanosis, pale skin and mucous membranes, and cold sweats, and he was transferred to the intensive care unit for these reasons. According to the information in the case file, the nurses who treated him in intensive care believed that he was suffering from sepsis or septic shock, so he was intubated and transferred to the Intensive Care Unit. On the night of November 28, 1981, Marcelo Nievas died while in that unit.

225. In November 1981, Julio Roberto Nievas, the victim's father, initiated proceedings under the heading "robbery and injury," with the intervention of the Criminal Judge of the Judicial Department of San Martín. Subsequently, the victim's father submitted a new communication, in which he informed the authorities of his son's death, reporting it to the intervening court.

226. On January 5, 1982, the victim's father filed a complaint for robbery with aggravated injury on November 22, 1981, and the death of Marcelo Nievas at Posadas Hospital for reasons he attributed to negligence on the part of the medical team. On March 23, 1982, a hearing was held in connection with that proceeding. On the same date, the criminal judge decided to provisionally dismiss the case, considering that despite having conducted "extensive evidentiary measures" aimed at clarifying the assaults suffered by the victim, no direct evidence attributable to any person had emerged. He also indicated that there was no prospect of continuing along a path that would lead to effective and reliable evidence specifically aimed at the purpose of the investigation.

227. The prosecution and the victim's parents appealed the decision to provisionally dismiss the case. On September 23, 1982, the judiciary found that a review of the case file revealed that seventeen witness statements were still pending. It also indicated that it was necessary to investigate the origin of the weapon, conduct an expert examination of a red Fiat vehicle, conduct a new expert examination of the victim's clothing, investigate the financial status of all the individuals involved, prepare detailed sketches of the premises, and conduct confrontations between the witnesses, among other things.

228. On March 4, 1993, it was decided to reopen the investigation in light of new evidence, consisting of a letter sent to the victim's parents by Sergio Rubén Benítez, an inmate at Olmos Prison Unit No. 1, in which he offered information about the case, identifying himself as an "eyewitness". As a result, interviews were conducted with the witness, which were recorded on cassette tapes and in which he stated that Guillermo Fox had given them money to intimidate a young man whom Ricardo Abda shot. He stated that, subsequently, both men dressed him and left him wounded on the public highway and that they reported the events to Guillermo Fox, who reprimanded them for the violence but told them that he would take care of the matter.

229. On May 11, 1993, the Judicial Branch of the Province of Buenos Aires decided to provisionally dismiss the case because it had not been possible to identify the perpetrator or perpetrators of the crime of aggravated robbery resulting in serious injury and the death of the victim. This decision was based on the self-incriminating nature of the statements made by the witness Sergio Rubén Benítez and his refusal to testify again, as well as on the fact that the judge had exhausted all available means to locate Ricardo Abda, and on the statements made by Teresa Balbina Monserrat and Guillermo Fox, who denied the statements made by Mr. Sergio Rubén Benítez. The decision was appealed by the victim's father, and on October 15, 1993, the Criminal and Correctional Appeals Chamber of San Martín confirmed the provisional dismissal of the case.

230. In its Merits Report No. 336/22, the Commission considered that the State had failed to fulfill its duty to investigate with due diligence and eventually punish those responsible for the acts in which the victim was injured and which subsequently led to his death.

231. The Commission noted that, despite the fact that forty years had passed since the complaint was filed, only a few proceedings were brought to the attention of the IACHR, which did not show that the authorities had conducted the investigation as a legal duty aimed at ascertaining the truth. In particular, the Commission noted that basic steps such as investigating the origin of the weapon that fired the shot that killed the victim and/or conducting a ballistics examination, conducting an expert examination of a vehicle that may have been involved, conducting a new examination of the victim's clothing, investigating the financial status of the persons involved, and conducting confrontations between the witnesses, among others, were not taken in a timely manner. In view of the above, the Commission considered that these elements allow inferring that there was a lack of due diligence in the investigations and that the preliminary investigation was concluded without all the necessary steps being taken to clarify the facts related to the shooting and robbery against the victim.

232. Furthermore, after analyzing the elements related to reasonable time, the Commission considered that the fact that forty years have passed since the complaint was filed without a final decision in this case is clearly contrary to that guarantee.

233. In addition, the IACHR noted that Marcelo Nievas was 17 years old when the investigation and criminal proceedings related to the injuries and robbery suffered on November 22, 1981, began. However, the Argentine State did not provide factual or legal information to prove that, throughout the investigations and criminal proceedings, the authorities in charge considered the victim's status as a minor. In particular, it did not provide documents proving that the judge in the criminal proceedings notified the juvenile advisor, nor was an official letter sent to that advisor when it became known that the victim had been admitted to a public hospital.

234. The Commission also had no information indicating that the juvenile advisor participated in the proceedings undertaken during the investigations, such as statements, expert reports, or procedural statements. Furthermore, the Commission had no information indicating that the decision to provisionally dismiss the case in 1993 was based on the opinion of the juvenile advisor. In this regard, the Commission considered that the State is responsible for violating the right to judicial protection and judicial guarantees to the detriment of the relatives of Marcelo Fabián Nievas. Similarly, considering that the specific circumstances in which the firearm was discharged against a teenager in the manner described above have not been diligently investigated, the Commission found that the State is responsible for violating the rights of child.

235. Finally, the IACHR found that the State violated the parents' right to mental and moral integrity due to their suffering and helplessness, given that after more than forty years they still do not know the cause of the gunshot wound that led to his hospitalization at Posadas Hospital and subsequently to his death.

236. Based on the findings of fact and law, the Commission concluded that the State is responsible for violating the rights of the child, the rights to judicial protection and judicial guarantees, as well as the right to personal integrity, established in Article VII of the American Declaration and in Articles 5.1 (personal integrity), 8.1 (judicial guarantees), 19 (rights of the child), and 25.1 (judicial protection) of the American Convention, in relation to the obligations established in Article 1.1 of the same instrument, to the detriment of Marcelo Fabián Nievas, Julio Roberto Nievas, and Rosalía González de Nievas.

5. Edivaldo Barbosa de Andrade et al. v. Brazil

237. The case concerns the international responsibility of the Brazilian State for extrajudicial executions and injuries committed by public officials in the state of São Paulo in 2006, as well as the situation of impunity for these acts.

238. Edivaldo Barbosa de Andrade, Fabio de Lima Andrade, Israel de Souza, Fernando Elza, and Eduardo Barbosa de Andrade were friends and neighbors who lived in the Parque Bristol neighborhood in São Paulo. On May 14, 2006, they were standing in front of Eduardo Barbosa's house when people in a vehicle shot at them. The multiple gunshots killed Fabio de Lima Andrade, Edivaldo Soares de Andrade, and Israel Alves de Souza, and injured Eduardo Barbosa Andrade and Fernando Elza. According to the petitioner, what happened that day took place in the context of police violence in São Paulo at the time of the events, known as the "May crimes" and committed by state agents.

239. According to Eduardo Barbosa de Andrade, the vehicle from which the individuals emerged was a dark green GM Vectra with no license plate. He stated that three individuals got out of the car and shot at the group, while one individual remained in the front. He explained that after the shooting, the three individuals returned to the vehicle. According to witness Israel Soares de Andrade, ten minutes after the victims were shot, two Military Police vehicles arrived at the scene and collected the shell casings and cartridges from the weapons that were on the ground.

240. According to the expert reports in the IACHR case file, i) Fabio de Lima Andrade was shot at least five times in the heart, lungs, and left shoulder, which caused his death; (ii) Israel Alves de Souza was shot approximately ten times in the chest, arms, and legs, which caused his death; and (iii) Edivaldo Soares de Andrade was shot five times in the spine and back, which caused his death. It was reported that Fabio and Israel were taken to the Emergency Hospital (Hospital do Sesi) and Saboya Hospital, where they died from their injuries. Edivaldo was taken to Heliópolis Hospital, where he died.

241. Eduardo Barbosa de Andrade was shot in various parts of his body and taken to the SESI Hospital and was later transferred to the Heliópolis Hospital where he underwent surgery. Fernando Elza stated that after being shot, he noticed that his foot had been hit, and since there was no one to help him, he took a bus and went to the Focus Hospital where he was treated.

242. Later, on December 3, 2006, Fernando Elza arrived at his home and parked his motorcycle when a person in a silver vehicle with unidentified license plates shot him. Fernando was rescued by two friends who put him in a vehicle to take him to a hospital. The vehicle in which Fernando and his friends were traveling collided with a light pole on the way to the hospital, and Mr. Elza died.

243. Two investigations were conducted into the events of this case, one into what happened on May 14, 2006, and one into what happened on December 3, 2006.

244. In relation to the events of May 14, 2006, in the early hours of May 15, Fernando Elza went to the 83rd Police Station in Parque Bristol to report the incident. The Civil Police recorded that 16 9 mm caliber cartridges, one 380 caliber cartridge, and several shell casings were seized. The events were also recorded as "intentional homicide" against Edivaldo Soares de Andrade, Fabio de Lima Andrade, and Israel Alves de Souza, and attempted homicide against Fernando Elza.

245. On November 5, the Civil Police published the final report of the investigation, which indicated that despite the steps taken, it was not possible to identify the perpetrators of the crime. On November 18, the São Paulo State Public Prosecutor's Office requested that the investigation be closed because the perpetrators of the crime could not be identified, adding that if new evidence came to light, the investigation could be reopened. On November 26, 2008, the Judiciary closed the case at the request of the Public Prosecutor's Office.

246. In relation to the death of Fernando Elza, on December 4, 2006, the Homicide Team of the 1st Civil Police Station launched a police investigation, in which statements were taken from the victim's mother, friends involved in the accident, and other witnesses. On July 13, the Civil Police Station issued a report on the investigation, indicating that it had learned from a media outlet that some of Fernando Elza's friends had information about what had happened, but that it had not been possible to obtain their statements. It was noted that, notwithstanding this, the investigations had been concluded and were ready to be sent to the judiciary. The parties did not provide additional information regarding progress in the investigation.

247. In its Merits Report No. 101/23, the Commission noted that there were various indications of the involvement of state agents in the events, including the presence of some testimonies that indicated that the persons responsible for the shooting were members of the military police, witnesses who identified that the vehicle used by the persons responsible had the same characteristics as one previously identified in a military police battalion, and that members of the military police arrived at the scene minutes after the incident without any call having been made to that entity. In addition, the Commission observed that the events took place in a context identified by international organizations as one of indiscriminate use of lethal force by military police officers.

248. The IACHR also noted that the State did not present information on compliance with the requirements of legitimate purpose, absolute necessity, and proportionality. On the contrary, at the time the events of the case occurred, there was no confrontation that would have justified the use of force, and the State authorities did not adopt less harmful measures than the use of lethal force. Furthermore, considering the large number of shots fired at each of the individuals, as evidenced by the documentary evidence, the Commission found that a disproportionate use of force was exercised. For these reasons, the Commission concluded that the State is responsible for the violation of the right to life of Edivaldo Barbosa de Andrade, Fabio de Lima Andrade, and Israel de Souza. Likewise, considering the suffering endured by the victims and the injuries sustained by Fernando Elza and Eduardo Barbosa de Andrade, the Commission concluded that the State is responsible for the violation of the right to personal integrity.

249. Finally, regarding the death of Fernando Elza, the IACHR noted that it occurred on December 3, 2006, more than six months after the events described above. In this regard, the Commission did not have sufficient information to rule on the alleged violation of Mr. Elza's right to life.

250. With regard to the investigation of the events that occurred on May 14, 2006, the IACHR observed that the information available in the case file does not indicate that any steps were taken to preserve the crime scene, analyze the bullets that struck the victims to determine whether they came from official weapons, or take statements from state agents who may have been at the scene. Similarly, during the investigation, no further steps were taken, nor were the logical lines of investigation related to the involvement of State agents examined or exhausted. In this regard, the Commission considered that, to date, a situation of impunity persists with respect to the facts of the case and that the State has failed in its duty to ensure an adequate investigation to identify and, where appropriate, punish all those responsible for the deaths of Edivaldo Barbosa de Andrade, Fabio de Lima Andrade, and Israel de Souza, and the injuries to Fernando Elza and Eduardo Barbosa de Andrade.

251. With regard to the investigation into the death of Fernando Elza, the IACHR found that the information provided in the case file does not indicate that any steps were taken to preserve the crime scene, analyze the bullets that struck the victim to determine whether they came from official weapons, or take statements from state agents who may have been at the scene. The Commission did not have information on the conduct of other proceedings or the pursuit of logical lines of investigation to determine the possible involvement of state agents or analyze any connection between what happened and the events of May 2006. For these reasons, the IACHR considered that, to date, there remains a situation of impunity for the events in this case and that the State has failed in its duty to guarantee an adequate investigation, within a reasonable time frame, in order to identify and, where appropriate, punish all those responsible for his death.

252. Consequently, with respect to both investigations, the Commission concluded that the State violated the rights to judicial guarantees and judicial protection.

253. Finally, the IACHR considered that the deaths and injuries of the victims in a situation such as that described in this case, as well as the absence of a complete and effective investigation, which in turn causes suffering and anguish from not knowing the truth, constitutes in itself an attack on the psychological and moral integrity of all their relatives. Consequently, the Commission concluded that the State violated the right to mental and moral integrity to the detriment of the relatives.

254. Based on these considerations of fact and law, the IACHR concluded that the State of Brazil is responsible for the violation of the rights to life, personal integrity, judicial guarantees, and judicial protection established in Articles 4.1, 5.1, 8.1, and 25.1 of the American Convention on Human Rights, in relation to Article 1.1 of the same instrument.

6. Persons not involved in criminal cases admitted to Federico Mora Hospital v. Guatemala [197]

255. The case concerns the international responsibility of the State of Guatemala for various violations of the rights of persons not involved in criminal cases and internet at the Federico Mora Hospital.

256. The Federico Mora Hospital is the only public facility in Guatemala that provides outpatient care and hospitalization to persons with mental health needs, receiving persons from throughout the country. The information available to the IACHR indicates that this institution houses two populations: (a) persons involved in criminal cases who have a psychiatric condition, called "forensic detainees," who are under the jurisdiction of the Penitentiary System, and (b) persons not involved in criminal cases, who are in the custody of the Ministry of Health. At the time the petition was filed, forensic detainees who were in pretrial detention were guarded by the National Civil Police, and those who had been convicted were guarded by Penitentiary System guards. Both agents were armed.

[197] In accordance with Article 17.2.a of the Commission's Rules of Procedure, Commissioner Edgar Stuardo Ralón Orellana, a Guatemalan national, did not participate in the discussion or decision on this matter.

257. According to the petitioner, many of the persons not involved in criminal cases and admitted to Federico Mora remain there against their will and even against medical recommendations. This is mainly due to the country's mental health policy, which denies the legal capacity of persons with disabilities and allows for their involuntary hospitalization, and to the lack of community service systems and public support to facilitate their integration into society. In addition, discharge from Federico Mora must be approved by the Judiciary, which leads to problems of access to justice and reasonable time frames.

258. In addition, according to the evidence presented in the proceedings, persons admitted to that institution have suffered various violations of their rights, including: (i) the conditions in which the hospital is located; (ii) systematic physical and sexual abuse, regarding which the petitioner emphasized that any person admitted, whether male or female, is at real and imminent risk of physical and sexual abuse by armed guards from the National Civil Police and the prison system, forensic detainees, and institution staff; iii) the use of isolation rooms and the use of physical and chemical restraints; and iv) the lack of individualized treatment for therapeutic purposes, necessary medical care, and programs aimed at social reintegration or reinsertion.

259. In addition to the mental health policy and the conditions described above, which are detrimental to persons not involved in criminal cases who are interned in that institution, the petitioner reported in particular on the conditions of internment of María "X", Ricardo, and Estuardo Kostelecki García.

260. María "X" is a woman diagnosed with residual schizophrenia who was involuntarily admitted to Federico Mora on September 3, 2002, by court order. After months of hospitalization, the medical team recommended her discharge as soon as possible. Despite having expressed her desire to leave, she has been prevented from doing so because, according to the State, no relatives had been identified.

261. For their part, brothers Ricardo and Estuardo Kostelecki García had been diagnosed with paranoid schizophrenia. In 2011, neighbors in the area reported the brothers to the Environmental Crimes Prosecutor's Office for the foul odor and environmental pollution coming from their property. The Fifth Criminal Court requested, within the framework of that case, that Federico Mora take in the brothers. On October 12, 2011, the Kostelecki brothers were admitted to the hospital. On February 8, 2012, they underwent a psychiatric evaluation, which recommended their discharge from the hospital and the provision of outpatient care, with supervision by a family member. Despite this, on July 20, 2012, the Judiciary decided to hospitalize them indefinitely. On March 26, 2014, the Kostelecki brothers were discharged from the Mental Health Hospital. However, on January 15, 2015, they ran away from their guardian's home, claiming that she mistreated them and had taken out loans in their name. In March 2017, Ricardo Kostelecki was diagnosed with diabetes. Ricardo died on January 4, 2018, as a result of cardiac arrest related to the disease.

262. In August 2017, the IACHR visited Federico Mora Hospital as part of its on-site visit to Guatemala. In this regard, the Commission reiterated that "the situation prevailing in that hospital reflects the lack of protection for persons with disabilities in Guatemala". Specifically, it noted that it has information "the conditions of the hospital continue to be unsanitary and unhealthy, thus fostering infectious diseases and posing an immediate threat to the health and lives of the patients". It also noted the separation of inmates involved in criminal cases from the general population and a notable reduction in the presence of custodial guards, although it indicated that it does not consider these measures to be sufficient to fully guarantee the life and integrity of the patients at Federico Mora.

263. In its Admissibility and Merits Report No. 365/22, the Commission examined Guatemala's State regulations and mental health policy applicable to the alleged victims in order to determine whether they were compatible with human rights protection standards.

264. First, the IACHR noted that the domestic regulatory framework, including the Civil Code and the Civil and Commercial Procedural Code, establishes that persons with mental disabilities are deprived of discernment and must be "interdicted," exercising their rights through their guardian or tutor. In the case of persons admitted to a social welfare facility, such as Federico Mora, the legislation dispenses with the interdiction procedure and automatically appoints the director of the facility as the person's guardian and legal representative. In addition, the Commission highlighted that Guatemalan legislation empowers the court to order, either ex officio or at the request of a party, the transfer of any person to a mental health institution when it deems it necessary to "guarantee the safety of persons, protect them from mistreatment or from acts disapproved by law, morality, or good customs" or when dealing with persons it considers abandoned.

265. In this regard, the IACHR noted that, according to the information provided, mental health care is not integrated into general health services, and that the State does not provide community services or public support systems for persons with mental disabilities to facilitate their full integration into society on an equal basis.

266. In this regard, the Commission considered that Guatemalan legislation denies the legal capacity of persons with mental disabilities, imposing a regime of absolute incapacity based on substitute decision-making, according to which persons cannot exercise their rights directly. The IACHR considered that this regime is, in itself, contrary to the rights to recognition of legal personality, equality and non-discrimination, and judicial protection.

267. With regard to access to justice for persons with disabilities, the Commission noted that in chronic wards, no one had public or private legal counsel. The Office of the Ombudsman for Persons with Disabilities has expressed its technical difficulties due to the lack of support from other institutions, including the Institute of Public Legal Defense. The inability to directly access the courts and the lack of legal counsel significantly affect their ability to be released. In this regard, the Commission affirmed that conditioning release on authorization by the Judiciary is contrary to the State's obligations under the American Convention and that the violation of the right of access to justice is intrinsically related to their right to personal liberty.

268. Similarly, the Commission noted that Guatemalan law and mental health policy are reflected in the specific situation of persons not involved in criminal cases who are admitted to the Federico Mora Hospital. In particular, the Commission noted that a determinable group of individuals are confined in the hospital against their will and even against medical recommendations, unable to leave until authorized by the Judiciary. In this regard, the IACHR noted that, despite the fact that in 2014, it was estimated that approximately 75% of those admitted could leave if they had access to adequate support and services in the community, and that in 2022 Federico Mora estimated that 347 of the approximately 282 people admitted were in a condition to be discharged, an alarming percentage of these individuals remain hospitalized.

269. Regarding the right to informed consent, the IACHR noted that the fact that persons with disabilities are involuntarily admitted to Federico Mora and lose their legal capacity as a result of such admission constitutes a clear and arbitrary interference with the right to privacy. In this regard, the Commission observed that it was not demonstrated in the present case that the victims had given their consent freely, without threats or coercion, inducement, or improper incentives, expressed after obtaining adequate, complete, reliable, understandable, and accessible information. On the contrary, based on the considerations already presented on the regulations and policy in this area, the information available to the IACHR indicated that in the present case, the victims' actual or perceived disability was understood as an inability to determine for themselves.

270. The IACHR observed that the effect of Guatemala's regulations and general policy on persons with mental disabilities was particularly evident in the case of the brothers Ricardo and Estuardo Kostelecki García and María "X" or María Coronado, who lived integrated into society until they were placed in indefinite hospitalization.

271. In this regard, the Commission noted that the Guatemalan State maintains a model of substitution in decision-making for persons with disabilities, which still retains a definition and approach to disability from a medical perspective that emphasizes the restriction of capacities and overlooks the social and relational dimension of disability. In view of this, the IACHR noted that persons with disabilities are deprived of their capacity to act and, therefore, their ability to directly exercise their rights; they are deprived of their liberty on the grounds of their disability; and they are deprived of the possibility of directly challenging their confinement or the conditions thereof. In this regard, the Commission considered that the State of Guatemala violated the rights to equality and non-discrimination, to recognition of legal capacity (as a component of the right to recognition of legal personality), to personal liberty, and to judicial protection.

272. With regard to the general conditions of detention, the IACHR noted the conditions in which Federico Mora was until the date the petition was filed, including the use of physical and chemical restraints on the victims, and concluded that the State did not provide the basic conditions to protect the right to a dignified life for those detained at Federico Mora. The Commission considered that both the general conditions of the facility and the medical care provided fell significantly short of those that are adequate for offering dignified treatment and were, in themselves, incompatible with adequate protection of personal integrity and life.

273. Likewise, the IACHR noted that there is a context of violence against the people interned at Federico Mora, as well as subjection to isolation rooms and physical and chemical restraints, which is even more serious considering the vulnerable situation of the people interned at the institution and the asymmetrical power situation. Additionally, the Commission considered that the State has not provided the victims with adequate health services, nor has it provided them with adequate rehabilitation and social reintegration services that would allow them to exercise their legal capacity on equal terms.

274. In this regard, the IACHR concluded that the State of Guatemala is responsible for the violation of the right to life, personal integrity, and health.

275. With regard to sexual violence, the Commission highlighted the existence of complaints of sexual violence against persons admitted to the hospital and not involved in criminal cases. Furthermore, after a comprehensive analysis of the information provided in the proceedings, the IACHR observed the existence of systematic acts of sexual violence of various kinds, including rape, committed directly by State agents, as well as by private individuals with the acquiescence, tolerance, and collaboration of State agents. The IACHR considered that the rape inflicted on the victims of rape at Federico Mora meets the constituent elements of torture. For these reasons, it concluded that the State failed to comply with its obligations to respect and guarantee the rights of the victims regarding sexual violence. It also considered that Guatemala failed to comply with its obligations regarding sexual torture and did not effectively fulfill its duty to investigate with due diligence the acts of sexual violence against the victims.

276. For these reasons the Commission affirmed that the State of Guatemala is responsible for violating the rights to personal integrity, judicial guarantees, privacy, equality before the law, and judicial protection.

277. Based on these considerations of fact and law, the Inter-American Commission concluded that the State is responsible for violating the rights established in Articles 3, 4, 5, 7, 8, 11, 24, 25, and 26 of the American Convention, in relation to the obligations established in Articles 1.1 and 2 of the same instrument, to the detriment of the victims. It also concluded that the State of Guatemala is responsible for violating Articles 1, 6, and 8 of the Inter-American Convention to Prevent and Punish Torture and Article 7(b) of the Convention of Belém do Pará, to the detriment of the victims.

7. Dismissed PETROPERU workers v. Peru [198]

278. The case relates to the international responsibility of the Peruvian State due to the irregular dismissal of workers from their positions as employees of Petróleos del Perú (hereinafter "Petroperú") beginning in 1992 in a context of disruption of the democratic order.

[198] Commissioner Carlos Bernal Pulido requested to abstain from participating in the discussion and decision on this matter, which was accepted by the IACHR, in accordance with Article 17.3 of its Rules of Procedure.

279. The facts of the present case occurred in the same general context previously developed by the Commission in its Merits Report No. 14/15 related to collective dismissals carried out by Petroperú based on a plan to rationalize the workforce under Decree Law No. 26120.

280. In 1990, Alberto Fujimori assumed the presidency of Peru. Both the Commission and the Inter-American Court in the Case of the Dismissed Congressional Employees (Aguado Alfaro et al.) v. Peru identified multiple irregular dismissals in the public sector. In 1991, Legislative Decree No. 674 was issued, declaring the promotion of private investment in state-owned enterprises to be in the national interest. Then, in 1992, Decree Law No. 26120 was enacted, authorizing economic, financial, legal, and administrative restructuring, as well as the rationalization of personnel in those enterprises. In particular, the decree allowed enterprises to initiate voluntary termination programs with or without incentives.

281. On January 3, 1996, Supreme Decree 072-95-PCM was adopted, authorizing Petroperú to implement a worker rationalization plan under the provisions of Decree Law No. 26120. On January 30, 1996, the Single Union of Petroleum Workers of Peru submitted a communication to the head of the Talara Regional Labor Office reporting the alleged irregularity of the staff reduction process that was being carried out on the basis of the legislation adopted, to which, according to the petitioners, they received no response.

282. During January 1996, the victims began to receive notarized letters inviting them to participate in a voluntary retirement program, or else be dismissed. On February 6, 1996, the victims received notarized letters from Petroperú stating that, since they had not accepted the incentive retirement program, their employment with the company was terminated. The following day, the union went to the Labor Authority to report that, since the Labor Authority had not opened a case and subsequently notified the union of it, the workers' right to defense and due process had been violated, without receiving a response.

283. The union also filed an appeal for protection against the state and the company PETROPERÚ, requesting the suspension of Supreme Decree No. 072-95-PCM on the grounds that it violated their right to work. On March 18, 1996, the Specialized Civil Court of Talara dismissed the appeal. The union appealed, and on July 3, 1996, the Second Civil Chamber of the Superior Court of Piura upheld the appealed ruling. In addition, the union filed an administrative action requesting that the resolutions of the Directorate for the Prevention and Resolution of Labor Conflicts and the Regional Directorate of Piura be declared null and void. On February 26, 1996, the Second Chamber of the Superior Court of Piura dismissed the appeal on the grounds that the petition was "legally impossible".

284. Following the establishment of the transitional government in 2000, laws and administrative regulations were enacted providing for the review of collective dismissals to give dismissed public sector workers the opportunity to claim their rights. The Special Review Commissions created under this regulatory framework have determined that the dismissals of thousands of people were arbitrary. However, according to the petitioner, the victims in this case have not received any benefits or compensation for the arbitrary dismissal they suffered.

285. In its Admissibility and Merits Report No. 396/20, the Commission noted that in its judgment in the case of Dismissed Employees of Petroperú et al. v. Peru, the Inter-American Court analyzed the collective dismissals of former Petroperú workers and concluded that the State had violated the rights to judicial guarantees, judicial protection, and work. In this regard, the IACHR considered that the Court's ruling was applicable to the victims identified in the present case because it involved the same factual basis and concluded that the State was responsible for the violation of the rights to judicial guarantees and judicial protection.

286. The Commission also noted that the State acknowledged the existence of possible irregularities in the procedures applied to the collective dismissal decisions adopted in the context of this case, to the extent that it even took subsequent internal measures aimed at protecting those labor rights. It also noted that, 24 years after the events took place, none of these subsequent State measures had been applied to the situation of the victims in the case, nor is it known why the victims would not meet the conditions of such measures. The IACHR also found no evidence in the case file that would allow it to analyze the specific application of labor guarantees in the context of collective dismissals, which is particularly relevant given the State's control over the public company where these individuals worked. Therefore, it recognized that these elements, viewed together and objectively, reasonably indicate the existence of deficiencies in the collective dismissal procedures to the detriment of the victims' right to work, as well as the subsequent lack of judicial protection.

287. Similarly, the Commission recalled that the Inter-American Court of Human Rights had already analyzed the violation of the right to work in relation to the facts of the present case in its judgment in the case of the Dismissed Employees of Petroperú et al. v. Peru and referred to the Honorable Court's statement that the victims' lack of access to an effective judicial remedy also resulted in a violation of the right to work, insofar as access to justice and effective judicial protection are essential components of that right. Taking all of the above into account, the IACHR concluded that the State is responsible for the violation of the right to judicial guarantees, judicial protection, and the right to work.

288. Based on the findings of fact and law, the Commission concluded that the Peruvian State is responsible for the violation of the rights established in Articles 8.1 (judicial guarantees), 25.1 (judicial protection), and 26 (right to work) of the American Convention on Human Rights, in relation to the obligations established in Article 1.1 of the same instrument.

8. Katya Natalia Miranda Jiménez and family v. El Salvador

289. The case concerns the international responsibility of El Salvador for the murder and rape of Katya Miranda Jiménez, as well as for its failure to investigate, prosecute, and punish those responsible for these acts.

290. Katya Natalia Miranda Jiménez was born on March 13, 1990, was 9 years old at the time of the events, was a student, and was in third grade. On April 3, 1999, Miranda Jiménez went on a family trip to a property near Los Blancos beach, in the jurisdiction of San Luis Herradura, in the department of La Paz, El Salvador. In the afternoon, her mother left for the city of San Salvador, leaving her daughters at the beach at the request of the girls' father. At approximately 9 p.m., Katya and Gina Miranda Jiménez lay down in a tent where they were going to sleep with their father. Near this tent, their grandfather, Mr. Carlos Miranda, lay down in a hammock, and the other members of the group slept in nearby cars, all within a radius of approximately 20 meters.

291. In the early hours of April 4, 1999, Katya was abducted from the tent where she was sleeping and from the property where her family was staying and was raped and murdered. The results of the autopsy performed on the girl's body revealed that her corpse had no underwear or pants and determined that the cause of death was suffocation by asphyxiation, given that her airways contained sand and injuries such as scratches, tears, and bruises were found on her face and genital area, which had been inflicted prior to her death. Two police officers arrived at the scene, ruled out the possibility that the death had occurred in violent circumstances, and limited themselves to guarding the body, but did not observe criminal investigation methods.

292. The State initiated two criminal proceedings in connection with Katya's rape and murder. The first proceeding began on January 21, 2000, when the Attorney General's Office filed a formal complaint with the Justice of the Peace against the girl's grandfather for the crimes of aggravated homicide and rape and aggravated sexual assault, against Edwin Miranda, the girl's father, for the crime of abandonment and neglect, and against two security guards employed by Mr. Carlos Miranda Gonzáles for the crime of concealment to the detriment of judicial activity.

293. On October 13, 2000, the investigating judge issued a ruling definitively dismissing the case against Katya's father and provisionally dismissing the case against her grandfather and the other two defendants, considering that "there are situations that have not been established, there is not enough evidence to bring the case to trial". Consequently, the judge ordered the Public Prosecutor's Office to carry out further investigative procedures, such as expanding the testimony and identifying other persons who could be relevant to the investigation, for which a period of one year was established.

294. On October 18 of that same year, the Prosecutor's Office filed an appeal against this ruling, arguing that the investigating judge had improperly assessed the evidence. On November 7, 2000, the Third Chamber of the Center upheld the October 13, 2000 ruling, stating that "there is insufficient evidence to support the indictment, but there is a possibility that other evidence may be added". A year later, on October 15, 2001, the Investigating Court of San Luis Talpa upheld the final dismissal. This was because the probability of the defendants' participation in the events had not been established, and the one-year period granted to the Prosecutor's Office to carry out these investigative proceedings had already elapsed without the Prosecutor's Office having effectively contributed new evidence to the proceedings.

295. Regarding the second judicial proceeding, the Commission noted that little information about it can be gleaned from the case file. However, it is known that in this proceeding, the Prosecutor's Office focused on a different hypothesis about what happened to the girl Katya Miranda Jiménez, asserting that her grandfather had orchestrated the kidnapping to take revenge on an individual who owed him money and to blame that individual for the girl's kidnapping. On March 23, 2011, the Zacatecoluca Sentencing Court in the department of La Paz convicted Mr. Carlos Miranda as the perpetrator of the crime of kidnapping against the girl and convicted five other individuals as necessary accomplices to the same crime. This ruling was overturned by the Supreme Court of Justice on September 24, 2014, in a decision that resolved an appeal.

296. In its Merits Report No. 395/22, the Commission observed that, according to the evidence presented in the case, such as the autopsy and body removal reports, Katya Natalia Miranda Jiménez was raped and died of asphyxiation by suffocation, and that the State, in its arguments on the merits, indicated that the results of the investigative proceedings established a violation of the girl's right to life and integrity.

297. The IACHR considered that because of the rape and suffering that amounted to torture, as well as her murder, the victim's rights to life, personal integrity, privacy, and the rights of the child were severely affected. Although the Commission did not have sufficient evidence to attribute this act to the State, it recalled that, as a result of the State's obligations under the American Convention, the Belém do Pará Convention, and the Inter-American Convention to Prevent and Punish Torture, the State had a duty to investigate such acts diligently and within a reasonable time, as well as to punish those responsible.

298. In this regard, the Commission noted that El Salvador failed in its obligation to act with due diligence in investigating acts of violence against women, a situation aggravated by its failure to implement measures during the investigation that took into account the age and status of the victim as a child. Furthermore, the Commission also considered it proven that the State's activities in terms of prosecution and punishment had exceeded a reasonable time frame, given that this was not a complex case and that the judicial proceedings had not been affected by an excess of appeals and/or formalities. The Commission also emphasized that the failure of State authorities to exercise due diligence in the investigation not only constitutes an autonomous violation but has also made it impossible for the judicial proceedings to achieve adequate results within a reasonable time frame.

299. The IACHR added that, in addition to the above, there was a violation of the right to equality due to the stereotypical comments made by the judicial authority about Hilda Jiménez and her role as Katya Miranda Jiménez's mother, and the State's failure to take measures that took into account her status as a child, thus also violating her rights of the child. In view of all this, it observed that the State failed to guarantee, through a diligent investigation and criminal proceedings, the rights that were affected as a result of the rape, torture, and murder to which the victim was subjected.

300. Consequently, the Commission considered that the State had failed to investigate, prosecute, and punish the facts of the present case with due diligence, in violation of the rights to judicial guarantees, judicial protection, and the rights of the child, in relation to the right to life, personal integrity, and private life, as well as the duty to investigate acts of violence against women and the duty to investigate acts of torture.

301. Additionally, the IACHR held that Hilda Jiménez and her daughter Gina Miranda Jiménez were affected by the murder and rape suffered by their daughter and sister, and by the State's failure to fulfill its obligations to investigate, prosecute, and punish these acts. This was further aggravated by discriminatory statements directed against Hilda Jiménez during the first criminal proceedings and by threats they received after reporting failures in the investigation of the case, which led them to seek political asylum in the United States. In this regard, the Commission determined that the State is responsible for violating the right to personal integrity and the right to freedom of movement and residence.

302. Finally, the Commission stated that, in this specific case, the actions of private individuals have led to the State's responsibility for violating Article 2 of the Convention, as it has not yet adopted the necessary measures to guarantee the rights of women and girls to live free from violence.

303. The Inter-American Commission concluded that the State is responsible for violating the rights to judicial guarantees, judicial protection, equality before the law, and the rights of the child, in relation to the rights to life, personal integrity, and privacy, in accordance with Articles 8, 25, 24, and 19 in relation to Articles 4.1, 5.1, and 11, as well as the obligations established in Articles 1 and 2 of the American Convention. Likewise, the State is responsible for the violation of Articles 5 and 22.1 of the American Convention, Article 8 of the Convention to Prevent and Punish Torture, and Article 7 of the Belém do Pará Convention, in the terms described in the report.

9. Adrián Hernando Brunettini v. Argentina[199]

304. The case concerns the international responsibility of the Argentine State for the death of Adrián Hernando Brunettini on December 24, 1993, at the hands of police officers, as well as for the impunity of these acts.

305. Adrián Brunettini was 16 years old, lived in the province of Buenos Aires, and worked in his father's shoe store. On December 24, 1993, he was riding a motorcycle with his friend Guillermo Andrés Casas near Ciudad Evita. As they drove by, they passed a patrol car where police officers Gerardo Rodolfo Azame and Horacio Albino Morales were sitting.

306. According to the petitioner, the police officers asked them to stop, so they slowed down to park, and without any prior warning, a police officer fired a shot into the air, which caused great fear in the young Brunettini, who decided to continue driving on the motorcycle. The petitioner stated that the police officers began to shoot directly at the individuals, and that one of the bullets fired by Mr. Albino struck Guillermo Casas in the right shoulder, passing through to Adrián Brunettini's skull, causing his instant death.

307. Initially, the police officers involved claimed that the shots were fired in response to an alleged attack by the young Brunettini with a firearm. However, this version of events was dismissed by a legal ruling from the Argentine Ministry of Justice and Human Rights, which indicated that the police officers involved had staged a confrontation to justify what had happened. There is no dispute between the parties that the young Brunettini died as a result of a gunshot.

308. The criminal investigation was initiated on the same day before Transition Court No. 2 of the judicial department of Morón. According to the legal opinion of Argentina's Ministry of Justice and Human Rights, the case was initially characterized as "resistance to authority and abuse of weapons" by the young Brunettini. According to statements made by Brunettini's parents, police officers altered the crime scene, even placing a firearm near his body. They explained that when prosecutors arrived at the crime scene, they did not conduct a fingerprint analysis of the weapon and did not test the victim's hands for gunpowder residue.

[199] In accordance with Article 17.2.a of the Commission's Rules of Procedure, Commissioner Andrea Pochak, an Argentine national, did not participate in the discussion or decision on this matter.

309. On November 29, 2006, Transition Court No. 2 of the judicial department of Morón issued a ruling sentencing police officer Horacio Morales to fourteen years in prison, legal accessories and costs, and special disqualification from holding any public office and from owning or carrying a firearm for a period of five years. The court found him guilty of the crime of manslaughter of Adrián Brunettini and attempted manslaughter of Guillermo Casas. Mr. Morales was released from prison on April 4, 2011, on bail, without any reasons being given for his release.

310. The first instance ruling was appealed, and on November 8, 2011, Chamber III of the Court of Cassation issued a decision modifying Mr. Morales' sentence to eleven years in prison. The Chamber confirmed Mr. Morales as the perpetrator of the crimes of manslaughter and attempted manslaughter, arising from the same conduct. No information was provided on whether Mr. Morales was re-arrested and whether he served the sentence imposed. In this regard, Teresa Caffaro, the mother of the young Brunettini, stated that Mr. Morales was not re-arrested and added that "my son's murderer was sentenced to 14 years and only served four because he was a police officer".

311. The petitioner reported that it has filed several appeals in the domestic proceedings before various bodies in order to challenge the decisions of the judicial authorities and prevent the situation of impunity surrounding the death of young Brunettini, without obtaining positive results. Since December 15, 2017, the criminal case has been closed.

312. On June 10, 1999, the relatives of young Brunettini filed a civil suit for damages against the Buenos Aires Police. On December 20, 2012, the Civil and Commercial Court issued a final judgment ordering the defendant to pay the sum of $180,000 plus interest. On April 10, 2014, the Second Appeals Chamber increased the amount of compensation for loss of opportunity to a total of $89,180, and the amount for moral damages to $178,360. On December 23, 2014, the Appeals Chamber increased the amount awarded for compensation for loss of opportunity and for moral damages. With regard to the actual payment of the compensation, the petitioner pointed out that it had not been paid in full and that it had been affected by the economic crisis in Argentina, which was disputed by the State.

313. In its Admissibility and Merits Report No. 100/23, the Commission considered that there was no dispute between the parties that the death of Adrián Brunettini was caused by a police officer, which was confirmed internally by a conviction. It also considered that there were irregularities in the investigation. Among other elements, the IACHR noted the manipulation of the crime scene, the placement of a firearm next to the body of the young Brunettini to make it appear as if there had been a confrontation, the lack of evidence to determine whether the weapon had been fired, and the statement taken from a witness presented by the police who initially confirmed that it was an armed confrontation but later claimed that the police officers had pressured him to give that version of events. The Commission also noted multiple elements that rule out a confrontation between the victim and the police officers that would justify the use of lethal force.

314. In this regard, the IACHR determined that in the present case, the State did not demonstrate that its officers had used legitimate, necessary, and proportionate force, which led to the death of young Brunettini. Thus, considering his death and prior suffering as a result of the multiple gunshots fired before he was killed, the Commission concluded that Argentina is responsible for the violation of the rights to life and personal integrity. Furthermore, the Commission considered that, given that the victim was 16 years old at the time of the events, the State violated its duty to provide special protection to children.

315. In addition, the Commission analyzed whether, in this case, the State conducted a serious and diligent investigation to clarify the circumstances surrounding the death of Adrián Brunettini, and whether this investigation was carried out within a reasonable time. The IACHR noted that the State did not present documentation proving that it had taken appropriate steps immediately after the events occurred, such as properly handling the crime scene, removing and treating the victim's body, performing an autopsy, and maintaining the chain of custody for all forensic evidence. On the contrary, it observed that police officers were involved in altering the crime scene, which constituted a serious breach of their duty of due diligence.

Furthermore, the initial investigations focused on supporting the police officers' version of events, which was that there had been a confrontation with Mr. Brunettini and his companion.

316. The Commission noted that the petitioners reported that several requests were made to the judicial authorities to carry out "investigative proceedings," which were repeatedly denied, a fact that was not disputed by the State, and that there was procedural inactivity on the part of the judicial authorities for long periods of time. In this regard, the IACHR concluded that, although the person responsible for the death of Adrián Brunettini was sentenced to imprisonment by the authorities, there were certain deficiencies and irregularities in the domestic proceedings that led to that conviction, which constitute separate violations of the rights to judicial guarantees and judicial protection.

317. With regard to the guarantee of a reasonable time, the Commission highlighted that the criminal proceedings lasted almost 24 years, from the death of young Brunettini in 1993 until the case was closed in 2017, more than 20 years after the events occurred. In this regard, the Commission determined that the criminal proceedings did not comply with a reasonable time, for which the State is responsible for the violation of the right to judicial guarantees.

318. Finally, the Commission considered that the loss of a loved one in circumstances such as those described in this report, as well as the absence of truth and justice, caused suffering and anguish to the family members of young Brunettini, and therefore the State is responsible for the violation of the right to personal integrity.

319. Based on the findings of fact and law, the Inter-American Commission concluded that the Argentine State is responsible for the violation of Articles 4.1 (right to life), 5.1 (right to personal integrity), 8.1 (judicial guarantees), 19 (rights of the child), and 25.1 (judicial protection) of the American Convention on Human Rights, in relation to the obligations established in Article 1.1 of the same instrument, to the detriment of the victims identified in the various sections of the report.

10. José Vicente, Clara Vilma, and Juana Noemí Rivas v. El Salvador

320. The case concerns the international responsibility of El Salvador for the forced disappearance committed by agents of the Armed Forces to the detriment of the siblings José Vicente, Clara Vilma, Juana Noemy, Gladys Suleyma, and Norma, all with the surname Rivas, as well as for the failure to investigate and provide redress for those acts.

321. The events in this case occurred in the context of the internal armed conflict that took place in El Salvador. José Vicente, Clara Vilma, Juana Noemy, Gladys Suleyma, and Norma Rivas were five siblings, children of Nicolasa Rivas Ángel and Alberto Clímaco Hernández. In August 1982, they were eleven, nine, six, five, and three years old, respectively.

322. In the context of the internal armed conflict, the victims' mother, Nicolasa Rivas, stated that she suffered persecution by the Armed Forces in 1982. According to her statements, this took place in the context of an operation carried out on the Chinchontepec volcano, "with aerial bombardments and then machine-gunning and persecution by soldiers". Ms. Rivas stated that "one day at approximately five o'clock in the morning, while fleeing in a place known as 'Las Pilitas,' they were surrounded by soldiers who shot at them (...) She ran toward a fence with her daughter Doris Idalia Rivas, then one year old, and separated from the rest of her family, managing to survive; and that the children's father, Alberto Clímaco, fled with José Vicente, Juana Noemí, Vilma, Norma, and Gladis Suleyma Rivas (...) Later, she heard a helicopter land where the rest of her family had stayed (...) Alberto Clímaco and several other people told the witness [Ms. Rivas] that they returned to the site days later and found several bodies, but her children José Vicente, Juana Noemí, Vilma, Norma, and Gladis Zuleyma were not found, either alive or dead, to this day."

323. The names of the five children in this case were included as victims of the armed conflict in the report prepared by the Truth Commission and in the report of the Office of the Human Rights Ombudsman, the latter issued on September 2, 2004.

324. In October 2007, the petitioner initiated three habeas corpus proceedings on behalf of the Rivas siblings for their alleged forced disappearance, against members of the now-defunct Atlacatl Battalion and the Fifth Infantry Brigade, both belonging to the Armed Forces of El Salvador.

325. The Constitutional Chamber of the Supreme Court of Justice (CSJ), in its ruling on the combined habeas corpus proceedings numbers 203-2007, 204-2007, and 205-2007, dated July 27, 2011, found that the forced disappearance of José Vicente, Clara Vilma, and Juana Noemy Rivas had been proven, understanding that it "is attributable to agents of the State" and requested that the Attorney General's Office continue with the investigation. Likewise, through resolution of habeas corpus proceeding number 119-2016 of December 6, 2017, it ruled "that it is established that the girls Gladys Suleyma and Norma, both Clímaco Rivas, at the time of their disappearance, were in the department of San Vicente, during the military operation known as 'Invasión Anillo' that took place in the vicinity of the Chichontepec volcano, and that they were involuntarily disappeared at the hands of military personnel who participated in the operation, specifically in August 1982, when they were fleeing with their relatives, and that since that event they have not been located alive or dead by their relatives to date". Consequently, it was ordered to request information about the military operation in question from the Ministry of National Defense and the Joint Chief of Staff of the Armed Forces.

326. Following the Supreme Court's ruling in the case of José Vicente, Juana Noemy, and Clara Vilma Rivas, the National Commission for the Search for Children Disappeared during the Internal Armed Conflict opened an investigation into the case of the Rivas siblings on March 28, 2012. The Attorney General's Office reported that it had conducted investigative proceedings and on September 29, 2017, indicated that "this case is still in the investigation phase".

327. In its Merits Report No. 396/22, the Commission considered that the elements constituting enforced disappearance had been verified in this case and found that the Rivas siblings had been abducted by members of the Armed Forces in August 1982, that their fate and whereabouts remained unknown, and that efforts to advance the investigation and obtain relevant information about their possible fate have been unsuccessful. In this regard, the IACHR concluded that the State is responsible for the violation of the rights to recognition as a person before the law, to life, personal integrity, personal liberty, private and family life, protection of the family, to a name, and the rights of child.

328. With regard to the investigation of the facts, although the Commission recognized the State's efforts, it considered that the investigations had been insufficient and had not been conducted with due diligence, given that ten years had passed since they were opened.

329. The IACHR took note of the multiple requests for information made to various State agencies that were either unanswered or responded to with the claim that the information did not exist. It also observed that, despite requests made by the Supreme Court of Justice in the context of habeas corpus proceedings, the Inter-institutional Commission for the Search for Girls and Boys Disappeared as a Result of the Armed Conflict in El Salvador did not provide any information. In turn, the Ministry of National Defense and the Joint Chiefs of Staff of the Armed Forces indicated that they had no proceedings, records, or investigations regarding the disappearance of the Rivas brothers. Similarly, the Commission noted that in 2017 searches were conducted in the General Archive of the Armed Forces, the General Archive of the Fifth Infantry Brigade, the Central Archive of Military Detachment No. 2, and the Central Archive of the General Staff of the Air Force and that, according to the information provided, no records were found in any of them in relation to the disappearance of the Rivas brothers.

330. Additionally, the Commission recognized as positive the creation in 2010 of a National Commission for the Search for Children Disappeared during the Armed Conflict, as well as the special policy adopted in this regard by the Prosecutor's Office in 2018. However, in relation to this case, it noted that, despite the steps taken, no progress has been made in the investigation, nor has any relevant information been obtained that would reveal the whereabouts or fate of the Rivas brothers, or that would enable the identification or punishment of those responsible for these acts.

331. Similarly, the IACHR noted that ten years had passed since the State formally initiated the investigation, and eleven years since the SCJ issued its first ruling, during which time the investigation into the facts of this case had not progressed. The Commission noted that the State failed to comply with its obligation to initiate investigations ex officio, having begun them in 2012, after the petitioner had filed and completed habeas corpus proceedings. Despite the possible complexity of searching for, obtaining, and reconstructing data related to these events, the IACHR observed that the State did not provide information to the proceedings that would allow it to conclude that it had conducted the investigation with due diligence.

332. The Commission also noted that, although internal procedures for accessing information—including administrative and judicial proceedings—had been followed, the victims' relatives had not been able to obtain relevant information about the events. Although some orders from the Institute for Access to Public Information were declared valid by the Administrative Court, authorities such as the Ministry of Defense and the Joint Chiefs of Staff of the Armed Forces responded that the requested information did not exist and did not attempt to reconstruct it, as had been ordered.

333. In this regard, the Commission considered that the State has failed to fulfill its duty to demonstrate that it has conducted an immediate, thorough, serious, and impartial investigation, both with regard to the case and to the obstacles to accessing information and files that could be relevant to clarifying the case and ascertaining the truth of the facts. In view of the foregoing, the Commission concluded that the State is responsible for the violation of the rights to judicial guarantees, judicial protection, and the right to seek and receive information.

334. Finally, the Commission considered that the forced disappearance of the victims has caused profound pain, anguish, and uncertainty for their relatives, the mother and father of the disappeared children, which has been exacerbated by the lack of an effective, diligent, and timely investigation, and by the lack of progress in the investigation, which has prevented them from obtaining any relevant information for the purpose of finding their relatives, learning the truth about what happened, or identifying and punishing those responsible. In this regard, it concluded that the State is responsible for violating the rights to personal integrity, judicial guarantees, judicial protection, and the right to seek and receive information to the detriment of the relatives.

335. Based on these considerations of fact and law, the Inter-American Commission concluded that the State is responsible for violating the rights to recognition as a person before the law, to life, personal integrity, personal liberty, private and family life, protection of the family, to a name, and the rights of the child, established in Articles 3, 4, 5, 7, 11.2, 17, 18, and 19 of the American Convention, in relation to Article 1.1 of the American Convention, to the detriment of José Vicente, Clara Vilma, Juana Noemy, Gladys Suleyma, and Norma Rivas. Likewise, the Commission concluded that the State is responsible for the violation of the rights to judicial guarantees, judicial protection, and the right to seek and receive information, established in Articles 8, 13, and 25 of the American Convention, in relation to Article 1.1 of the American Convention, to the detriment of José Vicente, Clara Vilma, Juana Noemy, Gladys Suleyma, and Norma Rivas, and their relatives, Nicolasa Rivas Ángel and Alberto Clímaco Hernández. Finally, the Commission also concluded that the State is responsible for the violation of the right to personal integrity established in Article 5 of the American Convention, to the detriment of family members Nicolasa Rivas Ángel and Alberto Clímaco Hernández.

11. Pablo Rafael Galván v. Argentina[200]

336. The case concerns Argentina's international responsibility for violating Mr. Pablo Rafael Galván's right to appeal his conviction and to personal liberty in criminal proceedings in which he was sentenced to prison for the crime of manslaughter.

337. Mr. Pablo Rafael Galván was arrested on April 8, 1996, on charges of participating in a homicide in the town of Virrey del Pino, La Matanza District, Province of Buenos Aires. On December 21, 1998, Chamber I of the Criminal Appeals and Guarantees Court of the Judicial Department of Morón sentenced him to 18 years and 6 months in prison.

338. On January 5, 1999, Mr. Galván's public defender filed an appeal for cassation, as provided for in Article 454, paragraph 1, of the Criminal Procedure Code of the Province of Buenos Aires, against the conviction, alleging a violation of the rules governing the assessment of testimonial evidence. Specifically, the defense attorney pointed out that "a rational analysis of the evidence presented" would indicate that his client acted in self-defense in response to an unlawful attack by the person who ultimately lost his life.

339. The Criminal Cassation Court twice—in rulings dated February 23, 1999, and December 27, 1999—decided to reject the admissibility of the cassation appeal filed by Mr. Galván's defense. The Court noted that the appellants had not accompanied their appeal with a copy of the statement of intent to appeal filed with the court that had handed down the sentence whose review was sought. This was despite the fact that Mr. Galván's defense counsel had complied in a timely manner with the procedural requirement to declare his intention to appeal, as required by Article 451, paragraph 2, of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

340. In response to the ruling of December 27, 1999, Mr. Galván's defense filed an appeal for the inapplicability of the law before the Provincial Supreme Court of Justice. In that appeal, the defense reiterated the arguments set forth in its previous submissions and pointed out that the contested decision "not only demonstrates formalistic rigor, but also goes beyond what the law says by ruling inadmissible cases that meet all the requirements of the Code of Criminal Procedure". This appeal was dismissed by the Supreme Court of Justice in a ruling dated March 29, 2000, in which it considered that "the extraordinary appeal provided for in Article 494 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is only admissible in cases of non-compliance with or erroneous application of substantive law or doctrine by the Court of Cassation [...] which is not the case here, where the grievances are directed at questioning the interpretation of procedural rules".

341. On May 23, 2000, the Public Defender filed the extraordinary federal appeal provided for in Article 14 of Law 48, arguing that the decision of the provincial superior court constituted an arbitrary act that affected the constitutional right to challenge the conviction. This appeal was declared "inadmissible" by the Supreme Court of the Province of Buenos Aires on August 23, 2000, and the decision was confirmed by the Supreme Court of Justice of the Nation on May 30, 2001.

342. On the other hand, the public defender of Mr. Adrián Aníbal Galván—the petitioner's brother and co-defendant in the same criminal case—filed an appeal against the 18-year sentence imposed on him. In a ruling dated February 8, 2001, the Court of Cassation decided to declare the appeal "admissible" and reduced the sentence from 18 years to 15 years in prison, considering that the state of intoxication in which he found himself at the time of the events should be interpreted as a mitigating factor in criminal responsibility and not as an aggravating factor, as the trial court had interpreted it with respect to both the petitioner and his brother.

343. In response to this decision, Mr. Galván's public defender filed a request to extend the effects of the Criminal Court of Cassation's ruling so that intoxication would be applied as a mitigating factor in the criminal conduct committed and, consequently, the sentence imposed on the petitioner would be reduced. As a result, Mr. Galván's sentence was reduced to 15 years and 5 months in prison by a decision of the Criminal Cassation Court dated September 3, 2002.

344. On July 24, 2008, the Public Defender filed a writ of habeas corpus with Chamber I of the Criminal Cassation Court under the terms of Articles 405 and 406 of the Criminal Procedure Code of the Province of Buenos Aires. In that document, Mr. Galván's attorney pointed out that his client "had served the 15-year and 5-month prison sentence imposed on him, yet he was still being deprived of his liberty". In support of this, the Public Defender argued that Mr. Galván was entitled to the differentiated calculation of pretrial detention provided for in Law 24,390, according to which, after two years of pretrial detention, one day of pretrial detention would be counted as two days of imprisonment. In this regard, the Public Defender pointed out that the sentence against Mr. Galván had become final following the Supreme Court of Justice's ruling rejecting the appeal against the denial of the extraordinary federal appeal on May 30, 2001.

345. On December 1, 2008, Chamber I of the Criminal Appeals and Guarantees Chamber of the Morón Judicial Department ruled that "the defense is correct in that Galván only became a convicted person after the National Court rejected the appeal, that is, on May 30, 2001". The court then stated that "since Galván was arrested on April 8, 1996, and remained in pretrial detention until May 30, 2001, he served five years, one month, and twenty-three days in prison, which, when calculated with the benefit established in Law 24,390, amounts to a total of eight years, three months, and sixteen days in prison, which, deducted from the sentence of fifteen years and five months in prison, results in a balance of seven years, one month, and fourteen days in prison, which, calculated from May 31, 2001, means that the aforementioned sentence expired on July 13, 2008, which means that the immediate release of the aforementioned person must be ordered in this case". Mr. Galván regained his freedom on December 1, 2008.

346. While in detention, on October 27, 2008, Mr. Galván was wounded by rubber pellets fired by members of the Federal Penitentiary Service during a dispute between prison staff and inmates in Ward 6 of Penitentiary Unit No. 2 of the Sierra Chica Prison. In a report prepared by a forensic medical expert from the La Plata Expert Advisory Office, dated December 19, 2008, it was noted that an examination of Mr. Galván's body "revealed multiple old circular scars located in various places on both lower limbs, which could correspond to marks left by rubber bullets".

347. In its Merits Report No. 263/21, the Commission noted that the rules governing the admissibility and processing of appeals at the time of the events did not expressly require the appellant to attach, together with his appeal, a copy of the statement of intent to appeal made before the court of first instance. Consequently, it considered that the Criminal Cassation Court's decision to sanction such an omission with the inadmissibility of the appeal had no legal basis and was not expressly provided for in the procedural rules applicable to the case. The IACHR concluded that the Criminal Cassation Court's invocation of a formal requirement not provided for by law to reject the admissibility of the appeal deprived Mr. Galván of his right to have a higher court examine the challenges raised by his defense to the sentence that convicted him to 18 years and 6 months in prison.

348. The Commission also observed that, as it was regulated, the appeal did not offer the possibility of guaranteeing a comprehensive review of the conviction. In fact, according to the provisions of Article 454 of the Criminal Procedure Code of the Province of Buenos Aires, such an appeal could only be filed on two grounds: namely: 1) failure to observe or erroneous application of a legal precept or jurisprudential doctrine, and 2) new facts or evidence that, on their own or in connection with those already examined, show that the criminal act did not exist or that the defendant did not commit it. Consequently, questions of fact or evidentiary assessment were excluded from the scope of review.

349. The Commission noted that although the Casal ruling had given rise to a line of case law that extended the scope of cassation appeals, the criminal proceedings against Mr. Galván had concluded on May 30, 2001, and therefore the doctrine emanating from that ruling had not yet been adopted by the Supreme Court. The Commission also emphasized that the criminal procedural legislation of the Province of Buenos Aires did not expressly enshrine in its regulations the provisions of the Casal ruling on this point.

350. For these reasons, the IACHR considered that the decision of the Criminal Cassation Court to declare inadmissible the appeal filed on behalf of Mr. Galván was unreasonable and arbitrary and constituted an excessive formalism not supported by the text of the law, such that the petitioner did not have access to a remedy for the alleged violations. The Commission also observed that, regardless of the outcome of the appeal filed in this specific case, the appeal did not enable the victim to obtain a comprehensive review of the conviction. Consequently, the Commission concluded that the State was responsible for violating the rights to appeal the conviction and for failing to guarantee the victim access to a simple and effective remedy in the criminal proceedings that culminated in his conviction.

351. With regard to the right to personal liberty, the Commission noted that it was clear that the judicial body responsible for determining the end of the prison sentence failed to apply the provisions of Law 24,390, also known as the "two-for-one law", to the period of time that elapsed from the declaration of inadmissibility of the cassation appeal to the judgment dismissing the complaint for denial of the extraordinary federal appeal issued by the Supreme Court of Justice of the Nation on May 30, 2001. The Commission indicated that this meant that the petitioner's deprivation of liberty from July 13, 2008, to December 1, 2008, was not based on law, but was due to an erroneous calculation by the relevant judicial bodies. Therefore, the Commission considered that such deprivation of liberty was contrary to the right to personal liberty.

352. Furthermore, the Commission noted that the habeas corpus petition was filed by the petitioner's attorneys on July 24, 2008, before the Criminal Cassation Court and that it was not until December 1, 2008, that is, more than four months later, that the First Chamber of Appeals and Guarantees of Morón ruled on the arguments raised by the defense attorneys in that petition. In this regard, the Commission noted that the unjustified and unreasonable delay of more than four months by the courts involved in issuing a decision in response to the insistent requests of the public defenders — who argued in their briefs that there had been an error in the calculation of the prison sentence and that Mr. Galván was being illegally deprived of his liberty — rendered this appeal ineffective in protecting the petitioner's right to personal liberty.

353. In addition, the Commission noted that the events of October 27, 2008 took place during the period in which the victim was deprived of his liberty in excess of the time mandated by law, consisting of a fight in Ward 6 of the Sierra Chica Penitentiary Unit and resulting in the pellet wounds that the victim indicated he had suffered. The Commission noted that the injuries suffered by Mr. Galván, documented after the events, are consistent with those usually caused by the ammunition and weapons used by prison forces, and that the Argentine State did not present any arguments to refute such injuries or information that would allow them to be dismissed as a result of a diligent investigation. In these circumstances, the Commission considered that the harm to Mr. Galván's personal integrity could only have occurred because he was kept in the detention center when he should no longer have been there.

354. In this regard, the Commission concluded that the Argentine State kept the victim in prison in violation of his right to personal liberty. This was related to the delay in deciding on the habeas corpus petition filed, which made it possible for Mr. Galván to be deprived of his liberty and to be the victim of the injuries that occurred on October 27, 2008. This was in violation of the rights to personal liberty, personal integrity, and judicial protection.

355. Finally, the Commission also found the Argentine State responsible for violating the right to personal integrity of Mr. Galván's wife and two children due to the serious consequences they suffered during the period in which he was illegally deprived of his liberty.

356. Based on the factual and legal considerations described in the Merits Report, the Commission concluded that the Argentine State is responsible for violating the rights to appeal the ruling, to personal liberty, to personal integrity, and to judicial protection enshrined in Articles 8(2)(h), 7(1), 7(6), 5, and 25 of the American Convention, respectively, in relation to Articles 1.1 and 2 of the same instrument, to the detriment of Pablo Rafael Galván. The Commission also concluded that the Argentine State is responsible for the violation of the right to personal integrity, enshrined in Article 5.1 of the American Convention, to the detriment of Mr. Galván's relatives identified in the Report.

12. Álvaro Agustín Mejía, Juan del Cid Morales, and Erik Donaire Constanza Bran v. El Salvador

357. The case concerns the international responsibility of El Salvador for the arbitrary detention and violation of the right to judicial guarantees and freedom of residence and movement to the detriment of Álvaro Agustín Mejía, Juan del Cid Morales, and Erik Donaire Constanza Bran, Guatemalan nationals, in September 2006.

358. On September 27, 2006, Álvaro Agustín Mejía, Juan del Cid Morales, and Erik Donaire Constanza Bran traveled from Guatemala City to San Salvador to finalize the sale of their company, which had been previously agreed upon with the buyers. According to the petitioner, the purpose of the meeting was to deliver the documents proving the legality of the company and receive the corresponding payment. The petitioner's account indicates that, while in San Salvador, they went to the restaurant "Tenedores", located in the Gran Vía shopping center, where at approximately 1:30 p.m. they handed over the documents for the sale of the company to the buyer. At that moment, the person who was serving them made a signal and they were intercepted and thrown to the floor by the National Police, at which point approximately 30 State agents entered the premises with their faces covered, some of them dressed in civilian clothing. The petitioner stated that, at that moment, the victims were detained and handcuffed without a warrant, without being told the reasons for their detention, and were not allowed to speak under threat of death.

359. According to the petitioner, they were taken to a parking lot where Stephen Fraga, an agent with the U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration (DEA), was waiting. They were then transported in unmarked green and blue vehicles to an airport that, according to one of the victims, looked like a military base. He stated that during the trip, their handcuffs were tightened excessively, they were threatened with death, they were photographed, and they were not allowed to make a phone call or contact the Guatemalan Embassy. These facts were not refuted by the State.

360. During the proceedings before the IACHR, the Salvadoran State asserted that neither the National Police nor the Attorney General's Office had records of police proceedings related to the victims' names and, with regard to extradition, maintained that under Salvadoran law, the power to grant extradition is vested in the Supreme Court of Justice.

361. A memorandum from the District Court of Columbia in the United States indicated that the victims were arrested in El Salvador on September 27, 2006, and traveled to the United States under the custody of DEA agents. In addition, the Court stated that "on September 26, 2006, agents of the National Police of El Salvador met with DEA agents at the DEA offices in El Salvador to discuss the arrest of the defendants, where DEA agents Fraga and Sandoval were present", shared information about the victims with the Salvadoran authorities, and established how the arrest would be carried out. Additionally, the District Court of Columbia noted that the decision to arrest the victims, and the administrative and tactical details for carrying out this operation, were the responsibility of the Salvadoran law enforcement agencies.

362. Regarding the transfer of the defendants from El Salvador to the United States, the District Court of Columbia noted that on September 27, 2006, at 3:00 p.m., DEA agents Fraga and Sandoval met the victims at the airport in El Salvador, where a DEA plane was already waiting. The three detainees were immediately boarded onto the aircraft along with two DEA agents and two pilots, landing in Fort Lauderdale, Florida, at 10:00 p.m. that same day. The Court considered that this transfer was carried out within the framework of the extradition treaty between El Salvador and the United States.

363. On September 30, 2006, Silvia Marina Juárez de Del Cid filed a complaint with the National Civil Police at the San Salvador Centro station regarding the deprivation of liberty of the three victims, without the State having presented any information on the matter during the proceedings.

364. In its Admissibility and Merits Report 148/23, the Commission found that the facts described by the petitioners coincided with the information contained in the case file, including the judgment of the District Court of Columbia, the criminal complaint filed by Silvia Marina Juárez de Del Cid with the National Civil Police, and the press releases submitted to the proceedings. In this regard, it considered it proven that agents of the National Civil Police of El Salvador carried out an operation in San Salvador that resulted in the arrest of the victims and their subsequent transfer to the airport in that city. It also considered it proven that the victims were handed over to agents of the U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration (DEA) and boarded a plane to be transferred to U.S. territory.

365. Regarding the right to personal liberty, the Commission noted that no arrest warrant issued by a competent judge was presented, nor was it proven that the victims were committing a flagrant act that would justify their capture without a prior warrant. The absence of official documentation or records of the arrest, together with the lack of evidence of flagrancy or judicial authorization, led to the conclusion that the arrests were illegal. The IACHR also determined that the State violated the victims' right to be informed of the reasons for their detention. In addition, it noted that the State did not present evidence proving that the victims, as foreigners, were guaranteed the right to be notified of their right to communicate with consular officials to receive assistance. Finally, based on the available evidence, the IACHR concluded that the victims were detained by agents of the Salvadoran National Police, transferred to the San Salvador airport, and sent to the United States without being brought before a judge in El Salvador, and therefore without judicial review. In this regard, the Commission concluded that the State is responsible for the violation of the right to personal liberty.

366. Regarding the rights to guarantees and judicial protection, the Commission noted that the Salvadoran authorities did not inform the victims, who were Guatemalan citizens, of their right to consular assistance. Furthermore, during their detention, the victims were unable to communicate with a lawyer or family members, which violated their right to establish contact with a third party. This restriction accentuated their defenselessness and contravened the right to due process.

367. Regarding the complaint filed by Ms. Juárez De Cid, the Commission recalled that the authorities have an obligation to take immediate and effective steps to clarify the facts, identify those responsible, and, if applicable, bring them to justice. However, the documentation analyzed does not indicate that the complaint has been processed or that the State has taken concrete measures to clarify the facts. The lack of a diligent and timely investigation violates the victims' right to effective judicial protection. In this regard, the IACHR considered that the State failed to fulfill its duty to investigate the alleged facts in a timely manner, which constitutes a violation of the right to judicial protection. Additionally, given that since the complaint was filed in 2006, there has been no procedural progress or final decision, the IACHR determined that the guarantee of reasonable time was violated.

368. In this regard, the Commission concluded that the State failed to fulfill its duty to investigate the facts with due diligence, as well as to provide adequate and effective remedies to remedy the situation and therefore violated the rights to judicial guarantees and judicial protection.

369. Finally, the IACHR noted that the detention of the three victims, all Guatemalan nationals, was followed by their immediate transfer on a DEA plane, without any judicial proceedings in El Salvador. The IACHR observed that there is no evidence in the case file to allow it to affirm that the facts of the case responded to the execution of an extradition order adopted in accordance with the law and respectful of the State's human rights obligations. On the contrary, the information available to it indicates that once detained, they were immediately transported by air out of the country. Thus, the Commission concluded that the victims did not have a duly reasoned decision to proceed with what the State characterized as extradition. Nor did they have due process to guarantee their right to defense, or the opportunity to exercise their right to submit their case for review by the competent authority or to appeal the decision to a higher court with suspensive effect. For these reasons, the IACHR concluded that the victims did not enjoy due process or an extradition decision in accordance with the law, constituting a violation of the rights to freedom of movement and residence, judicial guarantees, and judicial protection.

370. Based on these findings of fact and law, the Inter-American Commission concluded that the Salvadoran State is responsible for the violation of the rights to personal liberty, judicial guarantees, freedom of movement and residence, and judicial protection, established in Articles 7.1, 7.2, 7.4, 8.1, 8.2. 22.6, and 25.1 of the American Convention on Human Rights, in relation to Article 1.1 of the same instrument, to the detriment of Álvaro Agustín Mejía, Juan del Cid Morales, and Erik Donaire Constanza Bran.

13. Ernesto Yoliztly Lejderman, Bernardo Mario Lejderman Konujowska, and María del Rosario Ávalos Castañeda v. Chile

371. The case concerns Chile's international responsibility for the forced disappearance of Bernardo Mario Lejderman Konujowska and María del Rosario Ávalos Castañeda at the hands of the Chilean armed forces on December 8, 1973, in front of their son Ernesto Yoliztly Lejderman, who was two years old at the time of the events, and the obstacles that have arisen in relation to access to justice and the clarification of the truth about the events.

372. Bernardo Mario Lejderman Konujowska was an Argentine national, professor, law student, businessman, and journalist. He left his country because of the repression that occurred during the dictatorship of General Juan Carlos Onganía and, while traveling in Mexico, he met María del Rosario Ávalos Castañeda, who was Mexican, studied sociology, and decided to travel to Chile with Mr. Lejderman in March 1971.

373. The Lejderman Ávalos couple lived in the city of Vicuña, where Bernardo worked with the governor in the area of social services and also devoted himself to wood crafts. María del Rosario, for her part, gave private English lessons. After the military coup in 1973, they decided to cross the border into Argentina. On the way, they sought refuge with their son in the Gualliguaica Gorge, Elqui Valley, where they remained hidden inside some coal ovens. They were found and subsequently executed by military agents on December 8, 1973.

374. According to the petitioner, after the murder of the Lejderman Ávalos couple, the military took the child Ernesto Yoliztly Lejderman Ávalos from the place where his parents were executed and, days later, left him in the care of the nuns at the Casa de la Providencia in La Serena. He remained there until January 1974, when, thanks to diplomatic efforts by the Argentine Consulate, he was transferred to the city of Buenos Aires to be reunited with his paternal grandparents.

375. According to the statement presented by Fidelina del Tránsito Pasten, after the execution of the Lejderman Ávalos couple, the military searched for Luis Horacio Ramírez, who had informed them of the couple's location, and ordered him to come with them, carrying a shovel and a pickaxe to dig a grave and bury the remains of María del Rosario Ávalos. For his part, Mr. Lejderman's body was found days later by Lorenzo del Carmen Pasten. Subsequently, and as indicated in Mr. Ramírez's statement, he went with Mr. Lorenzo del Carmen to "La Angostura", near where the body was found, and they moved it and buried it in a safer place.

376. The body of María del Rosario Ávalos Castañeda was exhumed in April 1974 after various diplomatic efforts by Mexico, and her remains were transferred to the General Cemetery of Santiago. Additionally, according to the petitioner, her remains were transferred in December 1998 to a general niche and were cremated. This information was made known to the petitioner in 2005.

377. Regarding Mr. Bernardo Mario Lejderman, according to the petitioner, his whereabouts remained unknown until 1990. Thus, seventeen years after his execution and following the intervention of the judiciary, his body was found buried on August 1, 1990.

378. On July 31, 1990, human rights organizations in La Serena filed a criminal complaint for the crime of illegal burial against Bernardo Mario Lejderman, in which they recounted the circumstances surrounding Mr. Lejderman's death and requested the exhumation of his remains. In addition, the petitioners indicated that, following the exhumation of Mr. Lejderman's body on August 8, 1990, a complaint was filed for the crimes of murder, illegal burial, and illegal exhumation. However, following the intervention of the Second Military Court of Santiago, the Supreme Court of Chile decided to leave the case in the hands of the military justice system. On March 10, 1992, the military judge decided to dismiss the case because, in his opinion, the crimes under investigation were covered by the 1978 Amnesty Law.

379. On December 4, 2000, the petitioner filed a criminal complaint with the Criminal Court of Santiago against Fernando Polanco Gallardo, Jorge Cruz Adaro, Carlos Verdugo Gómez, Rubén Fiedler Alvarado, Mario Larenas Carmona, Ariosto Lapostol Orrego, and General Augusto Pinochet as perpetrators, accomplices, or accessories to the crimes of aggravated homicide, illegal burial, and criminal conspiracy to the detriment of Bernardo Mario Lejderman and María del Rosario Ávalos. Likewise, on September 7, 2004, seeking redress for what had happened, the petitioner filed a civil suit against the Chilean Treasury for the moral damage caused to him by the events under investigation.

380. According to the petitioner, on May 26, 2004, Fernando Polanco Gallardo, Ariosto Lapostol Orrego, Héctor Omar Vallegos, and Luis Humberto Fernández were brought to trial and placed in preventive detention. A year later, on May 25, 2005, the trial judge upheld the defendants' plea of res judicata, acquitted them, and dismissed the civil suit.

381. The petitioner appealed the decision, and on June 28, 2005, the Court of Appeals reversed the judgment and ordered that a replacement judgment be issued. However, on July 14, 2006, the judge again upheld the plea of res judicata and acquitted the defendants. It was not until December 18, 2007, that the Ninth Chamber of the Santiago Court of Appeals: (i) revoked the previous judgment, (ii) convicted Fernando Polanco, Luis Fernández, and Héctor Vallejos of the crime of homicide, (iii) sentenced them to imprisonment, and (iv) upheld the claim for damages.

382. The convicted men filed appeals, and on May 25, 2009, the Supreme Court of Chile overturned the Court of Appeals' ruling and issued a new one in its place. In this ruling, while confirming the conviction for the crime of homicide, it reduced the sentence to five years and one day through the application of the gradual statute of limitations and revoked the compensation that had been awarded to the petitioner.

383. Furthermore, according to information provided by the State, which was not contested by the victims' representatives, on November 22, 2016, Mr. Ernesto Lejderman filed a civil suit for damages. That civil lawsuit was resolved by a judgment dated May 31, 2018, which ordered the Treasury to pay the sum of $100,000,000 (one hundred million Chilean pesos). Subsequently, on September 6, 2018, the Santiago Court of Appeals upheld the first instance ruling and ordered the payment of $150,000,000 (one hundred and fifty million Chilean pesos) to the plaintiff. The State asserts that this amount was paid by resolution dated July 10, 2019.

384. Finally, regarding the administrative reparation proceedings, according to the State, Mr. Ernesto Lejderman Ávalos received a total of $45,509.62 in administrative reparation from June 1991 to November 2022.

385. In its Merits Report 192/23, the Commission indicated that, regarding the right to life, to integrity, and personal security, it had been sufficiently demonstrated that the use of lethal force by military agents was unnecessary, disproportionate, and lacking a legitimate purpose, and therefore the deaths constituted extrajudicial executions.

386. The Commission also analyzed whether the acts committed against Bernardo Mario Lejderman and María del Rosario Ávalos constituted forced disappearance. In this regard, the Commission reiterated that, at the time of the events, there was a consistent state policy in Chile of widespread repression against persons whom the regime considered to be opponents, characterized, among other things, by a massive and systematic practice of shootings, summary executions, and forced disappearances.

387. With regard to María del Rosario Ávalos, the Commission noted that she was deprived of her liberty on December 8, 1973, just before her execution by a group of armed soldiers, with the direct involvement of state agents under the command of Captain Fernando Polaco Gallardo. Despite the search conducted by Mr. Herz Lejderman, the authorities systematically refused to disclose information about the whereabouts of the victim's remains and continued to reproduce a false version of the events. The Commission observed that her remains were exhumed in April 1974 and transferred to the General Cemetery of Santiago and that they were subsequently taken to a general niche and cremated in 1998. However, it was not until 2005 that her son was able to learn the whereabouts of his mother's remains, and the Commission therefore considered that the forced disappearance remained unresolved until that time.

388. Regarding Bernardo Mario Lejderman, the Commission noted that he was detained and executed on the same day and by the same agents as his wife, and therefore the first and second elements of forced disappearance were met. As for the third element, related to the refusal to acknowledge the whereabouts of the remains of the disappeared person, the Commission observed that state agents promoted a false version of his death related to an alleged suicide by dynamite and that it was only 17 years after his execution that, through the intervention of the judiciary, his body was found and his death was registered. In both cases, state agents took measures to conceal the facts or eliminate traces of the bodies to prevent their identification or the establishment of their whereabouts.

389. Therefore, the Commission concluded that the State of Chile is responsible for the violation of the rights to recognition as a person before the law, personal liberty, and personal integrity.

390. Additionally, the Commission concluded that the interference in family life by the State of Chile caused Ernesto Yoliztly Lejderman to be deprived of protection of his family and, in turn, put his physical, emotional, and social development at risk, for which it is responsible for the violation of the rights to protection of the family, protection of private life, and protection of childhood.

391. Furthermore, the IACHR noted that approximately nine years elapsed between the filing of the criminal complaint and the conviction and punishment of those responsible and that, since the events occurred, the petitioner had to wait approximately 36 years for those responsible for the execution of his parents to be punished, without the State providing any information to justify the length of the proceedings. The Commission noted that the length of the proceedings caused profound suffering to the petitioner, as well as frustration, helplessness, and exhaustion, and concluded that the State did not observe the guarantee of a reasonable time.

392. With regard to the complaint filed in 1990 for the crimes of murder, illegal burial, and illegal exhumation, the Commission noted that the Supreme Court of Chile ruled that the proceedings should continue in the military courts and that on March 10, 1992, the military judge dismissed the case on the grounds that the conduct under investigation was covered by the 1978 Amnesty Law. In this regard, the Commission considered that, given the nature of the acts under investigation, the proceedings should have been conducted by the ordinary courts and not by the military authorities. The Commission also noted that the military authorities decided to close the investigation by applying an amnesty law that covered the crimes under investigation and on which the Inter-American Court had already ruled, declaring it unconstitutional because it disregarded the right of victims of serious human rights violations and crimes against humanity to access justice and promoted impunity for such conduct. For these reasons, the Commission concluded that the State is responsible for disregarding the guarantee of a natural judge, as well as the obligation to amend the legal system in accordance with international obligations.

393. Similarly, the Commission considered that in the present case, the application of the gradual statute of limitations resulted in the granting of undue benefits that constituted a form of impunity, since the penalties imposed on those responsible for the extrajudicial executions were disproportionate to the right of the relatives to have the crime punished in accordance with its gravity. Thus, the use of the statute of limitations disregarded the State's duty to punish those responsible for crimes against humanity in an adequate and proportionate manner.

394. With regard to the State's responsibility under the Inter-American Convention on Forced Disappearance of Persons, the Commission considered that, although the Convention had not entered into force for the State when the disappearances occurred, given that the obligation to investigate and punish crimes against humanity is imprescriptible, and that in the present case the forced disappearance of Mr. and Mrs. Lejderman Ávalos has not been adequately punished, the State is responsible for violating the obligations contained in that Convention.

395. For these reasons, the Commission concluded that the State of Chile is responsible for violating the rights to judicial guarantees and judicial protection.

396. Finally, the Commission concluded that the impact on the mental and moral integrity of the petitioner, who was two years old when his parents were executed and who had to witness the concealment of the truth, the manipulation of his parents' remains, and a lengthy judicial process that did not provide him with redress for these events, caused him profound suffering, frustration, and anguish. The Commission therefore determined that the Chilean State violated the right to personal integrity.

397. Based on the findings of fact and law in this report, the Inter-American Commission concluded that the State is responsible for the violation of the rights to life, integrity, and security of the person established in Article I of the American Declaration to the detriment of Bernardo Mario Lejderman Konujowska and María del Rosario Ávalos Castañeda. Additionally, the Commission concluded that the State of Chile is responsible for violating the rights to recognition as a person before the law, protection against arbitrary detention, personal integrity, and personal liberty established in Articles XVII and XXV of the American Declaration to the detriment of Bernardo Mario Lejderman. Likewise, the Commission concluded that the State is responsible for the violation of the rights to recognition as a person before the law, to life, to personal integrity, and to personal liberty established in Articles 3, 4.1, 5.1, and 7.1 of the American Convention, in relation to the obligations established in Article 1.1 thereof, to the detriment of María del Rosario Ávalos.

14. Priest Jesús Héctor Gallego Herrera and his relatives v. Panama

398. The case concerns the international responsibility of the State of Panama for the forced disappearance of Jesús Héctor Gallego Herrera in the context of the military dictatorship that ruled Panama until December 20, 1989.

399. Mr. Jesús Héctor Gallego Herrera, a Colombian national, was 33 years old and worked as a Catholic priest in charge of the church of Santa Fe, in the province of Veragua, where he carried out his pastoral and social work with the peasant population. According to the information provided in the case file, Mr. Gallego created the so-called "Christian Communities," the "La Esperanza de los Campesinos" Multiple Services Cooperative, the "Community Production Base Groups," and the "Adult Training School," spaces in which, through meetings and reflection workshops, the residents analyzed issues of human rights and general interest to the communities.

400. On the night of May 22, 1971, the house where Mr. Gallego lived, which was also his parish office, was set on fire by unidentified persons. The following day, May 23, the Municipal Ombudsman of the District of Santa Fe ordered an investigation into the incident and took all necessary steps to clarify the case. The victim filed a complaint with the Municipal Ombudsman of the District of Santa Fé on May 25, 1971. According to the official letter issued by the First Superior Prosecutor's Office of the Second Judicial District on October 29, 1971, no arrests were made and no evidence was collected in the investigation into the fire. On November 24, 1971, the Third Superior Court of the Second Judicial District provisionally dismissed the case, based on a request from the prosecutor.

401. On June 7, 1971, Melbourne Constantino Walker Nevans and Eugenio Nelsón Magallón Romero, members of the National Guard, visited the community of Santa Fe asking for information about the victim. According to several witnesses, both agents inquired about the aid received by the cooperative, the priest's address, and his activities. They also went to look for him in the town of El Carmen, where they had a brief meeting with him.

402. According to Jacinto Peña and Clotilde Toribio de Peña, after his home was burned down, Father Héctor Gallego stayed at the couple's house in the town of Santa Fe. Mr. and Mrs. Peña stated that on the night of June 9, 1971, two unidentified individuals arrived at their home in a jeep with a white hood and, after speaking with the priest, asked him to "accompany them to the barracks on orders from above". According to both testimonies, although the victim initially did not want to go with them, he eventually agreed after the men insisted. Additionally, Mrs. Clotilde Toribio de Peña stated that "one of those individuals with a hoarse or deep voice told him that he had an arrest warrant and later she saw, as did her husband, that the priest was walking between the two men".

403. The Peñas reported that as they were taking him away, they heard a scream and saw him being put into the car before they quickly left the scene. Since then, Father Gallego's whereabouts have been unknown.

404. Mr. Peña Abrego and Monsignor Martín Legarra filed a formal complaint regarding the disappearance of Father Gallego Herrera on June 10, 1971. The Attorney General began the investigation that same day and subsequently entrusted the case to the Second Prosecutor of the Veraguas Circuit, who, after conducting some investigative procedures, referred the case to the First Superior Prosecutor of the Second Judicial District.

405. The file shows that Bishops Martin Legarra, Marcos McGrath, and Daniel Nuñez questioned the conduct of the investigations and reported to the Attorney General in June 1971 that a series of irregularities had occurred. In this regard, they indicated that, among other shortcomings, no searches were conducted of the houses in Santa Fe and San Francisco, despite evidence that Father Gallego was being held in that region; the police did not investigate the license plate numbers of cars that passed through the area on the highway when the events occurred; important witnesses were not called to testify, some names mentioned in testimonies were removed, and the main suspects were not summoned to testify.

406. Despite this, the First Senior Prosecutor of the Second Judicial District considered that the investigation had been exhausted and, in a ruling dated June 12, 1973, recommended that the case be closed with a provisional dismissal. On June 26, 1973, the Third Superior Court of the Second Judicial District granted the provisional dismissal and ordered the case to be closed.

407. On January 23, 1990, after the military regime had been dismantled, the Catholic Church requested that the case be reopened. On June 26, 1990, the Superior Court of the Second Judicial District ordered the reopening of the investigation and the continuation of the inquiry into the facts. Subsequently, on April 5, 1991, the court decided to open criminal proceedings against Melbourne Constantino Walker Nevans, Eugenio Nelsón Magallón Romero, Nivaldo Madriñán Aponte, and Oscar Alberto Agrazal Jiménez for the crime of homicide against Jesús Héctor Gallego Herrera. This decision was ratified by the Supreme Court of Justice on January 8, 1992.

408. During the criminal proceedings, on June 17, 1992, one of the defendants, Melbourne Walker, sent a letter to Reverend Father Fernando Guardia, in which he indicated, among other things, that the head of the G-2 was Lieutenant Colonel Manuel Noriega, who had ordered him to hand over information about the victim. He also stated that, according to his investigations, Father Gallego Herrera had been transferred alive to Panama City, where he remained in the custody of members of the G-2. For his part, in an interview with a journalist, Nivaldo Madriñan stated that he had been informed that the victim had first been transferred to a house near the María Inmaculada school and then to Tocumen.

409. On April 29, 1994, the Superior Court of the Second Judicial District sentenced Melbourne Constantino Walker Nevans, Eugenio Nelsón Magallón Romero, and Nivaldo Madriñán Aponte to fifteen years in prison each as accomplices and disqualified them from holding public office for fifteen years after serving their main sentence. It also acquitted Oscar Alberto Agrazal Jimenez, arguing that there was insufficient evidence to convict him. According to the petitioner, an appeal was filed against the judgment, which was dismissed by the Criminal Chamber of the Supreme Court of Justice, which also upheld it. They also indicated that Mr. Eugenio Nelson Magallon remained a fugitive from justice.

410. Father Jesús Héctor Gallego Herrera was identified in the Truth Commission Report as victim CV-D-035-01, indicating that "there is sufficient evidence to conclude that Jesús Héctor Gallego Herrera was detained by the National Guard and disappeared while in the custody of that armed force".

411. In its Merits Report No. 273/22, the Commission noted that the case file contains direct evidence, as well as multiple circumstantial and contextual elements, indicating the involvement of Panamanian National Guard agents in the disappearance of Mr. Gallego Herrera, and that the facts are consistent with the context of forced disappearances during the military governments between 1968 and 1989. In this regard, the Commission understood that the first two elements of the crime of forced disappearance of persons are present, namely, deprivation of liberty and the involvement of state agents. With regard to the third element of the crime of forced disappearance, the State's refusal to acknowledge the detention or to reveal the fate or whereabouts of the detained person, the Commission emphasized that the testimonies of the relatives and friends of Father Gallego Herrera recount all the efforts they made to locate him in the days following his disappearance, which were unsuccessful.

412. Consequently, the Commission concluded that what happened to Father Gallego Herrera constitutes an enforced disappearance of persons and, therefore, the State of Panama is responsible for the violation of the rights to recognition as a person before the law, to life, to personal integrity, and to personal liberty.

413. With regard to due diligence in the investigation of the forced disappearance of Mr. Gallego Herrera, the Commission noted that the first investigative process began as a result of the complaint filed on June 10, 1971. Regarding this investigation, the Commission observed that the file contains only statements made by some individuals and a vehicle identification procedure. Thus, there is no evidence of any search efforts in the first days after the victim's disappearance, nor in the weeks and months that followed, and it was precisely the lack of due diligence in the investigation that led to the case being closed in 1973. The Commission found that there was no immediate and exhaustive response by the State after the authorities learned of the priest's disappearance and that, on the contrary, the search and investigation efforts were minimal. In this regard, it considered that the criminal proceedings failed to comply with judicial guarantees, which allowed the acts to go unpunished.

414. Regarding the second criminal proceeding conducted after the fall of the military regime, the Commission noted that it was not reopened as a result of an official action by the State, but rather at the request of representatives of the Catholic Church in 1990. Furthermore, although four people were involved in the criminal proceedings, the authorities did not pursue a line of investigation into the participation of high-ranking military personnel, even though there were reasonable grounds to believe that there were masterminds behind the crime. Similarly, the Commission observed that, since the conviction was handed down, the State had not reported on any steps taken to effect the arrest of Eugenio Nelson Magallón. Furthermore, the Commission noted that the information in the case file did not indicate that, in the context of this second proceeding, there had been any plan or strategy to search for the victim or his remains.

415. The Commission also noted that, at the time of the events in question, the crime of forced disappearance was not classified as such in Panama. As a result, the two criminal proceedings were brought for the crime of homicide against Mr. Gallego Herrera. The Commission considered that the decision to define the conduct as a criminal offense carried out in 2016 represents progress in the development of laws consistent with the principles established in the international human rights instruments ratified by the State. This progress notwithstanding, the Commission considered that the events in this case occurred before the State's efforts, and that at least until 2016, the State failed to comply with its obligation to criminalize the offense.

416. For these reasons, the Commission concluded that the State of Panama failed to comply with its obligation to investigate, prosecute, and punish, within a reasonable time and with due diligence, the enforced disappearance analyzed in this report and concluded that the State is responsible for the violation of the rights to judicial guarantees and judicial protection.

417. Additionally, the Commission considered it plausible to hold that the attacks against Father Gallego were intended to punish him and curtail his religious activities as a priest of the Catholic Church, prevent him from continuing his pastoral work in evangelization groups, as well as the work he was doing with peasant groups in Santa Fe de Veraguas through the organization of community centers and the peasant cooperative. Furthermore, the Commission considered that, due to the surveillance, threats, kidnapping, and disappearance he suffered, Father Gallego was deprived of his right to exercise his freedom of conscience and religion as a foreign Catholic priest in Panama, and that this prevented the victim from continuing his work as a human rights defender. Consequently, the Commission concluded that the Panamanian State was responsible for the violation of the rights to freedom of conscience and religion, freedom of association, and the right to defend human rights.

418. Finally, the Commission observed that the disappearance of Mr. Gallego Herrera has caused his family members profound pain and anguish, which has continued throughout all these years, and concluded that the State violated the right to personal integrity to the detriment of those family members.

419. Based on the findings of fact and law, the Inter-American Commission concluded that the State is responsible for violating the rights to legal personality, life, personal integrity and personal freedom, freedom of conscience and religion, freedom of association in defense of human rights, judicial guarantees, and judicial protection, in accordance with the provisions of Articles 3, 4.1, 5.1, 7.1, 12.1, 16.1, 8.1, and 25.1 of the American Convention in relation to Article 1.1 of the same instrument, to the detriment of Jesús Héctor Gallego Herrera and his relatives. Likewise, the IACHR concluded that the State is responsible for failing to comply with the obligations contained in Articles I a) and b) and III of the Inter-American Convention on Forced Disappearance of Persons as of February 28, 1996.

15. G.C.A.M. and son v. Ecuador

420. The case concerns Ecuador's international responsibility for failing to provide special protection to G.C.A.M., a woman with an intellectual disability, due to the lack of due diligence and irregularities in the investigations into sexual violence, the separation from her son ("S.A.A.M." or "S.A.D.A."), and the double registration of the latter in the civil registry, and the situation of impunity that exists with respect to these events.

421. G.C.A.M. is a woman of Ecuadorian nationality, born on August 7, 1983, who has an intellectual disability that has progressed to 75%. Regarding G.C.A.M.'s childhood, she told authorities that she was the youngest of 11 children, that she was born prematurely, and that she was verbally abused in her family because they called her "sick". She also stated that her father threatened her and her mother physically abused her. According to G.C.A.M., at the age of 14 she went to live in Quito with her sister Virginia Alcívar and her brother-in-law, César Alfonso Yépez Proaño, who physically, psychologically, and sexually abused her. According to her accounts, her brother-in-law threatened her if she did not let him do what he wanted and mistreated her.

422. G.C.A.M. stated that during the time she lived in Quito, she had two pregnancies resulting from her brother-in-law's rapes, and that her sister Virginia Alcívar took her to have two abortions. She also mentioned that in 2009, her sister took her to have a contraceptive device implanted, under the understanding that she was being injected with a device to prevent cancer.

423. According to the petitioner, "at the age of 26, in 2009, [G.C.A.M.] suffered sexual violence for the last time at the hands of César Yépez, and at the age of 27, in 2010, she decided to move in with William Díaz". One month after the birth of G.C.A.M.'s son, he was registered for the first time with his mother's two surnames, as S.A.A.M. In 2008, at the age of 3, S.A. was registered as the son of Virginia Alcívar and César Yépez, as requested by "the mother". In 2010, for the third time, G.C.A.M.'s son was registered in the civil registry with his father's surname, William Diaz, as S.A.D.A.

424. On June 8, 2010, G.C.A.M. filed a complaint with the Pichincha Provincial Prosecutor's Office against César Alfonso Yépez Proaño for the alleged crime of rape. G.C.A.M. informed the authorities of the threats she received if she resisted being raped and that her sister was aware of the facts.

425. On August 2, 2012, the prosecutor in the case filed charges against César Yépez for rape. Mr. Yépez's defense immediately opposed the decision, questioning whether G.C.A.M. had any degree of intellectual disability, as it considered that her disability card had been obtained fraudulently. It also pointed out that G.C.A.M. was a victim of psychological sexual abuse by her partner. On the same date, the 15th Criminal Court of Pichincha ordered the commencement of the preliminary investigation and imposed precautionary measures against the defendant.

426. On August 15, 2012, G.C.A.M. requested that the Pichincha Prosecutor remove Prosecutor Sandra Rosillo from her case and appoint Prosecutor Diego Velasco, as he was the only person with whom she had spoken frankly and calmly. According to the petitioner, Prosecutor Dilza Muñoz was assigned to the case and ordered the collection of evidence that revictimized G.C.A.M. In addition, the petitioner reported that on several occasions the Prosecutor's Office required her to repeat her version of the events.

427. On February 22, 2013, the Fifteenth Criminal Court held a preliminary hearing in which the prosecutor's opinion was received. The prosecutor declined to press charges. On April 10, 2013, the Fifteenth Criminal Court of Pichincha issued a provisional dismissal of the case and the defendant, stating that it was not appropriate to continue with the trial phase, based on the prosecutor's decision not to press charges.

428. At the hearing of the case before the CDH during the 185th Session, G.C.A.M. indicated that, throughout the process of reporting the rape against her brother-in-law, she was mistreated by the various prosecutors assigned to the case. She mentioned that they banged their hands on the table and were impatient with her when she took time to answer questions. She claimed that the prosecutors told their secretaries what to write down in the statements, as if she had said it herself.

429. Since the birth of G.C.A.M.'s son, he had been living with his sister and brother-in-law, so she filed a petition with the 8th Court for Children and Adolescents of Pichincha to get him back. Initially, the Social Work Report suggested that the child continue to live with his aunt and uncle and that G.C.A.M. and her aunt and uncle receive psychological support to help the child understand his biological origins. Therefore, on July 7, 2010, the Eighth Court for Children and Adolescents of Pichincha ruled that S.A. should continue to live with his maternal aunt and uncle on a provisional basis, as he had been with them since birth, and ordered that G.C.A.M. be allowed visitation rights on weekends.

430. On September 13, 2010, the court ordered that S.A. be handed over to his mother, G.C.A.M., and that William Díaz and the maternal uncles undergo psychiatric evaluation, granting them visitation rights on Saturdays and Sundays to see the child. In compliance with the ruling, in October 2010, S.A. was handed over to the court. The petitioner indicated that Virginia Alcívar and César Yépez were accompanied by other individuals, including her mother and sisters, who physically and psychologically assaulted G.C.A.M. According to the medical examiner's report of October 18, 2010, due to the incidents of that day, G.C.A.M. was unable to work for 4 to 8 days, as she was 16 weeks pregnant and at risk of miscarriage.

431. On October 19, 2010, G.C.A.M. filed a complaint with the Attorney General's Office, stemming from the incident on October 14 of that year at the Eighth Court for Children and Adolescents. According to the petitioner, on November 5, 2020, the Judicial Unit for Protection Measures and Dismissals of Quito declared the that the statute of limitations for the crime had lapsed due to the lack of progress in the investigation.

432. Regarding S.A., on March 30, 2005, he was registered for the first time in the Civil Registry with his mother's two surnames, then registered as S.A.A.M., with a date of birth of February 19, 2005, where only the name of G.C.A.M. is recorded as the single mother and as the person requesting the registration. The second registration was made on August 6, 2008, under the initials S.A.Y.A., where César Yépez is registered as the father and Virginia Alcívar as the mother, with the mother, in this case Virginia Alcívar, requesting the registration.

433. According to the State, this registration was done manually, with the presentation of documents required by law, 2which allowed the administrative authority to presume that the child was her biological son". The State also added that the General Directorate of Civil Registration searched for birth certificates for the child "Yépez Alcívar" without finding any previous registration, as the search was done using his uncles' surnames. It noted that "for the General Directorate of Civil Registry, Identification, and Issuance of Identity Cards, it is impossible to automatically find the relationship between the first and second birth registrations of the child S.A.D.A., since even the information contained in the second birth registration is different, such as the child's surnames, the names of the parents, and the place of birth, as can be seen from reading both birth certificates".

434. Later, on May 21, 2010, William Díaz belatedly acknowledged S.A.'s paternity as the biological father, so her current name corresponds to the initials S.A.D.A. According to the State, on this occasion, a new birth certificate was not issued, but rather a note on the margins was added to the first registration.

435. According to the petitioner, on December 31, 2009, William Díaz filed a complaint for identity theft with malicious use of a public document, due to irregularities in the second registration. The petitioner also added that the file disappeared from the Specialized Public Prosecutor's Office No. 3, for which reason Mr. Diaz requested the Ombudsman's Office of Ecuador to initiate a proceeding to monitor due process. The Office issued a ruling of admissibility on December 3, 2018. The petitioner has also pointed out that there is also a complaint for fraudulent use of a false document, due to the double registration of S.A., which was dismissed due to a failure to comply with the duty of due diligence on the part of the State, which is responsible for pursuing the case.

436. During the hearing before the IACHR, William Díaz stated that threats against his life, integrity, and that of his family continue. He indicated that they are afraid to even open the door; that, as a result of filing the complaint against the police officers, the sergeant who received them mentioned that they could file the complaint, but that he would not be responsible for the consequences this could have in the future. William mentioned that as a result, they withdrew the complaint.

437. On December 19, 2013, G.C.A.M. filed a complaint against two brothers and his brother-in-law, among others, for threats he received from them, as he feared for her physical integrity and that of her family. On January 25, 2019, the Judicial Unit for Protection Measures and Dismissals based in the Metropolitan Center of Quito, Province of Pichincha, issued assistance warrants in favor of William Díaz, S.A.D.A. and J.J.D.A., establishing that any agent of the Ecuadorian National Police is obliged to provide assistance to the aforementioned individuals when the aggressors threaten their physical or mental integrity or sexual freedom. The order is valid at all times and nationwide, with no expiration date. The petitioner pointed out that, in the case of the criminal complaint of threats against Virginia Alcívar and César Yépez, the Prosecutor's Office did not pursue the case and the statute of limitations of the crime lapsed.

438. In its Merits Report No. 32/23, the Inter-American Commission first referred to the treatment of G.C.A.M. in terms of access to justice as a complainant of acts of gender-based violence. The Commission observed that the State did not adopt accessibility measures and procedural adjustments appropriate to G.C.A.M.'s disability in the course of the investigation and the examination of evidence arising from the complaint she filed.

439. Regarding the investigation of the acts of sexual violence, the Commission found that the authorities did not act with the strict due diligence required in cases of gender-based violence against women. Specifically, it found that: (i) there was a clear lack of positive measures to conduct an investigation with a gender and intersectional approach for a woman with a disability, especially considering that she was a woman reporting acts of sexual violence; (ii) no measures were taken to ensure her protection as a witness, given the threats and attacks she suffered; iii) there was no investigation into the alleged acts related to the non-consensual implantation of contraceptive devices, as well as the abortions that occurred in the circumstances described by G.C.A.M; iv) the decision to dismiss the sexual violence complaint was based on stereotypes against women with disabilities that undermined the credibility of the complainant's testimony; and v) the decision to dismiss the sexual violence complaint was also based on an assessment that mistakenly attributed an HPV test the ability to prove sexual violence, ignoring the scientifically proven characteristics of the virus, as well as the multiple forms in which sexual violence occurs.

440. For these reasons, the Commission considered that the State of Ecuador is responsible for violating the rights to judicial guarantees, equality, and judicial protection, as well as for violating Article 7 of the Convention of Belém do Pará.

441. The Commission also noted that the State has intervened on several occasions in relation to S.A.'s rights. In the Commission's opinion, the existence of multiple civil registrations does not provide S.A. with certainty as to how the State recognizes him as an individual, as it keeps him in a legal limbo in which, although his last registered name corresponds to his parents' surnames, he also has another valid registration that identifies Virginia Alcívar and César Yépez as his parents. This lack of certainty in the registry affects S.A.'s rights to legal personality and creates uncertainty regarding the obligations that individuals have toward their family members in civil matters, since S.A. is legally recognized by the State as the child of different individuals. Similarly, the Commission found that the State has violated S.A.'s right to a name by maintaining a civil registry that lists S.A.'s surnames as not corresponding to those of his parents. Therefore, taken as a whole, the State also recognizes him by several names, which creates uncertainty as to his single name. Likewise, the Commission did not observe that the State has taken measures to ensure that S.A. has a single valid record that is consistent with his first and last names.

442. The Commission also considered that the violations of the rights to legal personality and to a name denote a lack of protection of the rights of the child, which imply the adoption of special measures to ensure the protection of their rights. For these reasons, the Commission considered that the State is responsible for the violation of the rights to legal personality, to a name, and to the protection of children to the detriment of S.A.

443. Finally, the Commission considered that the impunity related to the serious shortcomings in the investigation of sexual violence and other alleged acts of gender-based violence against G.C.A.M. caused suffering and distress to her relatives identified in the report. Therefore, the IACHR found that the State of Ecuador is responsible for violating the right to mental and moral integrity to the detriment of the relatives of G.C.A.M.

444. Based on these factual and legal considerations, the Inter-American Commission concluded that the State is responsible for violating the rights to judicial guarantees, equality, and judicial protection, contained in Articles 8, 24, and 25 of the American Convention, in relation to Article 1 of the same instrument; as well as for violating Article 7 of the Convention of Belém do Pará; to the detriment of G.C.A.M. It also considered that the State is responsible for violating the rights to legal personality, name, and protection of children, contained in Articles 3, 18, and 19 of the American Convention, in relation to Article 1 of the same instrument, to the detriment of S.A. Furthermore, it considered that the State is responsible for violating the right to mental and moral integrity established in Article 5.1 of the American Convention, in relation to Article 1 of the same instrument, to the detriment of the aforementioned relatives of G.C.A.M.

16. María Carlota Lema Chango v. Ecuador

445. The case concerns the international responsibility of the Ecuadorian State for the actions of the authorities in relation to the deprivation of liberty of María Carlota Lema Chango while she was pregnant.

446. María Carlota Lema Chango is an Ecuadorian woman, born in the city of Quito, who worked as a merchant. On May 23, 2002, Ms. Lema Chango, who was 37 years old and pregnant, was arrested in a police operation for possession of marijuana. On May 25, 2002, the Public Prosecutor's Office began the investigative stage for the crimes of custody, illegal possession, and illegal trafficking of marijuana, in which it mentioned that both Ms. Lema Chango and another detainee, Ms. Onofa Lema, were pregnant at the time of their arrest. Thus, on May 27, 2002, it was certified that Ms. Lema Chango was 17 weeks pregnant. On May 28, 2002, the Thirteenth Criminal Court of Pichincha confirmed the detention of Ms. Lema Chango for 24 hours for the corresponding investigation.

447. On June 5, 2002, the Eighteenth Criminal Court of Pichincha ordered house arrest instead of preventive detention. On June 28, 2002, the Provincial Anti-Narcotics Headquarters of Pichincha indicated its willingness to substitute the preventive detention order with house arrest and requested verification of the current residence of Ms. Lema Chango and Ms. Onofa Lema. According to the report issued on the same day, during verification of the addresses provided by the aforementioned individuals, it could not be determined that they were true, as neighbors stated that they did not know any women with the names indicated.

448. On August 30, 2002, according to the prosecutorial opinion signed by the Prosecutor of the Pichincha Drug Trafficking Crimes Unit, there were sufficient grounds to charge Ms. Lema Chango with the crime of illegal possession and distribution of substances, for which he requested that the respective order committing her to trial be issued against her.

449. On September 4, 2002, members of the Regional Foundation for Human Rights Advisory Services (INREDH) filed a writ of habeas corpus with the Mayor of the Metropolitan District of Quito on behalf of Ms. María Carlota Lema Chango and other detainees, indicating that they were being held illegally and were pregnant. On September 9, 2002, the Mayor's Office decided to deny the habeas corpus petition.

450. On November 14, 2002, by means of Resolution No. 050-20002-HC, the Third Chamber of the Constitutional Court granted the habeas corpus petition, reprimanded the Provincial Anti-Narcotics Chief of Pichincha for failing to comply with the order of the Eighteenth Criminal Judge of Pichincha, and ordered that preventive detention be replaced with house arrest.

451. Subsequently, Ms. Rosario Utreras Miranda, a member of the Ecuadorian Ombudsman's Office, received a letter signed by Ms. Lema's defenders stating that the Mayor had not complied with the Constitutional Court's Resolution, and therefore she sent a letter to the Mayor requesting information on the situation. On December 26, 2002, the Third Criminal Court of Pichincha issued a ruling replacing house arrest with preventive detention for Ms. Lema Chango and Onofa Lema, who would serve their sentences in the Quito Women's Prison because more than 90 days had passed since the birth of their children.

452. On October 29, 2002, the Eighteenth Criminal Court of Pichincha committed Ms. Lema Chango to trial. At the time, she was being held at the women's social rehabilitation center in Quito's El Inca sector. The order states that the seized evidence was tested and found to be positive for marijuana, with an approximate total weight of 66 grams. Ms. Lema Chango and Ms. Onofa Lema were arrested and transferred to the Pichincha Anti-Narcotics Headquarters for investigation.

453. On February 5, 2003, the Court handed down a sentence finding them guilty of the crimes of illegal possession of narcotics, recognizing the mitigating circumstances in their favor and imposing a sentence of eight years of ordinary imprisonment on each of them.

454. On February 7, 2003, Ms. Lema Chango filed an appeal with the Third Criminal Court of Pichincha. On March 7, 2003, the Third Chamber of the Constitutional Court sent a communication to the Mayor requesting compliance with Resolution 050-2002-HC and reminding him of his obligation to urge officials to comply with the rulings.

455. On May 19, 2004, the Second Criminal Chamber concluded that there had been no violation of any rule in the judgment that was the subject of the appeal. On September 1, 2008, pursuant to Constituent Mandate No. 1 of the Constituent Assembly of Ecuador, which "pardoned persons transporting small quantities of psychotropic substances and narcotics", Ms. Lema Chango was pardoned and released.

456. In its Report No. 446/21, the IACHR analyzed the State's actions regarding the preventive detention of María Lema Chango while she was pregnant and in the postpartum period. The Commission considered that the decision to keep Ms. Lema in detention was legally problematic because Article 171 of the Code of Criminal Procedure prohibited this measure for pregnant women or women who had recently given birth. Although there were judicial decisions that took this into consideration, they never resulted in an effective modification of the regime of deprivation of liberty other than preventive detention during pregnancy and postpartum. As a result, the spirit of the law was not upheld, contrary to the right to personal liberty, and the situation of vulnerability that the law sought to protect did not translate into special protection for pregnant women or for the protection of children at the time of the birth of Ms. Lema's child.

457. The Commission found that the protective mandate of the law was disregarded on several occasions and by several authorities – in particular, the administrative authorities, which failed to comply with the court orders by invoking exceptions to the rule that were not provided for in the aforementioned section of the law. In this regard, the Commission noted that the intervention of the mayor, who denied the habeas corpus petition, created an obstacle to Ms. Lema Chango's access to justice when she was in the final weeks of her pregnancy, and recalled that such a petition must be decided by a judicial authority. In addition to the obstacle posed by the intervention of the administrative authority in the habeas corpus proceedings, the Commission considered that the repeated disregard of the judicial decisions ordering house arrest for Ms. Lema confirmed that this remedy was not effective, constituting a violation of the rights to personal liberty and access to justice.

458. The IACHR emphasized that, although the State asserted that the administrative authority responsible for enforcing the habeas corpus order went to the address provided by Ms. Lema and that neighbors stated they did not know her, the State did not pursue any further steps to identify an alternative address or to ascertain whether the address provided was correct. The Commission noted that this demonstrates a lack of due diligence in light of Ms. Lema's circumstances and not only amounts to a failure to afford protection, but also delineates a discriminatory course of conduct, insofar as the type of punishment imposed by the State on a pregnant woman is the most severe, even suffering from a defect of legality, and yet is carried out as a form of sanction against the pregnant woman. The Commission further observed that the foregoing reveals a punitive culture so deeply entrenched against pregnant women involved in drug trafficking that it becomes possible to disregard a constitutional and legal mandate of protection, without such disregard being effectively remedied throughout the entire period of pregnancy.

459. The Commission also observed that keeping the victim in deprivation of liberty had a differential impact on Ms. Lema due to her pregnancy, contrary to the principle of equivalence that medical treatment must have in the context of deprivation of liberty, and that the State did not prove that, during her pregnancy or during the 90 days after giving birth, the authorities adopted a gender-sensitive approach in their actions that took into account Ms. Lema's special needs and the greater need for protection that she and her baby required. In the Commission's opinion, the foregoing constituted a form of violence against Ms. Lema, not only because of the failure to take positive action, but also because of the distress and suffering caused by the deliberate reluctance to implement the protective measures ordered by the judicial authorities, which would have provided her with a higher level of well-being and guaranteed her rights to health—including the right to mental health—and personal integrity.

460. In addition, the Commission also found that, by virtue of the right to protection of children, the authorities should have taken measures to ensure a safe birth under hygienic conditions. Likewise, the postnatal period should have had such conditions, and for this, the mother's situation was crucial to guarantee the well-being of the child. However, the IACHR did not observe that authorities took into account the best interests of the child who was born in order to provide special conditions of protection for Ms. Lema.

461. Finally, the Commission noted that this lack of positive measures in favor of Ms. Lema, which was incompatible with the legal framework in her pre- and post-natal period, contrasted with the speed with which she was remanded in custody again on December 26, 2002, less than two months after she had given birth. The Commission indicated that the State had not presented information that would have justified the necessity and proportionality of the measure to return Ms. Lema to preventive detention when she had not yet been convicted.

462. In this regard, the Commission considered that the State is responsible for the violation of the right to personal integrity, personal liberty, equality, judicial protection, and the right to health to the detriment of Ms. Lema Chango. Likewise, the State is responsible for the violation of the protection of childhood to the detriment of Ms. Lema Chango's son.

463. Based on these factual and legal considerations, the Commission concluded that the State of Ecuador was responsible for violating the rights to integrity (Article 5), personal liberty (Article 7), honor and dignity (Article 11), protection of children (Article 19), equality (Article 24), judicial protection (Article 25), and health (Article 26), in relation to Article 1.1 (obligation to respect rights) of the American Convention and the duty of States to punish and eradicate violence against women (Article 7) of the Convention of Belém do Pará, to the detriment of María Lema and her son in the terms indicated in the Report.

17. Jimmy Freddy Torres Villalva and Family v. Chile

464. The case concerns Chile's international responsibility for failing to investigate and punish those responsible for the extrajudicial execution of Jimmy Freddy Torres Villalva by State agents in September 1973 in the city of Concepción.

465. The events in this case took place in the context of the coup d'état of September 11, 1973. According to the information contained in the case file, together with that analyzed by both the Rettig Commission and various Chilean judicial authorities, it has been established that in September 1973, Mr. Jimmy Freddy Torres Villalva, a 19-year-old Ecuadorian, was residing in the city of Concepción, Republic of Chile, and was studying chemical engineering at the University of Concepción as a recipient of a student scholarship.

466. On the morning of September 19, 1973, Mr. Torres Villalva and another Ecuadorian student named Felipe Porfirio Campos Carrillo took a bus to the city of Los Ángeles, where his girlfriend lived. According to the complaint filed by Mr. Campos Carrillo's brother, a member of the Carabineros informed him on September 19 that both students had been detained at the Chaimávida police checkpoint.

467. According to the testimony provided by Mr. Joel Salamanca Saldaña, Mr. Campos Carrillo's attorney, both students were held as detainees at what was then the Fourth Police Station in Concepción, which was identified by the Rettig Commission as a detention center where serious human rights violations were committed.

468. According to the testimony of Heriberto Moisés Krumm Ahumada and Vicente Garcia Pincheira, who were also detained at the Fourth Police Station, both students were in very poor physical condition, semi-conscious, and showed signs of having been tortured. Pedro Enrique Hann Silva, a police officer at the Fourth Police Station, also indicated that the young men were tortured by a delegation from the Carabineros Intelligence Service (SICAR) composed of uniformed officers and civilians, who suffocated the detainees by rolling them in ashes.

469. On the night of September 19, Major Fernando Pinares Carrasco ordered one of his subordinates to "take those two MIR members (miristas) out, because now we are going to kill them". The students were handcuffed and taken from their cell to a vehicle parked on the street.

470. Witness Pedro Enrique Hann Silva, who was serving in the Carabineros at the time, testified during the trial that his superior officers ordered the formation of a convoy of approximately 15 to 20 police vehicles and drove along a dirt road to a beach located in the area known as "Boca Sur" on the southern bank of the mouth of the Bio-Bio River. Arriving at that location, the three young men were placed at the water's edge, blindfolded and facing the sea. At that moment, one of the members of the group, who was dressed in civilian clothes, stood behind the detainees and fired a revolver shot into the back of each of their heads. The bodies were then carried to the waves and thrown into the sea. The lifeless body of Mr. Torres Villalva was found on the morning of September 20, 1973, by a fisherman near the Boca Sur cove, along with that of Felipe Porfirio Campos Carrillo.

471. According to the information contained in the file, the police and judicial authorities of the State of Chile carried out various investigative measures in the days following the discovery of the body. However, the Commission has no information regarding the filing of charges against any person in connection with the events under investigation.

472. After the restoration of the rule of law in Chile, the investigation was resumed by the First Court of First Instance of Coronel, whose presiding judge decided to bring charges against the former commissioner of the Fourth Police Station of Concepción of the Carabineros de Chile, Colonel Fernando Pinares Carrasco, and the then head of the SICAR in the Concepción area, Colonel Sergio Arévalo Cid. On October 21, 2013, Special Investigating Judge Carlos Aldana Fuentes issued a ruling sentencing Mr. Arévalo Cid to fifteen years and one day of medium-security imprisonment. In the same ruling, the judge decided to acquit Mr. Pinares Carrasco of the charge of having participated as the perpetrator of the murders of Mr. Campos Carrillo and Mr. Torres Villalva. In response to this decision, the intervening party represented by the Program for the Continuation of Law 19.123 belonging to the Ministry of the Interior filed an appeal.

473. In a ruling dated July 23, 2015, the Fourth Chamber of the Concepción Appeals Court decided to overturn the first instance ruling only in the part that acquitted Fernando Pinares Carrasco as the perpetrator of the crimes of aggravated homicide and, instead, decided that he should be convicted as the perpetrator of those crimes and sentenced to fifteen years and one day of maximum security prison. Likewise, the Fourth Chamber of Appeals held that criminal responsibility should not be limited to Captain Arévalo Cid in his capacity as head of SICAR, since "both uniformed and plainclothes police officers participated in the convoy of vehicles in which the two young university students were transported, which rules out the absence of orders from officers of the aforementioned Fourth Police Station, whose superior officer was Major Pinares Carrasco".

474. In response to this decision, Mr. Pinares Carrasco's defense filed an appeal. On April 26, 2016, the Second Chamber of the Supreme Court of Justice of Chile decided to revoke the July 21, 2015, ruling of the Fourth Appeals Chamber of Concepción only with regard to the sentence imposed on the defendant Pinares Carrasco and to uphold the October 21, 2013, acquittal ruling against him, since "the evidentiary record of the proceedings does not permit a finding that Fernando Pinares Carrasco's culpable participation in the homicides of Felipe Campos Carrillo and Freddy Torres Villalba has been established."

475. In its Merits Report No. 259/23, the Inter-American Commission noted that it is not disputed by the parties that Mr. Torres Villalva was arrested without a warrant by Chilean police officers, that he was taken to the police station, where he was severely mistreated and physically tortured, and that he was taken from his cell in the early hours of September 20, 1973, and killed by several gunshots. The Commission understood that these actions violated the Chilean State's duty to respect personal liberty, integrity, and life in light of the American Declaration of Human Rights.

476. Likewise, the Commission considered that the extrajudicial execution of Mr. Torres Villalba remains in a situation of partial impunity, and therefore the Chilean State has not complied with its international duty to diligently clarify the facts and punish all those responsible. In particular, the Commission noted that the Chilean judicial authorities did not investigate or prosecute all the members of the so-called Civil Commission of the Carabineros, headed by then-Captain Sergio Arévalo Cid, and that the time that had elapsed between the events and the resumption of investigations and prosecution decisively undermined the possibility of fully clarifying the facts and punishing those responsible.

477. In this regard, the Commission noted that despite the American Convention being in force and the conviction of one of the defendants, the investigation has not been diligent or exhaustive with respect to all responsibilities and that, in effect, the prison sentence handed down exclusively to a single senior officer at the facility where the victim in the case was detained is not sufficient to determine that the Chilean State has fully complied with its international obligation to diligently investigate the facts, prosecute, and punish all those responsible for this serious act, which, given its characteristics, constitutes a crime against humanity. Consequently, the Commission concluded that the State of Chile is internationally responsible for the violation of the rights to judicial guarantees and judicial protection.

478. Similarly, the Commission noted that the extrajudicial execution of Mr. Torres Villalva took place on September 20, 1973, and that the first instance conviction against one of the participants in the act was handed down on October 21, 2013, and that the judicial process finally culminated in the decision of the Second Chamber of the Supreme Court dated April 26, 2016, whereby the first instance judgment was handed down more than 40 years after the events took place and the judicial process was effectively concluded almost 43 years after the death. Consequently, the Commission concluded that the State is responsible at the international level for the violation of the guarantee of a reasonable time.

479. Finally, the Commission considered that the serious human rights violations suffered by Mr. Torres Villalva affected the psychological and moral integrity of his relatives, which has been exacerbated by the situation of partial impunity in which the case finds itself, as well as by the considerable delays in the investigation of the facts and the prosecution of only a small number of those responsible. Therefore, the Commission concluded that the State is responsible for violating the right to psychological and moral integrity to the detriment of the family members.

480. Based on these factual and legal considerations, the Commission concluded that the State of Chile is responsible for violating the rights to judicial guarantees, judicial protection, and personal integrity, established in Articles 5, 8.1, and 25 of the American Convention on Human Rights in relation to Article 1.1 of the same instrument, to the detriment of the persons identified in the various sections of this report. Likewise, the Commission concluded that the State is responsible for the violation of the rights to protection against arbitrary detention, to life, liberty, security, and integrity of the person enshrined in Articles XXV and I of the American Declaration of the Rights and Duties of Man to the detriment of Mr. Jimmy Freddy Torres Villalva.

18. Gustavo Guillermo Ramírez Calderón and family v. Chile

481. The case concerns the international responsibility of the Chilean State for the forced disappearance of Gustavo Guillermo Ramírez Calderón on September 6, 1975, during the military dictatorship, the situation of impunity for the acts, and the lack of comprehensive reparation for the family members.

482. At the time of the events, Gustavo Guillermo Ramírez Calderón was 20 years old, a member of the Socialist Party, and part of the National Liberation Army of Chile (Los Elenos). On September 6, 1975, Mr. Ramírez Calderón was at the home of Julio Vial Aranda when he was kidnapped by members of the Carabineros Intelligence Service (SICAR) and taken to the Carabineros Intelligence and Joint Command headquarters. Mr. Vial Aranda remained in detention with the victim until the day of his death. According to his statements, both were severely weakened by the torture they suffered during their detention.

483. On November 12, they were transferred to “Cuatro Álamos”, a facility under the control of the National Intelligence Directorate (DINA). On November 18, in the morning, they were transferred to “Villa Grimaldi”. Mr. Vial later stated that he heard Mr. Ramírez’s screams while he was being tortured, that then there was silence and guards running around, and that he heard "cardiac arrest" and did not see him again.

484. On October 15, 1975, an investigation was launched to search for Mr. Ramírez Calderón through the filing of an action for the protection of constitutional rights before the Santiago Court of Appeals. On October 30, the Minister of the Interior informed the judicial authority that Mr. Ramírez was not being detained by order of that Ministry. On November 15, 1975, the DINA reported that Mr. Ramírez was not registered as a detainee. Taking these reports into account, the Court of Appeals rejected the action for the protection of constitutional rights.

485. On December 2, 1975, Criminal Court No. 9 initiated proceedings for the disappearance of Mr. Ramírez Calderón. On October 18, the special investigating judge declared himself incompetent to continue processing the case and referred it to the Second Military Court, because the DINA was a military agency. The petitioner indicated that on January 17, 1980, the Second Military Court accepted its jurisdiction to hear the investigation before the military criminal court. On October 30, 1989, the Military Court reopened the case and issued a dismissal order. The decision was upheld by the Court Martial on September 4, 1990.

486. After the restoration of democracy in Chile, Case No. 2182-1998 was initiated, covering multiple acts committed by state agents at Villa Grimaldi during the military dictatorship. This case included the "kidnapping" of Mr. Ramírez Calderón. Both parties reported that on August 8, 2014, the Supreme Court of Justice issued a ruling convicting six individuals of the crime of aggravated kidnapping of the victim, as defined in Article 141 of the Penal Code, and sentencing them to eight years in prison. On August 31, 2016, the Supreme Court of Justice, in response to an appeal, upheld the ruling. In that ruling, the Court awarded Mrs. Primitiva Calderón Román, Mr. Ramírez's mother, the sum of 100,000,000 Chilean pesos for moral damages.

487. On September 6, 2000, Paulina Ester Galván Calderón, Mr. Ramírez's sister, filed a claim for compensation for the events before Civil Court No. 30 of Santiago. On April 30, 2002, the court issued a ruling denying the claim. On October 9, 2002, an appeal was filed with the Santiago Court of Appeals. On July 5, 2007, the Court of Appeals upheld the rejection of the claim for compensation, stating that "although criminal proceedings arising from crimes affecting human rights may be considered imprescriptible, imprescriptibility does not apply to civil proceedings arising from such crimes, which are subject to ordinary law". On May 26, 2009, the Supreme Court upheld the contested decision, finding that the action was time-barred under current law. On June 11, 2009, Civil Court No. 30 granted res judicata status to the matter.

488. In its Merits Report No. 154/23, the Commission considered that it is not disputed that the elements constituting forced disappearance were present in this case, in addition to which the State acknowledged its international responsibility for those acts. In this regard, the Commission concluded that the State violated the rights to recognition as a person before the law, to life, to personal integrity, and to personal liberty. Furthermore, the Commission considered that there were multiple elements to determine that Mr. Ramírez was subjected to acts of torture while he was deprived of his liberty.

489. The Commission further noted that in this case, the investigation was initiated before ordinary criminal jurisdiction and that, in 1980, it was transferred to the military criminal jurisdiction, where it remained for ten years until an order dismissing the case was issued pursuant to the Amnesty Law. The IACHR emphasized that, in addition, the Amnesty Law was applied as the basis for dismissing the criminal investigation. The Commission also underscored that the investigation before the military criminal jurisdiction and the application of the Amnesty Law had an impact on the search for Mr. Ramírez's whereabouts insofar as, during the period in which the investigation was pending before that jurisdiction, there is no indication of concrete actions taken to search for the victim's whereabouts.

490. For these reasons, the Commission concluded that, by applying military criminal jurisdiction and the Amnesty Law to this case, the Chilean State violated the rights to judicial guarantees and judicial protection, specifically the right to a competent, independent, and impartial authority, as well as the right to an adequate and effective judicial remedy. Similarly, the Commission concluded that as long as the crime of forced disappearance is not classified domestically as an autonomous crime, correctly adapted to international standards, the State continues to violate Articles 2 of the American Convention and III of the Inter-American Convention on Forced Disappearance of Persons.

491. In the present case, the IACHR also noted that there is no dispute between the parties that no domestic investigation was conducted into the alleged acts of torture against Mr. Ramírez. In view of the lack of investigation, the Commission concluded that the State violated the rights to judicial guarantees and judicial protection.

492. Additionally, the Commission observed that the State is internationally responsible for the lack of adequate and effective remedies to provide redress to Mr. Ramírez's relatives, having applied the statute of limitations to civil actions for redress for serious human rights violations, which, in the context of this case, are classified as crimes against humanity.

493. Finally, the IACHR considered that the disappearance of a loved one causes suffering and anguish due to not knowing the truth, which in itself constitutes an affront to the psychological and moral integrity of Mr. Ramírez's relatives. Consequently, the Commission determined that the State violated the right to psychological and moral integrity to the detriment of Mr. Ramírez's relatives.

494. Based on these factual and legal considerations, the Commission concluded that the State of Chile is responsible for violating the rights to recognition as a person before the law, to life, to personal integrity, to personal liberty, to judicial guarantees, and to judicial protection, in accordance with the provisions of Articles 3, 4.1, 5.1, 5.2, 7, 8.1, and 25.1 of the American Convention, in relation to Articles 1.1 and 2 of the same instrument, to the detriment of the persons identified in the various sections of the report. Furthermore, the State is responsible for the violation of the rights established in Articles I, XVII, XVIII, XXV, and XXVI of the American Declaration; Articles I and III of the Convention on Forced Disappearance; and Articles 1, 6, and 8 of the Inter-American Convention to Prevent and Punish Torture.

19. Chilean Afro-descendant tribal people and their members v. Chile

495. The case concerns the international responsibility of the Chilean State for violating the rights to equal protection under the law, judicial guarantees and protection, and political rights of the Chilean Afro-descendant tribal people by failing to include the variable "Afro-descendant" in the 2017 national census or to reserve a seat in the 2021 Constitutional Convention for representatives of that people.

496. According to the information provided in the proceedings before the IACHR, by way of background, from the sixteenth century onward numerous persons of African origin were forcibly transported for the purpose of enslavement in order to perform forced labor related to mineral extraction in Potosí, whose port of departure and commercial outlet was located in Arica. It is estimated that, by the first half of the eighteenth century, persons of African origin constituted approximately 40% of the population of the Lluta Valley, located within the Arica region. From that time onward, the African-descendant population began to settle in the Lluta, Azapa, and Codpa Valleys, Chilean territory where certain Afro-descendant communities continue to reside to this day.

497. On October 27, 2011, the National Institute of Statistics agreed to conduct a Statistical Study of the Characterization of the Afro-descendant Population of Arica ("ENCAFRO") in order to obtain official statistical information to focus public policies aimed at this sector of the Chilean population. As a result, it was determined that the Afro-descendant population in Arica numbered 8,415 people, mostly settled in urban areas, that the community had high levels of school exclusion, and that the most relevant criteria for self-perception were physical appearance, dances and religious ceremonies, surnames, and culinary traditions. According to the information provided, the Afro-descendant community in Chile continues to engage in various community activities and religious festivities that have been typical since the colonial period, with the "adoration of the May Cross" being their main religious ceremony. In addition, the Afro-descendant people of Chile have created community groups to perpetuate the development of their culture and guarantee the territorial space that corresponds to each family and its respective Cross.

498. In this context, Law 21,151 was published on April 16, 2019, granting legal recognition to the Chilean Afro-descendant tribal people and their cultural identity. This law establishes that "Chilean Afro-descendants are understood to be the group of people who, having Chilean nationality in accordance with the Political Constitution of the Republic, share the same culture, history, and customs, united by a sense of identity and anthropological discourse, descendants of the transatlantic slave trade of Africans brought to the current national territory between the 16th and 19th centuries, and who self-identify as such".

499. On July 23, 2015, the Chilean Ministry of Economy, Development, and Tourism issued Decree 104, instructing the National Institute of Statistics of Chile (INE) to conduct an abbreviated national census in 2017 to obtain the basic information needed to correct the shortcomings of the 2012 census.

500. On October 3, 2015, the non-governmental organization Desarrollo Afrodescendiente Lumbanga, together with other associations of Afro-descendants, presented an open letter addressed to the President of the Republic of Chile and the Director of the INE requesting the inclusion of the category "Afro-descendant/Black" in the 2017 census. On that occasion, it highlighted the historical presence of the Afro-descendant population in the country and the importance of making this community visible. In response to this communication, on December 28, 2015, the INE issued ORD No. 2455/2015, in which it reported that the decision had been made to create an abbreviated census form that would include only the strictly necessary questions. It also indicated that, although it was up to the INE to define the questions on the census questionnaire, the process of defining the topics and questions had been completed, which is why it was not possible to include a new question regarding belonging to the Chilean Afro-descendant population. The INE also pointed out that the census question on indigenous peoples included the field "other (specify)" so that the Afro-descendant community and other indigenous or tribal peoples could self-identify in the questionnaire.

501. The official version of the census was presented on October 24, 2016. Finally, the question on belonging to indigenous or native peoples had ten categories or possible answers: the nine indigenous peoples recognized in Law 19.253 and a box with the option "other, specify" so that the respondent could indicate their belonging to peoples not identified in the census questionnaire.

502. On January 26, 2016, the same Lumbanga organization and other associations filed an appeal for protection with the Santiago Court of Appeals to reverse the INE's decision not to include the Chilean Afro-descendant tribal people as a separate category in the 2017 census. In their submission, they argued that this decision was unfounded and did not comply with the recommendations of international organizations on the matter, thereby violating their right to equality before the law. They also requested that the decision contained in ORD No. 2455/2015 be overturned and that the census be brought into line with international instruments.

503. On January 27, 2016, the Court of Appeals declared the petition inadmissible on the grounds that there was no evidence of a violation of the constitutional guarantees protected by that remedy. In response, on January 30, 2016, the associations of Afro-descendants filed a motion for reconsideration and a subsidiary appeal. On February 2, 2016, the Court of Appeals held that "the arguments presented do not alter the grounds taken into consideration when issuing the contested decision". Based on this argument, the Court of Appeals decided to reject the motion for reconsideration and to accept the appeal as a secondary remedy. On March 21, 2016, the Third Chamber of the Supreme Court of Justice of Chile upheld the appealed decision and returned the case file to the court of origin.

504. On the other hand, on November 15, 2019, the so-called "Agreement for Social Peace and the New Constitution" was signed in Chile, which gave rise to the start of a constitutional process. According to public information provided to the IACHR, based on a motion by various Deputies, on December 17, 2019, the discussion of Bill No. 13129-07 began, which "Modifies the Constitution to reserve seats for representatives of indigenous peoples in the constituent body that will be formed to create a new Political Constitution of the Republic". As reported by the petitioner, and not disputed by the State, although the original bill did not consider reserving a seat to guarantee the participation of the Chilean Afro-descendant tribal people in the constituent process, during the discussion of said constitutional reform, the conditions were created for its inclusion in the parliamentary discussion. On December 15, 2020, the Chamber of Deputies held session No. 113, during which a parliamentary debate was held on the aforementioned bill, including discussion on reserving a seat for the Afro-descendant Chilean people.

505. Following this debate, the National Congress approved an amendment to the constitutional reform bill, through which it decided, on the one hand, that the Constitutional Convention would include seventeen seats reserved for indigenous peoples and, on the other hand, not to reserve seats for the Chilean Afro-descendant tribal people.

506. On January 14, 2021, the organization Desarrollo Afrodescendiente Lumbanga filed a constitutional protection appeal with the Arica Court of Appeals to challenge that decision. On January 18, 2021, the Arica Court of Appeals declared the appeal inadmissible on the grounds that it did not clearly identify the violation of any constitutional right protected by the action and that the legislative process regarding the reservation of seats in the Constitutional Convention was a matter outside the scope of this type of constitutional appeal. On February 5, 2021, the Third Chamber of the Supreme Court of Chile upheld the Court of Appeals' decision, declaring that the arguments raised were "inadmissible".

507. In its Admissibility and Merits Report No. 359/22, the Inter-American Commission first analyzed whether the non-inclusion of the Chilean Afro-descendant tribal people in the 2017 demographic census, when in contrast nine indigenous peoples were expressly included as self-identification categories, was compatible with the right to equality before the law.

508. The Commission recalled that when a distinction is based on a suspect category, the proportionality analysis is particularly strict, the burden of proof falls on the State, and the measure is presumed to be incompatible with the Convention. The Commission noted that in the present case, the distinction was allegedly based on "race", a suspect category, without any evidence to demonstrate the reasonableness of such a measure, much less to rule out the presumption of incompatibility with the Convention. Notwithstanding this, it analyzed whether the difference in treatment that resulted from not including the Afro-descendant population in the census was proportionate.

509. The Commission considered that the State's failure to include the category of Afro-descendant tribal peoples in the census had a disproportionate effect that impacted its obligations to advance the development of State policies that take victims into account, provide specific solutions to their current problems, and, specifically, include them in national censuses and data registries. The IACHR noted that the INE merely pointed out that the appropriate time to incorporate changes to the census questionnaire had passed, when it is the State that must ensure the inclusion of Afro-descendant peoples in censuses and statistical records, in addition to adopting measures aimed at granting them recognition, visibility, and special protection in order to eradicate a historical process of exclusion. In this regard, the Commission determined that the State of Chile failed to comply with its obligation to grant equal treatment before the law and create conditions of real equality for the Chilean Afro-descendant tribal people and, therefore, is responsible for violating the right to equal protection before the law.

510. Second, the Commission analyzed whether the decision not to reserve seats for the Chilean Afro-descendant tribal people in the Constitutional Convention constituted a violation of political rights and the right to equal protection under the law. The Commission emphasized that, based on its obligations under the American Convention, the State has the obligation to adopt all necessary measures to ensure that the Chilean Afro-descendant tribal people participate, on an equal footing, in decision-making on matters and policies that may affect their rights and the development of their community, such as constitutional reform. The Commission noted that, given that this group faces structural discrimination and historical exclusion that have led to its lack of recognition by political institutions or State bodies and its exclusion from the management of public affairs, the State must adopt positive measures, including involving them in the constitutional process, so that they can express their opinions and see their own interests reflected, in accordance with their values and historical and cultural patterns.

511. The IACHR observed that, on the contrary, the lack of reserved seats in the constitutional process and, in general, the failure to adopt other affirmative measures to promote the participation of this group constituted an obstacle to the full exercise of the right to participate, on equal terms, in the conduct of public affairs. The Commission noted that the State of Chile has failed to correct de facto inequalities in the political participation of the Afro-descendant Chilean people, which had a negative impact on the victims by limiting their actions and influence in the constitutional process. In this regard, the Commission considered that the exclusion of the Afro-descendant Chilean people associated with the lack of legal recognition of their right to participation, together with the failure to adopt measures to ensure their participation in the constitutional process by reserving a seat in the Constitutional Convention, is contrary to their right to participate in the conduct of public affairs and to equality before the law, and that the State is responsible for the violation of those rights.

512. Finally, the Commission noted that the two actions brought by the victims at the domestic level were dismissed at the admissibility stage and, therefore, the merits of the case were not addressed by the courts. Likewise, these decisions were not duly reasoned, in that the reasons why the allegations made were considered inadmissible were not set out, as required by the guarantee of due reasoning, and the claims of the petitioning party were not analyzed, a situation that is incompatible with the duty to provide sufficient and adequate reasoning, as required in a case such as this. Therefore, the Commission considered that the victims were unable to sustain and prove their allegations throughout a proper judicial process, which constitutes a denial of justice. In this regard, the Commission indicated that the existing domestic remedies were ineffective because they did not provide an adequate and effective guarantee of the victims' right of access to justice and that the State is responsible for the violation of the right to judicial guarantees and judicial protection.

513. Based on the factual and legal considerations, the Commission concluded that the State of Chile violated, to the detriment of the Chilean Afro-descendant tribal people, the rights enshrined in Articles 8.1 (judicial guarantees), 23.1.a (political rights), 24 (right to equal protection before the law), and 25.1 (judicial protection) of the American Convention, in relation to Articles 1.1 and 2 of the same instrument.

20. Saul Filormo Cañar Pauta and relatives v. Ecuador

514. The case concerns Ecuador's international responsibility for failing to exercise due diligence in investigating the disappearance and subsequent murder of union leader Saúl Filormo Cañar Pauta.

515. Mr. Saúl Filormo Cañar Pauta was dedicated to defending workers' rights by organizing and strengthening unions. During the last years of his life, he served as Secretary of Population Affairs and Youth for the Ecuadorian Confederation of Class-Based Unitary Workers' Organizations (Confederación Ecuatoriana de Organizaciones Clasistas Unitarias de Trabajadores - CEDOCUT).

516. On November 26, 1998, Mr. Cañar participated in a meeting with officials from the Ministry of Social Welfare in the city of Quito related to his union duties. Subsequently, he was approached in the Villa Flora neighborhood by at least eight, armed, individuals, who forced him into a vehicle.

517. When Mr. Cañar did not return home on November 26, 1998, his partner, Mélida Bravo, went to a police station to report his disappearance. The petitioner added that the police authorities told her that they could not process the report "because 48 hours had not passed since his disappearance", which was not disputed by the State. Ms. Bravo stated that, due to this situation, she had to wait until November 30, 1998, to file the report of her partner's disappearance again. The case file does not indicate that any action was taken between the time the report was filed and December 3, 1998, when Mr. Cañar's body was found.

518. Regarding the discovery of Mr. Cañar's body, four people working to clean up the Cunuyacu River in the city of Latacunga, Cotopaxi province, found a "black lump" containing a corpse. These individuals proceeded to inform the police authorities. The police authorities went to the site and identified the body as that of Mr. Cañar. According to the autopsy report, the cause of death was asphyxiation by strangulation.

519. On December 9, 1998, the Second Criminal Court of Cotopaxi ordered the initiation of proceedings against "the perpetrators, accomplices, and accessories to the crime, if any". According to the State, the National Police issued the following reports after the proceedings began: (i) a report dated January 15, 1995, in which "any involvement by State agents is completely ruled out"; and (ii) a report dated April 13, 1999, which "confirms that it was private actors acting out of personal interests who attempted to take the life of Mr. Cañar Pauta". According to the court records of the proceedings, Mr. Cañar's clothing was handed over to Judicial Police technicians 45 days after his body was found.

520. On April 4, 2002, the Second Criminal Court of Cotopaxi issued a provisional dismissal of the case, stating that "at present, it is not possible to proceed with the substantiation of the present case (…); faced with the innumerable hypotheses, the investigation was never brought to a conclusion, much less were those conjectures ever definitively grounded through technical and scientific means (…); no final police report has ever been issued, only preliminary conclusions".

521. At the same time, an ad hoc commission was created under the auspices of the Ombudsman's Office and Amnesty International to investigate what happened to Mr. Cañar. In its report, the commission concluded that Mr. Cañar's disappearance and murder were carried out by armed or paramilitary groups, sponsored by Colombian paramilitary leader Carlos Castaño, on the San Juan tobacco farm. This was an act of retaliation against Mr. Cañar's union activities on the farm.

522. On May 8, 2002, the petitioner requested that the State Prosecutor reopen the case. The petitioner pointed out that the police reports contained contradictions and lacked sufficient conclusions to identify a suspect. This was despite the existence of several pieces of evidence related to the events which were reported in the press. On September 25, 2002, the First Chamber of the Superior Court of Justice upheld the provisional dismissal order. The Court indicated that the Judicial Police had failed to follow up and conduct thorough investigations, and that this deficiency had made it impossible for the judge to find incriminating evidence against any individualized person.

523. On January 22, 2007, the Second Criminal Court of Cotopaxi issued a final dismissal of the case, and on February 13, 2007, according to the petitioner, the Criminal Chamber of the Superior Court of Justice of Lacatunga confirmed the final dismissal.

524. In its Merits Report No. 142/21, the Commission analyzed whether the manner in which the investigation into Mr. Cañar's death was conducted constituted a violation of the obligations arising from the rights to judicial guarantees and judicial protection.

525. Regarding the proceedings prior to the discovery of the body, the Commission noted that at the time, Mr. Cañar was a union leader, had significant visibility with various unions, and had suffered threats and even attacks as a result of his union activities. The Commission also observed that on the day of his disappearance, he had been at a meeting with state authorities from the Ministry of Social Welfare in the city of Quito, that there were witnesses to the moment he was detained and disappeared, and that the incident had been reported in the media. The Commission noted that, despite this, the State did not take any measures to obtain statements from the people who saw Mr. Cañar on the day of his disappearance or from people related to his union work, nor did it conduct any patrols in the area where he was allegedly detained and disappeared. In addition, it noted that Mr. Cañar's body was found by chance.

526. For these reasons, the Commission considered that the State's actions prior to the discovery of the body were not consistent with its duty to investigate with due diligence. It also concluded that the State did not act with the due diligence necessary to preserve the crime scene or gather evidence during the initial investigation, and that the autopsy did not demonstrate that a thorough examination of the body had been conducted.

527. Regarding the subsequent stages of the investigation, the IACHR noted that during the nearly nine years that the criminal proceedings lasted until the final dismissal was confirmed, no one was identified or prosecuted. In this regard, the IACHR observed that, although the police, prosecutors, and judicial authorities included various hypotheses about what happened to Mr. Cañar in their reports or orders, these were not analyzed exhaustively.

528. In particular, the Commission observed that, despite the existence of evidence related to the possible involvement of state agents in Mr. Cañar's disappearance and murder, the State did not take any measures to explore this line of investigation. It also noted that, according to the report of an ad hoc commission, Mr. Cañar's disappearance and murder were allegedly carried out by armed or paramilitary groups at the San Juan tobacco farm as an act of retaliation against his union activities at that farm. The Commission considered that this line of investigation had not been adequately analyzed and that other hypotheses presented during the proceedings had not been thoroughly followed up.

529. The Commission concluded that the decision to dismiss the case without conducting proceedings to analyze the various lines of investigation was contrary to the duty to investigate with due diligence. It also considered that the duration of the proceedings, which lasted almost nine years and culminated in a final dismissal order, and the State's failure to justify such a delay, constituted a breach of the duty to investigate within a reasonable time.

530. In this regard, the Commission concluded that the Ecuadorian State did not act with due diligence to investigate the disappearance of Mr. Cañar, despite the complaints filed. Once the body was fortuitously discovered, the State likewise failed to exercise the due diligence necessary to preserve the scene and to secure evidentiary elements during the initial investigative steps, and the autopsy does not demonstrate that a rigorous examination of the body was conducted. The Commission underscored that the lines of investigation were likewise not pursued with due diligence, as the available information indicates that the necessary steps were not taken to investigate the potential perpetrators. Lastly, the Commission considered that the investigation of these events did not respect the guarantee of a reasonable time and that, to date, the disappearance and death of Mr. Cañar remain in a situation of impunity. Consequently, the Commission concluded that the State violated the rights to judicial guarantees and judicial protection.

531. Additionally, the Commission considered that, in the present case, the failure to respond immediately and diligently to search for Mr. Cañar during the time he was missing until his body was found constituted a breach of the duty to protect his rights to life and personal integrity, the risk of which was known to the State. Furthermore, considering that Mr. Cañar was deprived of his liberty prior to his death, the Commission indicated that the State also failed in its duty to protect the victim's right to personal liberty.

532. Furthermore, the Commission considered it reasonable to infer that the disappearance and death of Saúl Cañar Pauta were associated with his union activity and that, therefore, the failure to fulfill the duty of prevention regarding his rights to life, personal integrity, and personal liberty also implies a failure to fulfill that duty regarding his right to freedom of association, since there are elements that have not been properly investigated by the State that allow concluding that his role as a trade unionist was the motive for what happened.

533. Finally, the Commission considered that the loss of a loved one in a context such as that described in the present case, as well as the absence of a complete and effective investigation, which in turn causes suffering and anguish from not knowing the truth, constitutes in itself an affront to the psychological and moral integrity of Mr. Cañar's relatives.

534. Based on these considerations, the Commission concluded that the State of Ecuador is responsible for the violation of the rights to life, personal integrity, personal liberty, freedom of association, judicial guarantees, and judicial protection established in Articles 4.1, 5.1, 7.1, 16, 8.1, and 25.1 of the American Convention, in relation to Article 1.1 thereof, to the detriment of Saúl Cañar Pauta. It also concluded that the State violated the rights established in Articles 5.1, 8.1, and 25.1 of the American Convention, in relation to Article 1.1 thereof, to the detriment of Mr. Cañar's relatives.

21. Alexandra Benado Vergara, Alejandra Gallo Poblete et al. v. Chile

535. The case refers to Chile's international responsibility for the failure to legally register Alexandra Benado Vergara as the mother of D.B.G. and L.B.G., as well as for the confirmation of this refusal in the administrative and judicial proceedings carried out.

536. At the time of the events, Chilean civil law stated that "the father and mother of a child conceived through the use of assisted human reproduction techniques are the man and woman who underwent them" and that the filiation determined in accordance with this rule could not be challenged or a different one claimed.

537. Alexandra Benado and Alejandra Gallo were a couple from 2007 to 2014, and in 2009 they underwent assisted human reproduction techniques, as a result of which Alejandra Gallo became pregnant and on January 10, 2010, gave birth to twin boys, D.B.G. and L.B.G.. Both were registered solely as children of Alejandra Gallo.

538. On March 26, 2013, Alejandra Gallo and Alexandra Benado requested that the Civil Registry and Identification Service legally recognize Alexandra Benado as the mother of the children D.B.G. and L.B.G., in the same capacity as Alejandra Gallo. According to the petitioner's claim, which was not contested by the State, after some internal procedures, the official Juana Soto verbally informed them that it was impossible to register the children because the applicant was female.

539. On April 12, 2013, the victims filed a constitutional protection action with the Santiago Court of Appeals, stating that "the rights of the appellants and their children had been violated, in particular their rights to mental integrity, equality before the law, respect for and protection of private life, and the right to the inviolability of the home", and requested that the birth records and birth certificates of the children be amended to include Ms. Alexandra Benado Vergara as their mother.

540. On 15 April 2013, the First Chamber of the Santiago Court of Appeal declared the constitutional protection action inadmissible, finding that "the petitioning party seeks, through the protection action, to modify the legislation in force on filiation, without identifying any illegality allegedly committed, but rather challenges a legal framework with which it disagrees, a matter that falls within the scope of the legislative reservation". Against that decision, the victims filed a motion for reconsideration, arguing that "the action satisfies all the requirements set forth in the Political Constitution of the Republic and in the Supreme Court's Auto Acordado regulating the processing of the protection action". On 19 April 2013, the First Chamber of the Santiago Court of Appeals held that the arguments raised did not succeed in rebutting the grounds relied upon in issuing the challenged decision and therefore decided to deny the motion for reconsideration.

541. On April 25, 2013, the victims filed a complaint with the Supreme Court, alleging that the April 19, 2013, ruling contained clear and serious violations of judicial integrity. On May 16, 2013, the Third Chamber of the Supreme Court declared the complaint inadmissible, concluding that "in accordance with the provisions of Article 545 of the Organic Code of Courts, the complaint shall only proceed when the fault or abuse is committed in an interlocutory judgment that ends the trial or makes its continuation impossible, or in a final judgment, and only when these are not subject to any appeal", and that the ruling on which the appeal was based was not covered by that provision.

542. On May 23, 2013, the victims filed an appeal for reconsideration against the Supreme Court's decision and requested that the powers established in Article 84, final paragraph, of the Code of Civil Procedure be used to correct the errors made in the decision of the Santiago Court of Appeals, which declared the protection action inadmissible. On May 27, 2013, the President of the Supreme Court of Justice decided to reject the appeal outright. In addition, on June 6, 2013, the Third Chamber of the Supreme Court of Justice ruled on the additional petition, declaring it inadmissible.

543. On December 9, 2021, Law 21.4004 was enacted, which aimed to introduce amendments to various legal bodies to regulate same-sex marriage on equal terms. As a result of this amendment, the previous provision on the recognition of maternity or paternity in assisted human reproduction techniques was replaced in the Civil Code. The aforementioned law entered into force on March 10, 2022. Due to the above, according to information provided in the case file, on April 12, 2023, birth certificates were issued for D.B.G. and L.B.G., stating that Alexandra Benado and Alejandra Gallo are the parents of the children.

544. In its Merits Report No. 255/23, the Commission considered that two differences in treatment were created in the present case. First, between, on the one hand, the victims as a same-sex couple who underwent assisted human reproduction treatment, whose members were prevented from both being recognized as mothers of the children, and, on the other hand, heterosexual couples who undergo the same treatments and who are recognized as the parents of the children. Second, between, on the one hand, the children of homosexual couples born through assisted human reproduction techniques, who are only recognized as having a filiation with one of their parents, and, on the other hand, the children of heterosexual couples born through such techniques, who are recognized as having a filiation with both parents. Taking this into account, the Commission considered that the reason for denying recognition of filiation in this case was that the couple was made up of persons of the same sex, a restriction established by law, and therefore concluded that the reason for denying recognition was the sexual orientation of the victims. Furthermore, given that the State denied one of the mothers the registration of her filial relationship, a circumstance that would not have occurred but for her gender, the Commission considered that there was also a difference in treatment in this regard.

545. Similarly, the Commission understood that the victims formed a family, and therefore it was incumbent upon the State to recognize their family ties and protect them. In this regard, the Commission noted that the State did not prevent the existence and development of the homosexual couple or the family in this case, even allowing them access to assisted human reproduction techniques. However, the Commission noted that, after the birth of the children, the State recognized only one of the filial ties, with the mother who gave birth to them, but made it impossible to recognize and protect the other filial tie, with Ms. Benado. The Commission considered that, by failing to recognize and protect one of the filial ties with the couple's children, the State interfered with or restricted the recognition of the victims' family. It therefore concluded that the State interfered with the protection and recognition of the family formed by the victims, as it was composed of a same-sex couple.

546. Regarding the restriction of the rights of the children D.B.G. and L.B.G., and their best interests, the Commission considered that these were interfered with by the State, as the recognition of the filial bond was prevented on the grounds of their mothers' sexual orientation. In view of this, the Commission emphasized that the non-recognition of a filial relationship has a severe impact on a person, and even more so on a child, who may be prevented from enjoying, exercising, and, where appropriate, claiming rights such as nationality or residence, property rights, and rights to food, housing, health, or education. In particular, the Commission noted with concern the petitioner's argument that the non-recognition of the filial relationship affected the physical bond between Ms. Benado and the children during the quarantine measures taken by the State of Chile in the context of the Covid-19 pandemic. This also prevented the minors from receiving Chilean social security protection. Therefore, the Commission considered that the lack of recognition of the filial bond implied a restriction on the children's rights and on the right to special protection of children.

547. Similarly, the Commission noted that, although the children were registered in the Chilean Civil Registry with the names and surnames chosen by their mothers, and with the filial recognition of one of the mothers, the State did not record or recognize the children's filiation with their mother Alexandra Benado in their registration. The Commission considered that this lack of registration affected their rights to legal personality and identity, insofar as their filiation with Ms. Benado was not legally recognized and did not give rise to the corresponding rights and obligations, preventing D.B.G. and L.B.G. from exercising them.

548. For these reasons, the Commission considered that the State's failure to recognize the filial relationship between D.B.G. and L.B.G. and Ms. Benado affected their rights to private and family life and to protection of the family, their right to special protection of childhood, and their right to recognition of legal personality. Furthermore, the impossibility of recognition was based on the sexual orientation of the mothers, as the children's relationship with a same-sex couple could not be registered, unlike those of heterosexual couples.

549. Regarding the compatibility of the difference in treatment and restrictions with the American Convention, the Commission indicated that, although the protection of the family which was understood to be protected under the legal system, that is, of a heterosexual father and mother, could be legitimate insofar as it seeks to protect the family, it is not so when one considers that, by protecting certain couples and their filiation, it simultaneously excludes others, whose protection also corresponds to the States and whose exclusion makes it discriminatory. Furthermore, the Commission pointed out that a frequently cited purpose is to protect children so that they grow up and develop with a father and a mother, that is, in a family that has historically been understood to be protected, made up of a heterosexual couple, but that purpose is based on a type and stereotype of family, excluding others, which is in itself discriminatory and cannot be protected by the Convention and therefore cannot constitute a legitimate aim. Therefore, the Commission considered that the interference with the rights at stake was arbitrary.

550. As for the suitability of the restriction, the Commission considered that the distinction derived from only allowing the filiation of a father and mother with their children through assisted reproduction techniques is in no way suitable for achieving the aim of protecting heterosexual families, since the recognition of same-sex and same-sex parent families does not negatively or positively influence the rights of heterosexual couples, the relevant factor being that the basis for the distinction is discriminatory and based on stereotypes. Regarding necessity, the Commission considered that the goal of protecting heterosexual families can be equally achieved without excluding or failing to protect other families, such as same-sex couples, and therefore the measure is not necessary either. Finally, with regard to proportionality, the Commission understood that the impact on same-sex couples' families in cases such as the present one is very high, as they are prevented, through the recognition of filiation, from acquiring the obligations and rights resulting from that filial bond, which affects not only property and inheritance rights but also multiple duties that would not be generated and that are directly related to the rights of children.

551. Due to these considerations, the Commission considered that the impediment to the recognition of filiation on the grounds of sexual orientation violated the rights to legal personality and legal status, to private and family life, to the protection of the family, to the special protection of children, and to equality.

552. Finally, the Commission noted that the Santiago Court of Appeals dismissed the constitutional protection action on the grounds that the petitioner sought, by way of protection, to modify the current legislation on filiation, without considering the central argument regarding the violation of various rights. Similarly, the Commission noted that in their decisions on the appeals filed by the petitioner, the courts limited themselves to rejecting them, without providing sufficient reasoning for their decisions, but rather relying on general statements. The Commission observed that, in the last appeal filed, the petitioner based its request for ex officio action on previous case law, which was not considered by the Court. On the contrary, the Court did not include any reasoning in its rejection.

553. The Commission noted that the remedies sought did not constitute an adequate and effective means of protecting the victims' rights, not because the appeal was filed incorrectly, but because the domestic actions were rejected without proper reasoning. For these reasons, the Commission concluded that the State is responsible for the violation of the rights to judicial protection and guarantee.

554. Based on the findings of fact and law in the report, the Inter-American Commission concluded that the State is responsible for violating the rights to legal personality, private and family life, protection of the family, special protection of children, equality before the law, and judicial guarantees and protection, established in Articles 3, 8, 11, 17, 19, 24, and 25 of the American Convention, in relation to Articles 1.1 and 2 of the same instrument, to the detriment of Alexandra Benado Vergara, Alejandra Gallo Poblete, D.B.G., and L.B.G.

22. Franklin José Brito Rodríguez and family v. Venezuela

555. The case concerns Venezuela's international responsibility for the multiple violations committed against Franklin José Brito Rodríguez in the 2000s, including, among others, his illegal and arbitrary detention while he was on hunger strike as a form of protest.

556. Franklin José Brito Rodríguez was a Venezuelan farmer and biologist from the Guarataro Parish in the Municipality of Sucre, Bolívar State. On November 18, 1999, Mr. Brito was awarded the transfer of a 290.20-hectare plot of land in the Sucre Municipality of Bolívar State, which was named Fundo Iguaraya. In 2003, the National Land Institute (INTI) granted land titles to two individuals for land adjacent to the Iguaraya Farm, which the victim claimed was contiguous to his own land, thereby granting part of his farm to these individuals. Mr. Brito reported that he had access problems due to a fence erected by a neighbor, as well as trespassing by animals that had caused crop losses, and he filed various complaints with multiple authorities denouncing this situation.

557. In addition to the various complaints filed, Mr. Brito brought a constitutional action against the actions of the INTI that granted the Agrarian Letters, as well as against the individuals who he claimed were affecting his property. In August 2006, the trial judge dismissed the action, a decision that was upheld in May 2006 and ultimately ratified by the Constitutional Chamber of the Supreme Court of Justice (TSJ) on March 7, 2007. In this regard, the TSJ confirmed the decision adopted in the first instance, rejecting the action on the grounds that time-barred. However, it urged the competent agrarian authorities, through the INTI, to take the necessary measures "for the definitive resolution of the problem caused to the complainant by the granting of Agrarian Letters with respect to land adjacent to his, specifically the loss of access to his land, to which end, as recorded in the case file, this citizen has taken countless steps at all levels, which have not yielded any concrete results beyond inspections and reports that have proved ineffective".

558. On April 14, 2009, the petitioner formally requested the president of INTI and the then President of the Republic to revoke the Agrarian Deeds. The State conducted several inspections between 2003 and 2009, concluding that there were no overlaps. In August 2009, INTI revoked the Agrarian Deeds on humanitarian grounds. However, in 2012, a new judicial inspection found that access to the farm was still blocked by a gate. No information was provided on subsequent actions taken to definitively resolve the conflict.

559. Due to the lack of a solution to the conflict over the Iguaraya estate, Mr. Brito went on multiple hunger strikes as a form of protest, including a first strike in November 2004, lasting six days, which led to a meeting at the Office of Presidential Affairs, and a second strike in July 2005, in Plaza Miranda in Caracas, with his mouth sewn shut, after which, 120 days later, he amputated his little finger in front of cameras to get the President's attention. In November 2006, he went on a third hunger strike for ten days until he received a response from INTI. In March 2007, he began a fourth hunger strike in front of the Supreme Court, which culminated in an agreement with INTI. In August 2007, he went on another hunger strike in front of the Supreme Court to protest the March 7 ruling and to demand a copy of the Agrarian Letters. In July 2009, he staged another strike in front of the OAS headquarters in Caracas, demanding the revocation of the Agrarian Letters and legal compensation.

560. According to a medical report by the Red Cross, as of December 3, 2009, Mr. Brito's life was at risk. That same day, the Public Ministry sent a forensic doctor from the Scientific, Penal, and Criminal Investigations Corps of the Caracas Metropolitan Area, who evaluated Mr. Brito in an ambulance and suggested that he be transferred to a health care center. The following day, Mr. Brito ended his hunger strike due to the administrative decision issued by the INTI to grant his request for revocation. He was transferred to the Hospital de Clínicas Caracas, where he remained in recovery until December 11, 2009, when he resumed his hunger strike.

561. After his hospitalization, his health improved, he regained 11.5 kg of weight and was able to walk on his own. A psychiatrist at the Hospital de Clínicas Caracas issued a report stating that during his hospitalization between December 4 and 11, 2009, he was evaluated at the hospital and found to be "mentally healthy and fit, with no evidence of mental illness at the time of his evaluation".

562. The 49th Prosecutor of the Public Ministry with Full Jurisdiction at the National Level, the 81st Prosecutor of the Public Ministry of the Caracas Metropolitan Area, and the 127th Assistant Prosecutor of the Caracas Metropolitan Area requested a precautionary measure from the judiciary to guarantee the protection of Franklin Brito's right to health and life. They requested his transfer to a hospital to receive medical care and undergo a "forensic psychiatric examination" to determine his mental health status, considering that his life was at imminent risk. They explained that Mr. Brito resumed his hunger strike, which he continued in order to "have senior representatives of the national government prosecuted and convicted".

563. On 12 December 2009, the Twentieth Court of First Instance with Control Functions of the Criminal Judicial Circuit of the Metropolitan Area of Caracas admitted the action, relying on Articles 43 and 83 of the Constitution, concerning the rights to life and health, and ordered that the victim be urgently transferred to the Carlos Arvelo Military Hospital so that he could receive appropriate medical care. With regard to its authority to rule on the matter, the court indicated that the nature of the facts was consistent with the jurisdiction exercised by the judge pursuant to Article 7 of the Organic Law on the Action for the Protection of Constitutional Rights and Guarantees.

564. On December 13, 2009, at approximately 1:40 a.m., Mr. Brito was detained by approximately 35 security officials, without identification or explanation, while protesting in front of the OAS headquarters with his wife. He was placed in an ambulance and taken to the military hospital without being formally notified of the court order or a prior hearing. His wife, Elena Iguaraya Rodríguez, was only able to contact him two hours later and stated that the following day she learned from a third party that Mr. Brito's detention was due to an injunction filed by the Public Prosecutor's Office. She maintained that they were not notified of the decision and that there was no hearing.

565. On December 14, 2009, the Ombudsman and the Attorney General of the Republic publicly declared that Mr. Brito was not in a mental condition to continue his hunger strike, thus justifying state intervention to protect his life. On December 16, a court ordered the formation of a multidisciplinary medical team to evaluate his mental health. The report from the Caracas Psychiatric Hospital concluded that Brito was suffering from "encapsulated delirium", although he was open to dialogue. On December 17, 2009, the victim sent a letter to the hospital director expressing his desire not to be evaluated or receive medical treatment by personnel from the Caracas Military Hospital and that he wished to continue his hunger strike of his own free will. He requested that the Red Cross provide the evaluation and medication, asking to be discharged from the hospital. According to a press release, he denounced in a video that he was being held against his will and refused to receive medical treatment against his will.

566. During his stay at the Military Hospital, Mr. Brito continued his hunger strike, claiming that he was being held against his will despite having been medically discharged and that the conflict over his land had not been legally resolved. He claimed that the authorities were trying to discredit him mentally.

567. According to his lawyer, Mr. Brito was force-fed through a nasal tube and induced into two comas to hydrate and feed him, causing him suffering and permanent injury. On January 9, 2010, he was sedated and transferred without consent to another area of the hospital, where he received forced treatment in intensive care. In June 2010, he began a thirst strike, demanding that the Red Cross provide him with medical assistance. In view of his deteriorating health, the court authorized the admission of Red Cross medical personnel on June 10. From then until at least August 25, 2010, the Red Cross conducted daily evaluations, coordinated with the hospital, to protect his rights to health and life. On August 11, 2010, Brito announced that he would radicalize his hunger strike, refusing to take IV fluids and consuming only water for 10 days, and that if he did not receive a response from the then President of the Republic, he would begin an indefinite thirst strike.

568. On August 17, his wife and daughter reported that he had convulsed twice, losing consciousness and becoming immobile, with difficulty speaking. On August 23, it was reported that he was in a coma induced by respiratory failure. Mr. Brito died on August 30, 2010, at the Carlos Arvelo Military Hospital. The death certificate indicated the direct cause of death as septic shock and respiratory arrest, with associated causes such as nosocomial respiratory failure, multiple organ failure, and protein-calorie malnutrition.

569. On December 18, 2009, the organization PROVEA filed a writ of habeas corpus on behalf of Franklin Brito, challenging his detention and admission to the Military Hospital. However, on December 21, the Court of Appeals dismissed the action, ruling that it was not possible to file an action for the protection of constitutional rights against another action that was already pending. Subsequently, on May 31, 2011, Mr. Brito's wife filed a complaint with the Public Prosecutor's Office for violations of his fundamental rights. On August 10, 2011, the Prosecutor's Office requested that the complaint be dismissed, arguing that Brito required urgent medical attention and that the officials had acted in accordance with their duties. On February 9, 2012, a court upheld the dismissal, considering that there was no punishable offense.

570. Ms. Rodríguez appealed the decision on February 28, 2012, arguing that she had not been heard and that the dismissal had not been adequately justified. However, on April 18, 2012, the Court of Appeals rejected the action. On May 21, 2012, an appeal for annulment and, alternatively, an appeal for cassation were filed with the Supreme Court of Justice. On February 27, 2013, the Supreme Court of Justice declared the annulment inadmissible, considering that it was not a valid means of challenge.

571. In its Admissibility and Merits Report No. 200/24, the IACHR did not identify that the hypothesis of deprivation of liberty suffered by Mr. Brito was expressly contained in domestic legislation. The Commission also noted that the court that issued the precautionary measure belonged to the criminal jurisdiction, without observing that Mr. Brito had been linked to any criminal proceedings. In this regard, the IACHR recalled that the two hypotheses of deprivation of liberty under the law were the existence of a pre-trial detention order or flagrancy. In the present case and based on the evidence, the IACHR noted that there was no judicial arrest warrant as such, but only an injunction. In this regard, it considered that the State did not prove the existence of a judicial order as required internally, or that there was a situation of flagrancy. Consequently, the Commission found that Mr. Brito's detention was illegal.

572. The Commission also analyzed whether Mr. Brito's deprivation of liberty and transfer to the hospital was a measure that complied with Inter-American standards. The Commission noted that, in principle, the protection of health and life could constitute a legitimate purpose for detaining a person and taking them to a hospital. However, it noted that the State did not demonstrate that it was essential to transfer Mr. Brito to the hospital in order to protect his health and life. In this regard, the State did not prove, nor is there any information indicating, that his transfer to the hospital was medically necessary, given that he had been discharged on December 11, 2009, two days before being forcibly transferred to the Military Hospital.

573. The IACHR observed that Mr. Brito had previously been examined in an ambulance by a forensic doctor at the site of the protest, which, if repeated, could have allowed him to be examined without the need for his forced transfer to a hospital and to assess his state of health in situ, prior to the issuance of the measure. In this regard, it noted that no less harmful measures had been attempted, such as offering medical assistance or evaluation at the site of the protest, without the need to detain him and take him to a hospital, such that the restriction of his liberty was not necessary.

574. With regard to proportionality, the Commission considered that the victim's personal liberty, given his state of health, outweighed the restriction imposed. That being the case, it considered that the sacrifice inherent in the restriction of the right to liberty was excessive or disproportionate to the advantages that were supposedly sought through such restriction. Added to this was the fact that the measure was carried out in the early hours of the morning and that around 35 state agents attended to carry it out by force. In this regard, the IACHR considered that the measure adopted was disproportionate.

575. In view of these elements, the Commission considered that Mr. Brito's detention constituted an arbitrary and illegal arrest. In addition, there is no information to indicate that Mr. Brito was informed of the reasons for his arrest or that he was promptly brought before a judicial authority to review the measure imposed. Consequently, the IACHR concluded that the State is responsible for the violation of the right to personal liberty.

576. Regarding what happened to Mr. Brito inside the hospital, the Commission considered that subjecting him to treatment against his will, keeping him in the hospital despite his medical discharge, sedating and force-feeding him, and in particular, the alleged forced administration of medication and a nasal tube, as well as the induction of a coma in order to feed him, constituted a clear violation of his private life and amounted to cruel, inhuman, or degrading treatment committed against Mr. Brito. Consequently, the Commission considered that the State is responsible for the violation of the rights to personal integrity, privacy, health, and access to health information, as well as for the obligations derived from the Inter-American Convention to Prevent and Punish Torture.

577. Likewise, the Commission considered that the victim's legitimate exercise of freedom of expression through a peaceful hunger strike as a manner of protesting, given his state of health, implied the arbitrariness of the restriction imposed. In view of this, the Commission considered that the detention of Mr. Brito while he was exercising his right to protest, as well as his force-feeding, resulted in a restriction contrary to the Convention and arbitrarily affected the exercise of his right to protest in the manner and place he chose. Thus, the Commission concluded that the State violated the right to freedom of expression.

578. Furthermore, the Commission noted that it has no information on actions taken by the authorities, nor has the State provided evidence to prove that an immediate, thorough, serious, and impartial investigation of the facts was conducted. The Commission indicated that there is no record of an investigation into the circumstances of the victim's death, who died while under a precautionary measure that was supposedly intended to protect his life. In particular, it indicated that there is no record of any investigations into the medical or military personnel who had Mr. Brito in their care or custody, or into the judge who heard the case and upheld the order to keep Mr. Brito hospitalized.

579. The IACHR noted that no minimal measures were taken to investigate the causes of Mr. Brito's death, even though the autopsy indicated that one of these causes was septic shock, an aspect that could have been investigated in relation to a possible lack of diligent medical care. The Commission also had no information indicating that, in response to the complaint, any steps were taken to investigate the possibility that his death was the result of the medical treatment he received against his will in the hospital.

580. Similarly, the Commission considered that, given the type of violations reported, the State had a duty to investigate by all possible means, that is, not only criminal but also administrative. The IACHR also recalled that the complaint contained allegations of torture, despite which no investigation was conducted into this matter. Therefore, the Commission considered that the situation of impunity surrounding the violations implies that the State is responsible for the violation of the rights to judicial guarantees and judicial protection. Similarly, in view of the acts that the IACHR determined to be cruel, inhuman, or degrading treatment, the lack of a diligent investigation implies that the State violated its obligations under the Inter-American Convention to Prevent and Punish Torture.

581. In addition, the IACHR noted that, to date, more than 20 years after it had reported the facts relating to the alleged encroachment and transfer of Mr. Brito's land, which had affected the use and enjoyment of the land as alleged by the victim, the situation has not been remedied. This is despite the ruling of the Constitutional Chamber of the Supreme Court of Justice on March 7, 2007, which ordered that the situation be rectified. Therefore, the Commission considered that the lapse of 20 years, without a decision to resolve the matter and guarantee access to the property which, according to the latest available information, was blocked, exceeds a period that can be considered reasonable and concluded that the State is responsible for the violation of the rights to due process and judicial protection.

582. Finally, the Commission considered that the acts to which Mr. Brito was subjected, which constitute at least cruel, inhuman, or degrading treatment, as well as the lack of a diligent investigation to clarify what happened and determine the corresponding responsibilities, caused suffering and distress to his relatives. In view of this, it found that the State violated his right to mental and moral integrity, to the detriment of his family members.

583. Based on these findings of fact and law, the Inter-American Commission concluded that the State is responsible for the violation of the rights to personal integrity, personal liberty, private life, judicial guarantees, freedom of expression, health, and judicial protection, established in Articles 5.1, 5.2, 7.1, 7.2, 7.3, 7.4, 7.5, 8.1, 11.2, 13.1, 25.1, and 26 of the American Convention, in relation to Articles 1.1 and 21 of the same instrument, and Articles 1, 6, and 8 of the Inter-American Convention to Prevent and Punish Torture, to the detriment of Franklin Brito. Additionally, the IACHR concluded that the State is responsible for the violation of Article 5.1 in relation to Article 1.1 of the American Convention to the detriment of Franklin Brito's relatives.

23. Natividad de Jesús Ramírez and family v. El Salvador

584. The case concerns El Salvador's international responsibility for the extrajudicial executions and forced disappearances of members of the Ramírez family by public officials in 1982, as well as the situation of impunity that continues to surround these events.

585. The events in this case occurred in the context of the internal armed conflict in El Salvador, which lasted from 1980 to 1991, a period in which, in the course of counterinsurgency operations, members of the Armed Forces executed peasants, men, women, and children simply because they considered them to be collaborators with the guerrillas. According to the Truth Commission, these deaths are part of a pattern of conduct that was part of a deliberate strategy to eliminate or terrorize the peasant population in areas of guerrilla activity in order to deprive the guerrillas of their sources of supplies and information, as well as the possibility of hiding or disguising themselves among the population. The IACHR has identified that one of the groups of people considered enemies by the government at the time were those who were part of or supported the activities of the Catholic Church.

586. The Ramírez family consisted of two households living in neighboring houses in the canton of El Progreso, Nueva San Salvador, La Libertad. According to the petitioners' report, which was not disputed by the State, the family members participated in various activities of the Catholic Church, as a result of which they were classified by the State as political opponents of the government and considered "subversive enemies". Between 1981 and 1982, they suffered raids, detentions, threats, and attacks committed against them by State agents.

587. According to Carlota Ramírez's statement, on May 10, 1982, individuals dressed as athletes and armed with rifles captured and killed Rufino and Teresa Ramírez, and proceeded to detain Natividad de Jesús Ramírez, Guadalupe Robles, José Elías Ramírez Cuchilla, and Jorge Ramírez Cuchilla, whose whereabouts remain unknown to this day. She also stated that soldiers commanded by a sergeant went to the Ramírez family home and detained her brother Alejandro, claiming that he had stolen a tape recorder; they then searched the house but did not find the room where the rest of the family was hiding. Alejandro managed to escape amid gunfire, and then a burst of machine-gun fire was heard in the direction of the home of Mr. Natividad de Jesús Ramírez, the petitioner's father.

588. The petitioner also reported that on August 8, 1982, Salvador Ramírez was captured by several men dressed in civilian clothes who were driving an army truck and taken to a place called "La Periquera". His whereabouts remain unknown to this day. Mrs. Ramírez stated that there were several witnesses who saw what happened to Mr. Salvador Ramírez. She claimed that she learned that he had been executed but did not know his exact whereabouts.

589. After the events occurred, the family attempted to file the corresponding complaints with State authorities, but their requests were not addressed. On March 30, 2003, Carlota Ramírez reported the aforementioned disappearances and murders to the Attorney General's Office. The State reported that the Attorney General's Office conducted a series of investigations, including interviews with witnesses and reports from the Ministry of National Defense.

590. In 2004, members of the Ramírez family requested information from the Attorney General's Office on the status of the proceedings, but no response was provided to that request. The parties did not submit any information on the conduct and results of proceedings or other procedural actions between 2004 and 2013. The State reported that the investigation was closed in 2013 and reopened years later. On September 24, 2018, the Human Rights Institute of the José Simeón Cañas Central American University issued a statement indicating that the case remains open, without further proceedings having been conducted and without the facts having been clarified or those responsible identified.

591. In its Merits Report No. 150/23, the Inter-American Commission considered that, in relation to the extrajudicial executions, it was clearly demonstrated that the use of lethal force by State agents was unjustified, disproportionate, and lacked a legitimate purpose, In addition, that the present case falls within the context of serious human rights violations, including extrajudicial executions of civilians identified as enemies by the government during the armed conflict. Consequently, the Commission concluded that the State violated the right to life of Rufino Ramírez and Teresa de Jesús Ramírez.

592. With regard to the forced disappearances, the Commission took note of the information on the deprivation of liberty suffered by five members of the Ramírez family. The Commission also confirmed the direct participation of public officials, who entered homes, detained five people, and took them to an unknown location. The Commission also considered the information regarding the State's refusal to reveal the whereabouts of the five individuals and therefore determined that the three concurrent elements were present to establish the forced disappearance of five victims. Consequently, the Commission concluded that the State is responsible for the forced disappearance of Natividad de Jesús Ramírez, Salvador Ramírez, José Elías Ramírez, Jorge Alberto Ramírez, and Guadalupe Roble, violating their rights to legal personality, life, personal integrity, and personal liberty. Furthermore, because José Elías was 13 years old and Jorge Alberto was 14 years old, the State violated its duty to provide special protection to children.

593. In relation to the investigation, the Commission observed a series of omissions in the duty to investigate after the events occurred. In relation to the deaths of Rufino Ramírez and Teresa de Jesús Ramírez, the Commission noted that members of the security forces did not preserve the crime scene and that there is no documentation proving that the corresponding autopsy was performed. Nor is there any information proving that the authorities carried out a search after the victims were detained and disappeared, whose whereabouts are currently unknown.

594. The Commission noted that the investigation was opened in 2003, approximately two decades after the events occurred, and that the State did not present any documentation proving the results of the proceedings it claimed to have carried out in relation to the investigation. Similarly, the State did not present any information regarding the search efforts to determine the whereabouts of the disappeared victims, nor did it provide any reason to justify the closure of the proceedings it claimed to have carried out after reopening the investigation. In addition, the Commission indicated that the State did not present any documentation proving that it had conducted an investigation with a gender perspective, particularly regarding the extrajudicial execution of Teresa de Jesús Ramírez.

595. Therefore, the Commission considered that, to date, a situation of impunity remains in place for the events of the case and that the State has failed in its duty to guarantee an adequate investigation in order to identify and, where appropriate, punish all those responsible for the forced disappearance of Natividad de Jesús Ramírez, Salvador Ramírez, José Elías Ramírez, Jorge Alberto Ramírez, and Guadalupe Roble; and the extrajudicial executions of Rufino Ramírez and Teresa de Jesús Ramírez. Consequently, the IACHR concluded that the State violated the rights to judicial guarantees and judicial protection.

596. Finally, the Commission held that the death of two persons and the forced disappearance of five persons, as well as the absence of a complete and effective investigation, which in turn caused suffering and anguish from not knowing the truth, constituted in itself an attack on the psychological and moral integrity of the members of the Ramírez family, compounded by the fact that some of the family members directly witnessed the events that occurred. The Commission also highlighted the disproportionate impact of violence on women and girls in the context of armed conflict. Therefore, the Commission concluded that the State violated the right to personal integrity and protection of the family to the detriment of the relatives of the victims identified in the Report.

597. Based on these findings of fact and law, the Inter-American Commission concluded that the State is responsible for violating the rights to recognition as a person before the law, life, personal integrity, personal liberty, judicial guarantees, protection of the family, rights of the child, and judicial protection, established in Articles 3, 4.1, 5.1, 7.1, 8.1, 17, 19, and 25.1 American Convention on Human Rights, in relation to Article 1.1 of the same instrument, to the detriment of the persons identified in the various sections of the report.

24. Orlando José Fernández Medina v. Venezuela

598. The case concerns Venezuela's international responsibility for violations of due process and judicial guarantees in the context of criminal proceedings against Orlando José Fernández Medina, in the context of his activity as a public figure and political leader.

599. Orlando José Fernández Medina was a political figure in Venezuela and was president of the political organization "Organización Fuerza en Movimiento". The petitioner indicated that during the years 1995 and 2000, he served as governor of the State of Lara.

600. Mr. Fernández reported that in 1999, criminal proceedings were initiated against him for embezzlement of public funds linked to his administration as governor, as well as other criminal proceedings in which attempts were made to implicate him in the commission of other crimes. He stated that this situation constituted "political persecution". According to the petitioner, these proceedings were initiated by various officials, including Luis Reyes Reyes, the former governor of the State of Lara between 2000 and 2008.

601. In particular, in 1999, the Attorney General's Office investigated a complaint filed against him by the Association of Retired and Pensioned Educators of the State of Lara, regarding the embezzlement of ten billion bolivars during his term as governor. According to the information provided, the case file is registered under number F13-F3-044-01 with the intervention of the 37th National Prosecutor's Office and the 22nd Prosecutor's Office of the Public Ministry of the State of Lara. The petitioner indicated that for six years he had no information about the case and that he was "under threat of arrest in the context of the criminal proceedings". He stated that during this period he was unable to give a statement in the case. He stated that on July 27, 2005, the authority of the 37th Prosecutor's Office with National Jurisdiction summoned Mr. Fernández Medina.

602. On August 17, 2005, he was charged with embezzlement. At the arraignment, Mr. Fernández's defense requested that various measures be taken, including the summons of the then Secretary General of the Government, Director General of Finance, Deputy of the Legislative Branch, and Comptroller General of the State of Lara. It is not known whether the Public Prosecutor's Office took the requested steps.

603. Mr. Fernández Medina's defense filed a request for a hearing before the Criminal Control Court to urge the Public Prosecutor's Office to conclude the case. On March 20, 2007, the court declared the defense's request inadmissible, arguing that he had not been formally identified as a defendant. On May 20, 2007, Mr. Fernández Medina's defense filed an appeal against the decision of the Fourth Control Court.

604. On May 18, 2009, the Court of Appeals of the Criminal Judicial Circuit of the State of Lara ruled to dismiss the appeal filed, indicating that although the procedural rule establishes a period of six months after the formal indictment of the suspect for the admissibility of the request to set a reasonable time limit for the completion of the investigation, "such rules establish an exception to their application in cases where the investigation refers to crimes against humanity, against the public interest, or in the area of human rights [...] whereas in the present case, the crime charged refers to embezzlement, as provided for and punishable under Article 60 of the Anti-Corruption Law". In this regard, it noted that "it is considered one of the crimes against the public interest, a circumstance that excludes the investigation from the setting of the hearing established in the aforementioned Article 313".

605. On February 22, 2010, the Supervisory Court set the date for the oral hearing on March 5. On the same day, the hearing was suspended at the request of the Public Prosecutor's Office on the grounds that it had not been duly notified. The hearing was eventually held on April 6, 2010. The summary records show that the Court urged the Public Prosecutor's Office to present the final brief within a reasonable period of time. The petitioner stated that the Public Prosecutor's Office has not, to this date, submitted its final brief, and therefore the criminal proceedings remain open.

606. Furthermore, the petitioner reported that on March 15, 2005, individuals entered Mr. Fernández Medina's home without a search warrant or evidence of a crime in progress, in order to search for a "political document". According to a newspaper article, two unknown men entered the home of Mr. Fernández Medina's family. On May 11, 2005, Mr. Fernández filed a complaint with the Attorney General's Office alleging that the government had been trying to fabricate judicial, administrative, and political measures against him.

607. The petitioner indicated that, as a result of his complaint to the Attorney General's Office, he was granted protective measures on several occasions, the last of which was on May 24, 2005. He stated that the government did not comply with the measures granted "in a clear position of keeping me subject to constant persecution of every kind". The parties did not inform the Commission regarding the implementation of security measures, their duration, or their alleged shortcomings.

608. Finally, the petitioner mentioned other criminal proceedings in which Mr. Fernández Medina had been implicated as part of a "political persecution". The petitioner stated that he had been investigated as the mastermind of a homicide, but that he had been cleared of the charges, a decision that was upheld by the Supreme Court of Justice in 2006. He maintained that during a criminal trial involving a group that forged documents in 2005, one of the defendants had mentioned his name. According to publicly available information, Mr. Fernández had received death threats by telephone from unknown individuals and had been insulted by the then Minister of Communication and Information.

609. In its Admissibility and Merits Report No. 201/24, the Inter-American Commission analyzed whether the Venezuelan State guaranteed the rights established in the Convention in the criminal proceedings against Mr. Fernández Medina. The IACHR observed omissions, shortcomings, and irregularities in the proceedings.

610. First, the Commission noted that Mr. Fernández Medina did not have access to the case file during the first six years of the proceedings, nor was he able to give testimony or exercise his right to defense, and that the State did not present arguments or justifications to explain this restriction, nor did it allege exceptional circumstances that prevented the Prosecutor's Office from receiving his testimony. Second, the IACHR noted the lack of due diligence in the initial stage of the investigation, including the failure to take evidentiary measures requested by the defense, which were never carried out.

611. Third, it highlighted that the Supervisory Court denied Mr. Fernández Medina's defense request to set a hearing and receive his testimony because it was unaware that he had been charged by the Prosecutor's Office. The Commission indicated that the authorities did not provide explanations as to whether the Prosecutor's Office had incorrectly informed the Supervisory Court of the procedural progress of the case or whether there was an error in the court's analysis of the proceedings in the case file.

612. Fourth, the Commission noted that Mr. Fernández Medina's defense filed an appeal against the Supervisory Court's refusal to schedule a hearing, alleging a violation of the right to defense and the right to be heard. However, the appeal was dismissed by the Fourth Supervisory Court, which merely stated that, in accordance with domestic law, it was not necessary to hold a hearing but made no reference to the reasons why Mr. Fernández Medina's statement had not been taken during all this time.

613. Fifth, the Commission noted that, although the Supervisory Court eventually set a date for the hearing and to take Mr. Fernández Medina's statement, the hearing was suspended because the Public Prosecutor's Office had not been notified, which is a clear irregularity in the handling of the case. Sixth, the Commission observed that at the hearing on April 6, 20 , the Supervisory Court ordered the Public Prosecutor's Office to present the final brief "within a reasonable time" and that, according to the petitioner, this has not been done. On the contrary, to date, the criminal proceedings against Mr. Fernández Medina remain open.

614. The Commission emphasized that, for these reasons, it is clear that in the criminal proceedings against Mr. Fernández Medina, the victim's right to be heard was not guaranteed, as he was not allowed access to the case file or to present evidence, and requests for the Public Prosecutor's Office to take action and close the case were dismissed. Added to this are the unjustified delays, including a postponement of the taking of his statement and the holding of an oral hearing. The IACHR emphasized that, despite all this, the proceedings remain open without the State having reported on the steps taken in recent years, their status, or the reasons why they have not been concluded. The Commission also considered that all the aforementioned shortcomings, omissions, and irregularities are part of a context in which the Venezuelan State initiates criminal proceedings against political dissidents with the aim of threatening and intimidating them for their political stance.

615. In view of all the elements noted, the Commission considered that during the criminal proceedings against Mr. Fernández Medina, his right to defense and his right to be heard were not guaranteed, the judicial decisions were not duly reasoned, and the remedies presented have not been adequate or effective in remedying such violations. Consequently, the IACHR found the State responsible for violating the rights to judicial guarantees and judicial protection.

616. With regard to the analysis of reasonable time, based on the four applicable criteria, the Commission considered that the proceedings, which remain open after almost twenty years, have not been resolved within a reasonable time, and therefore found the State responsible for violating the right to judicial guarantees.

617. Based on these findings of fact and law, the Inter-American Commission concluded that the State is responsible for violating the rights to judicial guarantees and judicial protection established in Articles 8.1 and 25.1 of the American Convention, in relation to Article 1.1 of the same instrument, to the detriment of Orlando José Fernández Medina.

25. Hugo Loris Mantovani v. Argentina[201]

618. The case relates to Argentina's international responsibility for violating the right to appeal a conviction to the detriment of Mr. Hugo Loris Mantovani, who was subjected to criminal proceedings in the jurisdiction of the City of Buenos Aires.

619. On April 4, 2002, Oral Court No. 25 of the Federal Capital handed down a guilty verdict and sentenced Mr. Hugo Loris Mantovani to 10 months of imprisonment, suspended, and payment of procedural costs for finding him criminally responsible as the perpetrator of the offense of fraud by fraudulent administration to the detriment of the company "Food Shop S.A." The court found that, in his capacity as president of the company, Mr. Mantovani signed six promissory notes in favor of Mr. Benjamín Quiroga, an employee of the company, which were found to be without cause and without any accounting basis, and therefore without any debt to justify their issuance. The judgment was based on testimonial evidence from employees, company documentation, and an accounting expert opinion.

620. Mr. Mantovani's defense filed an appeal against this ruling based on Article 456, paragraph 2, of the National Code of Criminal Procedure, in accordance with Article 404, paragraph 2, alleging that it lacked sufficient grounds, which made it arbitrary, and requested its annulment and the referral of the case to another court. It also invoked the guarantee of a second instance established in Article 8.2.h of the American Convention, relying on precedents such as Maqueda v. Argentina of the IACHR and the ruling of the Supreme Court of the Nation in the Giroldi case, where that Court established the character of the Criminal Cassation Chamber as an

621. With regard to the grievances, the defense argued that the ruling was not a logical conclusion based on the evidence and that the promissory notes were not without cause, but rather a means of payment for work performed by Mr. Quiroga in the installation and maintenance of cold storage rooms on the company's premises. The defense also argued that there was testimonial and documentary evidence supporting the existence of such an employment relationship and that the Court had made a partial assessment of the evidence. In particular, the defense attorney referred to the existence of witnesses such as the company's lawyer, the head of security, and an employee, who claimed to have seen Mr. Quiroga performing repairs on the cold storage rooms.

622. Likewise, Mr. Mantovani's defense attorney argued that the lack of reasoning in the conviction as regards the establishment of the crime of fraudulent administration is also reflected in the fact that the trial court did not rule on the existence of alleged urgent circumstances that required the work in the cold storage rooms be carried out expeditiously, even if it meant paying Mr. Quiroga an amount higher than the market rates prevailing at the time.

623. On May 6, 2002, Criminal Court No. 25 decided not to uphold the appeal, arguing that the defense only offered a different interpretation of the evidence and did not demonstrate arbitrariness. It held that the appeal did not meet the requirements for admissibility and that the grievance was reduced to a disagreement with the court's assessment of the evidence. The Oral Criminal Court further stated that, "when a cassation appeal is lodged, any alleged errors must be identified as having occurred with respect to the factual basis established by the trial court, since allowing a challenge to the version of the facts set out in the judgment would undermine the benefits that the principle of immediacy affords in the assessment of the evidence at the trial stage."

624. In response to this decision, the defense filed a complaint appeal for denial of the cassation appeal, in which it reiterated its arguments and contended that the court exceeded its jurisdiction by analyzing the substantive merits of the appeal, which was the exclusive responsibility of the Cassation Chamber. It asserted that the court should have limited itself to verifying the formal requirements and that its decision violated the right to appeal the judgment.

625. On June 27, 2002, Chamber I of the National Criminal Cassation Chamber dismissed the complaint for denial of the appeal filed by the public defender. It considered that the defense failed to refute the arguments of the trial court, especially in relation to the lack of arbitrariness, and that the appeal lacked independent grounds. Furthermore, in response to the defense's claim that the Oral Court had concluded that the promissory notes had been delivered to Mr. Quiroga without cause, without providing evidence to support that assertion, the Cassation Chamber cited the ruling of the Oral Court and stated that "it is noted that the judge reasonably substantiated his decision, especially with regard to the fact that the aforementioned credit instruments—promissory notes—were without cause, which is why the grievance raised by the official defense focused on the lack of substantiation of this issue is inadmissible".

626. In response, the defense filed an extraordinary federal appeal, insisting that the conviction violated the principle of sufficient reasoning, the principle of favor rei, and the guarantee of double instance. On August 22, 2002, Chamber I of the National Criminal Cassation Chamber declared the extraordinary federal appeal inadmissible, arguing that the defense's arguments did not constitute a federal issue, as they referred to matters of evidentiary assessment. The Chamber also stated that the extraordinary appeal could not succeed in relation to the alleged violation of the guarantee of a second instance, since the appellant had not demonstrated "how the arguments that he could have developed during the cassation proceedings would have changed the outcome".

627. Finally, the defense filed a complaint with the Supreme Court of Justice of the Nation for denial of the extraordinary federal appeal, reiterating its grievances and arguing that the Chamber failed to respond to the substantive questions, limiting itself to transcribing excerpts from the conviction. On September 8, 2003, the Supreme Court declared the extraordinary appeal inadmissible pursuant to Article 280 of the National Code of Civil and Commercial Procedure.

628. In its Report 149/23, the Commission noted that the criminal proceedings against Mr. Mantovani were governed by the provisions of the Argentine Code of Criminal Procedure, approved by Law 23,984, enacted on August 21, 1991. It also noted that the sentence handed down against Mr. Mantovani and the successive appeals and extraordinary federal appeals filed by his defense were resolved before the Supreme Court of Justice of the Nation issued the "Casal" ruling, which provided a new interpretive guideline regarding the grounds for admissibility of appeals, considerably broadening the scope of what could be considered grounds for appeal.

629. Similarly, the Commission considered it necessary to note that until the enactment of the Federal Criminal Procedure Code in December 2014—which to date has not yet been fully implemented—there were no legal reforms that incorporated the doctrine of the "Casal" ruling into the text of the criminal procedure code. Nor was any regulatory provision issued to extend the effects of the Casal ruling to those proceedings that had already been concluded prior to its issuance. For these reaons, the Commission observed that, in the present case, the regulatory reforms and jurisprudential changes subsequently adopted by the Argentine State are not applicable to the specific situation of the victim.

630. The Commission noted that it understands that the existing regulatory limitation in the National Criminal Procedure Code on the admissibility of appeals against convictions in force at the time of the events made it impossible, in this specific case, for Mr. Mantovani to exercise his right to a comprehensive review of the judicial decision handed down by the court of first instance.

631. The Commission emphasized that a comparative analysis of the grievances raised by Mr. Mantovani's defense and the responses provided to them by the higher courts, especially by the Cassation Chamber, reaffirm the State's international responsibility for the violation of the right to a comprehensive review of the conviction.

632. Indeed, the Commission noted that the main point raised by the defense in its appeal focused on challenging the conclusion reached by the trial court regarding the existence of financial damage to the company "Food Shop S.A.," of which he was the President and managed the assets, and that it mentioned the testimony of three workers who had observed Mr. Quiroga entering the company's premises and who attested that he had knowledge of cold storage maintenance. However, Chamber I of the Cassation Chamber did not assess these testimonies or express the reasons why the statements they provided were not sufficient to modify the conclusion reached by the trial court that handed down the conviction.

633. On the contrary, the Commission noted that, both in its decision of June 27, 2002, which dismissed the complaint against the denial of the cassation appeal, and in its judgment of August 22, 2002, which declared the extraordinary federal appeal "inadmissible", Chamber I of the Cassation Chamber merely reproduced extensive passages from the first instance judgment without clearly stating the reasons why it agreed with it. The IACHR considered that this course of action taken by the court that was called upon to review the first instance judgment affected Mr. Mantovani's right to a comprehensive review of the conviction, since it prevented his grievances from being analyzed in depth, especially when they questioned the very existence of the act that was the subject of the criminal complaint.

634. Finally, the Commission noted that the efforts made by Mr. Mantovani's defense team to have the Supreme Court of Justice of the Nation correct the procedure and take the necessary steps to guarantee the right to a comprehensive review of the conviction were unsuccessful. This was the case since , despite the fact that the defense raised and substantiated the existence of a federal issue that would warrant the intervention of the highest national court, the Supreme Court, in application of Article 280 of the Civil and Commercial Code of the Nation, decided to dismiss in limine the complaint for denial of the extraordinary federal appeal filed without entering into its study. Consequently, the Commission considered that this decision closed off any possibility that the victim in this case could obtain a comprehensive review of his conviction and, in particular, obtain a response to the arguments made by his defense attorneys.

635. Based on these findings of fact and law, the Commission concluded that the Argentine State is responsible for violating the rights to appeal the judgment and to judicial protection enshrined in Articles 8.2.h and 25.1 of the American Convention, respectively, in relation to the obligations established in Articles 1.1 and 2 of the same instrument, to the detriment of Hugo Loris Mantovani.

26. Jurandir Ferreira de Lima v. Brazil

636. The case concerns Brazil's international responsibility for the forced disappearance of Jurandir Ferreira de Lima, as well as for its failure to investigate the facts.

637. At the time of the events, Jurandir Ferreira de Lima, a man of African descent, was 30 years old and served as president of the Residents' Association, located in Vilage Pavuna, Rio de Janeiro. According to statements made by Mr. Ferreira de Lima's wife, he was constantly threatened by police officers because, in his role as president of the Residents' Association, he refused to allow places for the sale of narcotics to be set up in the community, and he had animosity toward a man named "Roberto" with whom he disputed the leadership of the Association.

638. According to the testimony of his mother, Mrs. Beatriz, on March 14, 1995, her son left home and has not returned since. This coincides with the statement of his wife, who said that Jurandir left home in the direction of the Residents' Association, saying he would return around 3 p.m., but never returned.

639. According to Mrs. Beatriz, a man named Marcel saw her son being taken from the Residents' Association by two armed police officers in the direction of a water pump. Marcel also reportedly told the victim's mother that the police took Jurandir to a pigsty, where his body was ground up and fed to the pigs. The information provided indicates that, in light of this situation, Jurandir Ferreira de Lima's relatives began to search for him. According to Mrs. Beatriz's statement, when she began to search for her son, an armed man told her that he had been killed by a police officer.

640. After the victim's disappearance, his wife stated that she searched for him in morgues, police stations, and hospitals, without finding his whereabouts, so she went to the 31st Civil Police Station in Ricardo de Albuquerque. According to Mrs. Beatriz's statement, she and her family began receiving threatening phone calls after her son's disappearance, and when she met with a group of police officers, they told her that if they continued investigating, they would kill her entire family.

641. On March 17, 1995, the victim's wife reported his disappearance to the 31st Police Station in the Ricardo de Albuquerque neighborhood, a report registered under number 0543/95. However, on October 22, 2018, the Civil Police informed the petitioner that there was no investigation related to the aforementioned report.

642. Subsequently, on April 27, 2004, Ms. Beatriz gave a statement to the Public Prosecutor's Office. On June 17, 2004, the Public Prosecutor's Office initiated administrative proceedings for the victim's disappearance, which were handled by the 22nd Criminal Investigation Prosecutor's Office. On February 24, 2005, Solange Ribeiro de Lima, Beatriz Ferreira da Silva, and João Maria Ferreira de Lima testified before the Deputy Attorney General's Office for Institutional Affairs. Beatriz stated that she knew who was responsible for her son's disappearance, including four police officers. She also stated that, for fear of reprisals, she would not reveal their names, limiting herself to stating that a man named "Rogério", who was an informant for prison guard Roberto and had since died, was involved in the disappearance.

643. According to the information available on the administrative proceedings, on June 29, 2007, the Public Prosecutor's Office requested that a police investigation into the events be opened. The Commission did not have information allowing it to determine whether that investigation had been initiated or conducted.

However, it was informed that on March 30, 2014, the Public Prosecutor's Office closed the administrative proceedings due to lack of evidence.

644. In its Merits Report No. 268/22, the Commission considered that several contextual and specific elements of the case suggest that the victim was deprived of his liberty and disappeared with the participation of State agents. In particular, the Commission noted that there are contextual elements that point to the involvement of police officers within the communities and, specifically, in Rio de Janeiro. Furthermore, Ms. Beatriz reported to the Public Prosecutor's Office that four police officers were involved in her son's disappearance and that the victim's profile matches that of victims of forced disappearance in Rio de Janeiro, according to the Subcommission on Truth and Democracy – "Mães de Acari" together with the Human Rights Commission of the Rio de Janeiro Legislature (ALERJ), that is, a man of African descent living in a favela.

645. The Commission also noted that, given all of these elements, which point to the deprivation of liberty and subsequent disappearance of the victim by State agents, the State did not provide an alternative hypothesis based on a diligent and effective investigation. For these reasons, the Commission considered that the first and second requirements for disappearance were met, since for the purposes of this international proceeding it was considered sufficiently proven that the deprivation of Jurandir Ferreira de Lima's liberty was carried out with the participation of State agents.

646. Regarding the third element of enforced disappearance, consisting of the refusal to reveal the whereabouts or fate of the victim, the Commission noted that the first complaint of the events was filed on March 17, 1995, that is, only two days after the alleged abduction occurred. Despite this, based on the information available, the Commission did not find that immediate steps had been taken to effectively search for Mr. de Lima, and therefore considered that the lack of an effective investigation served as a mechanism to cover up the responsibility of the perpetrators, particularly given the lack of immediate measures to locate the victim and those responsible.

647. In view of these considerations, the IACHR found that the elements of forced disappearance, which continues to this day as the whereabouts or fate of the victim have not been determined, are sufficiently proven. Consequently, it concluded that the Brazilian State is responsible for the violation of the rights to juridical personality, life, personal integrity, and personal liberty.

648. Regarding the investigation of the facts, the Commission referred first to the initial stages and considered that the necessary steps were not taken in a timely manner, including those aimed at taking statements from the relatives of Mr. Jurandir Ferreira. The Commission also noted that the State did not refer to any effective search efforts and that, on the contrary, according to Ms. Beatriz's statement, when she reported her son's disappearance, the police chief dismissed the report and suggested that she wait.

649. With regard to the logical lines of investigation, the IACHR found that the file did not show that the State had conducted effective investigations into the police officers allegedly involved in the victim's disappearance. The IACHR noted that this was the case even though the victim's relatives specifically stated to the Public Prosecutor's Office that some police officers could be involved in the disappearance. The Commission had no information indicating that they were interviewed or timely involved in the investigation, or that such complaints had been adequately investigated to clarify the alleged responsibility of police officers.

650. Regarding the reasonable time, the Commission noted that on March 17, 1995, the victim's wife reported his disappearance to the Civil Police. Subsequently, and without any indication that an investigation had been conducted, the Public Prosecutor's Office initiated proceedings that were closed on March 30, 2014, that is, more than 20 years after the events began, without the victim's whereabouts being determined and without anyone being effectively held responsible for the violations, despite indications of the involvement of State agents. The Commission observed that the State has not justified this delay on the grounds of the complexity of the case. In fact, the Commission noted that, although this is a case of disappearance, the information available to it shows that the State has not acted to identify the persons involved in the disappearance. Regarding the actions of the interested party, the Commission observed that there is no information in the file to indicate that the victims obstructed the investigations. With respect to the conduct of the State authorities, the Commission emphasized that the available information indicates that there was no thorough investigation by them.

651. For these reasons, the Commission concluded that the Brazilian State failed to comply with its obligation to investigate, prosecute, and punish, within a reasonable time and with due diligence, the forced disappearance of Mr. Jurandir. Consequently, it determined that the State is responsible for violating the rights to judicial guarantees and judicial protection, as well as the obligations contained in the Inter-American Convention on Forced Disappearance of Persons.

652. Furthermore, the Commission noted that, to date, the Brazilian State has not incorporated the criminal offense of enforced disappearance into its legal system through the mechanisms provided for in its legal system and with all its constituent elements, and therefore considered that it has also failed to comply with its obligation to adopt domestic legal provisions.

653. In addition, the Commission noted that Mr. Ferreira de Lima's work clearly fell within the concept of human rights defender, in his role as leader of the "Association of Residents of the Chico Mendes Community", which exposed him to a situation of particular risk due to the actions of armed groups whose interests his work opposed. For these reasons, the Commission considered it proven that Mr. Ferreira de Lima's forced disappearance was motivated by his work in opposition to these groups. The Commission also mentioned that the situation of impunity surrounding his forced disappearance reasonably sends a message that acts of violence against human rights defenders will not be investigated, creating an intimidating effect on other human rights defenders who denounce acts of violence committed by State agents in Brazilian favelas. In this regard, the Commission determined that the State is responsible for the violation of the right to freedom of expression and the right of association.

654. Finally, the Commission considered that the disappearance of their loved one, the uncertainty of his fate or whereabouts, and the absence of truth and justice more than 27 years after the events occurred, caused suffering and distress to the family members of Jurandir Ferreira de Lima, in violation of their right to psychological and moral integrity.

655. Based on the findings of fact and law in the report, the Commission concluded that the Brazilian State is responsible for the violation of Articles 3, 4, 5, 8.1, 13, 16, and 25.1 of the American Convention in relation to Articles 1.1 and 2 of the American Convention and Article I, paragraphs a, b, and d, of the Inter-American Convention on Forced Disappearance of Persons, as of February 3, 2014, the date on which Brazil deposited the instrument of ratification of that treaty.

27. Members of Voluntad Popular v. Venezuela

656. The case concerns Venezuela's international responsibility for various violations of the rights of members and leaders of Voluntad Popular, related to the protests that took place in Venezuela in February 2014.

657. At the time of the events, the victims in this case belonged to the Venezuelan political party Voluntad Popular, with some serving as mayors and councilors in different regions of the country. According to the petitioner and various press reports published in the media, the members of that party were subjected to threats, harassment, acts of violence, detentions, and irregularities in the judicial proceedings against them, in the context of the protests that took place in 2014.

658. In its Admissibility and Merits Report No. 57/25, the Commission first referred to the situation of Daniel Ceballos, Alexander Tirado, Raúl Emilio Baduel, Rosmit Mantilla, Ángel Contreras, Gilberto Sojo with Carolina González and her daughter, Enrique Sierra, and Antonio Rivero. With regard to the arrests, the Commission noted that these individuals were arrested on March 19, 2014, March 21, 2014, May 8, 2014, November 25, 2014, June 4, 2014, and April 27, 2013, respectively, by State agents without an arrest warrant and not in a situation of flagrante delicto.

659. The Commission noted that Mr. Tirado, Mr. Baduel, and Mr. Contreras were participating in peaceful protests when they were detained and transferred by security agents without explanation. Likewise, Rosmit Mantilla was detained after a search of his home was conducted without an arrest warrant.

660. In turn, Mr. Sojo, Mr. Sierra, and Mr. Rivera were detained after being deceived by agents of the Bolivarian National Intelligence Service (SEBIN). In this regard, the Commission noted that Mr. Sojo was summoned to an establishment for having won a raffle and, upon arrival, was apprehended along with his partner Carolina González by agents dressed in civilian clothing and transferred to the El Helicoide Penitentiary. SEBIN personnel also transferred his underage daughter to El Helicoide, where she spent the night. In the case of Mr. Sierra, the Commission noted that, according to the petitioner, he went to the SEBIN headquarters to inquire about a family member and was detained. Finally, Mr. Rivero was summoned to El Helicoide to participate in a meeting with a Minister, but upon arrival he was detained by SEBIN agents, who did not inform him of the reasons for his detention or show him an arrest warrant.

661. The Commission observed that, in all of the above cases, State agents acted without a court order or under the assumption of flagrante delicto and found that they were detained illegally and arbitrarily. With regard to Carolina González and her daughter, the IACHR emphasized that she was a child at the time of the events and that, together with Ms. González, she was detained on the night of November 25, 2014, at El Helicoide without being provided with special care or adequate food.

662. Similarly, the IACHR noted that the State did not present information that could corroborate that State agents informed the victims of the reasons for their detention. The Commission considered, for the purposes of this case, that the victims were not informed of the reasons for their detention in accordance with the standards required by the American Convention.

663. The IACHR also observed that in the case of Mr. Sojo, he remained inside El Helicoide in the custody of SEBIN agents from the morning of November 26, 2014, until he was brought before a judicial authority at 11:00 p.m. on November 28, 2014. The Commission noted that the State did not dispute this information or provide explanations as to why he had not been brought before a judicial authority within 48 hours of his detention.

664. For these reasons, the Commission determined that the State is responsible for the violation of the right to personal liberty of the victims identified above, as well as for the violation of the right to protection of children to the detriment of Ms. González's daughter.

665. With regard to the victims' conditions of detention, the IACHR noted that Leopoldo López, Daniel Ceballos, Alexander Tirado, and Raúl Emilio Baduel had been held in confinement for long periods of time, a circumstance that is also corroborated by information obtained through various media outlets and observations made by the IACHR in its monitoring functions.

666. In the case of Mr. López, the petitioners indicated that he was held in complete isolation for periods of up to five months. Daniel Ceballos was reportedly held in isolation for up to three weeks at a time, and Mr. Tirado and Mr. Baduel were also held in isolation for several days.

667. The Commission also found that Leopoldo López, Alexander Tirado, and Raúl Emilio Baduel stated that they were physically and psychologically abused. In this regard, the three reported being beaten, insulted, and threatened while officers pointed guns at them. Likewise, both Mr. Tirado and Mr. Baduel reported that at night, officers played pro-government music at high volume to prevent them from sleeping. In turn, both were allegedly forced to lie naked on hot asphalt, and it was reported that prison guards threw tear gas bombs into their cells. The Commission noted that the State did not dispute this allegation or provide an alternative version of events.

668. For these reasons, the Commission emphasized that, since Leopoldo López, Daniel Ceballos, Alexander Tirado, and Raúl Emilio Baduel were deprived of their liberty, the State of Venezuela was the guarantor of their rights, including their personal integrity. The Commission considered that the victims' account demonstrates that this treatment was intentional in that it was applied only to them and not to the entire prison population. The IACHR emphasized that the isolation imposed was intended to punish the victims for denouncing their conditions of detention. Likewise, the fact that Mr. Tirado and Mr. Baduel were forced to lie naked on hot asphalt, causing burns all over their bodies, demonstrates that they suffered severe physical pain that was intended to cause them harm. For these reasons, the Commission found that these elements were sufficient to conclude that, while in detention, Leopoldo López, Daniel Ceballos, Alexander Tirado, and Raúl Emilio Baduel were subjected to intentional acts that caused them intense physical and mental suffering, which constituted acts of torture. Thus, the IACHR concluded that the State is responsible for the violation of the right to personal integrity.

669. With regard to the duty to investigate acts of torture, the Commission emphasized that, according to the petitioner's allegations and information gathered from the media, the aforementioned abuses were repeatedly reported, including in the context of the criminal proceedings in which the defendants were involved, to prison authorities and the media. The Commission noted that the petitioner indicated that none of these complaints had been processed and that the judicial authorities had not taken any measures to remedy the situation.

670. The Commission noted that only in the case of Messrs. Tirado and Baduel did the judge in charge of the proceedings order their transfer to another detention center. However, in none of the cases was an investigation opened to determine what had happened and/or identify those responsible. The IACHR noted that the State did not dispute this information and emphasized that, in this case, there was a complete failure on the part of the Venezuelan State to provide an explanation of the situation of the victims while they were in its custody, as well as a lack of clarification of what happened and total impunity.

671. The Commission also found that, to date, there has been no investigation into the acts of torture against the four victims and considered that the State is responsible for the violation of the rights to judicial guarantees and judicial protection to the detriment of Leopoldo López, Daniel Ceballos, Alexander Tirado, and Raúl Emilio Baduel.

672. In addition, the IACHR noted that the documentation presented to it did not indicate that any medical examination had been performed on the victims during their detention. Furthermore, the State did not provide any information on this matter, nor did it explain how their health was monitored. The Commission also noted that Leopoldo López and Antonio Rivero went on hunger strikes while in detention and did not receive medical attention during that time.

673. In the case of Ángel Contreras, the IACHR highlighted that the petitioners explained that during his detention he suffered "great psychological harm, with deterioration of his health". In particular, the Commission noted that, according to the petitioners, Mr. Contreras had attempted suicide several times during his detention. In this regard, the Commission considered that the Venezuelan State failed to provide an explanation regarding the situation of the aforementioned individuals and noted the lack of medical assistance while they remained in its custody. Based on the foregoing, the Commission concluded that the Venezuelan State is responsible for violating the rights to personal integrity and health.

674. With regard to judicial guarantees, the Commission observed that there were multiple shortcomings, irregularities, and omissions in the criminal proceedings against Messrs. López, Ceballos, Tirado, Baduel, Mantilla, Contreras, and Sojo.

675. First, with regard to the right to defense, the Commission noted that, in repeated cases, members of the Venezuelan government, including the President, made comments to the media about various members of the Voluntad Popular party and their alleged responsibility. In particular, the Commission highlighted the case of Mr. Leopoldo López, who was accused in the media by Diosdado Cabello, the president of the Legislative Assembly, of being responsible for the deaths that occurred during the protests. The Commission emphasized that this public statement was made before he was arrested, brought before a judicial authority, and formally charged. In turn, once the criminal proceedings against Mr. López had begun, President Maduro stated at a press conference, "Leopoldo López has to pay and he will pay; he has done a lot of damage to this country". The IACHR considered that, in the aforementioned context, such public statements could have fostered a belief or prejudice regarding his guilt, in addition to revealing a possible bias in the evaluation of the facts by the judicial authority hearing the case. Thus, the Commission considered that the State is responsible for violating the right to the presumption of innocence.

676. Second, Messrs. Ceballos, Tirado, Baduel, Contreras, Sojo, Sierra, and Rivero were detained by State agents without being informed of the charges against them, a matter that was not remedied throughout the judicial proceedings. The Commission concluded that the State is responsible for violating the defendants' right to be informed in advance and in detail of the charges against them.

677. Third, the Commission noted that during Mr. Sojo's arbitrary detention at the Helicoide, his private defense attorneys went there to meet with him, but State agents informed them that he was not being held there. The IACHR noted that ten days passed between Mr. Sojo's arrest and the time his private attorneys were admitted and given access to the case file. Given this situation, the Commission considered that the State was responsible for violating the right to be assisted by a defense attorney of one's choice.

678. Fourth, the IACHR emphasized that in various cases, the petitioners argued that the victims' defense attorneys did not have prior access to the evidence used against their clients, nor were they allowed to present evidence. In the case of Leopoldo López, the petitioners argued that during one of the oral trial hearings, the Public Prosecutor's Office presented an expert witness on the tweets published by the victim without them having had prior knowledge that an expert opinion had been ordered. In turn, in the cases of Messrs. López and Mantilla, the petitioners indicated that the evidence and witnesses offered by the defense were not admitted. Likewise, in the context of Daniel Ceballos' oral trial, the petitioners maintained that the defense proposed 91 witnesses and that only 12 were admitted. For these reasons, the Commission concluded that the State is responsible for violating the right of the defense to question witnesses present in court and to obtain the appearance, as witnesses or experts, of other persons who could shed light on the facts.

679. Fifth, the Commission highlighted the case of Rosmit Mantilla, in which the petitioner argued that for 27 days his defense was unable to appeal the custodial measure imposed on him because the court "was not in session". The Commission noted that the State did not provide any explanation as to why the relevant court was not available for this purpose or how the right to challenge the decision on the victim's liberty was guaranteed. The Commission concluded that the State is responsible for the violation of the right to appeal the ruling.

680. With regard to the violation of the guarantee of independence and impartiality of the competent judge, the IACHR highlighted two testimonies related to the case of Leopoldo López that indicated a lack of impartiality and independence in the judicial system, in addition to the irregularities mentioned in the criminal proceedings against Mr. López, such as the appointment of the former Deputy Minister of Communications, a recognized ally of the Venezuelan government, as an expert witness for the Public Prosecutor's Office, and the limitation of the right to speak at the request of the Public Prosecutor's Office. Similarly, in the case of Daniel Ceballos, the Commission observed indications of a lack of impartiality on the part of the judicial authority involved. For these reasons, the Commission found that the courts that tried Leopoldo López and Daniel Ceballos did not meet the requirements inherent in the guarantees of independence and impartiality, and concluded that the State was responsible for the violation of that right.

681. Finally, regarding the guarantee of a reasonable time, the IACHR ruled on the four criteria for its analysis in the cases of Leopoldo López, Daniel Ceballos, Alexander Tirado, and Raúl Emilio Baduel, as well as those of Rosmit Mantilla and Ángel Contreras. The Commission noted that all of these proceedings had been ongoing for more than ten years, without the current procedural status being known to date, and considered that they had not been resolved within a reasonable time.

682. With regard to the alleged acts of violence, threats, and harassment against members of the Voluntad Popular party, the Commission considered it sufficiently proven that, as a result of the protests that took place in 2014, members of Voluntad Popular suffered a series of acts of violence, harassment, and threats that, due to their nature and connection to the party's status as an opposition political party, constituted violations of their personal integrity, freedom of expression, freedom of association, and political rights.

683. Taking into account the number of complaints received, the time that has elapsed since the events, and the fact that, to date, no one has been identified as responsible, the Commission considered that the investigation mechanisms have proven ineffective as suitable means of identifying the sources of risk and enabling the design of measures to, on the one hand, dismantle the risk and, on the other, effectively protect the members of Voluntad Popular in order to prevent the materialization or continuation of the events against them. In this regard, the Commission noted that the lack of an effective response in the context of the investigations constituted a breach of the duty to guarantee.

684. Additionally, the Commission observed that the Venezuelan State has not adopted protective measures in favor of the members of Voluntad Popular, nor has it complied with the precautionary measures ordered by the Commission for that purpose. On the contrary, the Commission considered that the State actively adopted measures that exacerbated the situation of risk in which the members of the political party found themselves. The IACHR took note of statements made by State officials regarding the work of the members of Voluntad Popular. The Commission observed that after the protests that began in February 2014, President Nicolás Maduro, Minister Rodríguez, Deputy Diosdado Cabello, and other authorities indicated that Voluntad Popular had ties to the United States, that its members were economically motivated terrorists, and that they were seeking to overthrow the democratic government. On these occasions, the party's political leaders, Leopoldo López, Darío Ramírez, David Smolansky, Raymar Humbria, Gaby Arellano, Ana Karina García, Adriana Pichardo, Theresly Malavé, and María del Carmen Llanos were personally accused of conspiring against the government.

685. For these reasons, the Commission found that the State failed to fulfill its duty to protect in accordance with its international obligations and that it also failed to fulfill its duty to respect by making itself a part of the risk faced by Voluntad Popular through the specific actions of its authorities, as well as by showing tolerance and acquiescence with regard to the acts committed against it.

686. Additionally, the Commission considered that there are multiple elements to corroborate that the various infringements suffered by the members of Voluntad Popular were linked to their work as political activists opposed to the government, and that these were intended to stigmatize and intimidate them and prevent them from continuing with those activities.

687. Thus, the IACHR concluded that with regard to the series of acts of violence, threats, and harassment that, by their very nature, are linked to the opposition activities and protests against the government carried out by Voluntad Popular, the Venezuelan State is responsible for violating the rights to personal integrity, honor and dignity, freedom of expression, freedom of association, and political rights of the members of the Voluntad Popular political party identified in the report.

688. Finally, the Commission noted that the petitioners reported that many members of the Voluntad Popular party had been forced to leave Venezuelan territory to protect their safety. In particular, almost a year after regaining his freedom, State agents raided the headquarters of Voluntad Popular and attempted to arrest Mr. Antonio Rivero without a warrant, prompting him to go into hiding to protect his physical integrity. Similarly, Darío Ramírez stated that he had received various "threats" from SEBIN agents and had been accused by Deputy Diosdado Cabello of being part of a terrorist plot to overthrow the government. Faced with this situation, he decided to leave Caracas and go into hiding. Consequently, the Commission found that Venezuela failed to comply with its obligation to guarantee the right of Antonio Rivero and Darío Ramírez to move and reside freely in their country.

689. Based on the findings of fact and law in its report, the Inter-American Commission concluded that the State is responsible for violating the right to personal liberty guaranteed in Articles 7.1, 7.2, 7.3, and 7.4 of the American Convention, in relation to Article 1.1 of the same instrument, to the detriment of Daniel Ceballos, Alexander Tirado, Raúl Emilio Baduel, Rosmit Mantilla, Ángel Contreras, Gilberto Sojo, Carolina González and her daughter—whose name is unknown to the Commission—Antonio Rivero, and Enrique Sierra; as well as the right of the child established in Article 19 of the American Convention, in relation to Article 1(1) of the same instrument, to the detriment of the girl. It also found that the State is responsible for the violation of the right enshrined in Article 7.5 of the American Convention, in relation to Article 1.1 of the same instrument, to the detriment of Gilberto Sojo. The Commission also concluded that the State is responsible for violating the right to personal integrity enshrined in Articles 5.1 and 5.2 of the American Convention in relation to the obligation set forth in Article 1.1 of the same instrument to the detriment of Leopoldo López, Daniel Ceballos, Alexander Tirado, and Raúl Emilio Baduel.

690. In turn, the Commission considered that the State is responsible for violating the rights to judicial guarantees and judicial protection, established in Articles 8.1 and 25.1 of the American Convention, in relation to Article 1.1 of the same instrument, to the detriment of Leopoldo López, Daniel Ceballos, Alexander Tirado, and Raúl Emilio Baduel. Additionally, the IACHR concluded that the State is responsible for violating Articles 1, 6, and 8 of the Inter-American Convention to Prevent and Punish Torture to the detriment of Leopoldo López, Daniel Ceballos, Alexander Tirado, and Raúl Emilio Baduel. The Commission concluded that the Venezuelan State is responsible for violating the rights to personal integrity and health enshrined in Articles 5.1 and 26 of the American Convention, in relation to Article 1.1 of the same instrument, to the detriment of Leopoldo López, Daniel Ceballos, Alexander Tirado, Raúl Emilio Baduel, Ángel Contreras, and Antonio Rivero. Likewise, the IACHR found that the State is responsible for violating the right to the presumption of innocence, recognized in Article 8.2 of the Convention, to the detriment of Leopoldo López; the right to know the charges against them, provided for in Article 8.2.b of the American Convention, to the detriment of Daniel Ceballos, Alexander Tirado, Raúl Emilio Baduel, Ángel Contreras, Gilberto Sojo, Enrique Sierra, and Antonio Rivero; the right to be assisted by a defense attorney of their choice, recognized in Article 8.2.d, to the detriment of Gilberto Sojo; the right to access to evidence enshrined in Article 8.2.f, to the detriment of Leopoldo López, Rosmit Mantilla, and Daniel Ceballos; the right to appeal the ruling recognized in Article 8.2.h, to the detriment of Rosmit Mantilla, all in relation to Article 1.1 of the American Convention. The Commission also concluded that the State violated the right to guarantees of independence and impartiality enshrined in Article 8.1 of the American Convention to the detriment of Leopoldo López and Daniel Ceballos, in relation to Article 1.1. The IACHR held the State responsible for violating the right regulated in Article 8.1 of the American Convention, in relation to Article 1.1 of the same instrument, to the detriment of Leopoldo López, Daniel Ceballos, Alexander Tirado, Raúl Emilio Baduel, Rosmit Mantilla, and Ángel Contreras.

691. It also concluded that the Venezuelan State is responsible for violating the rights to personal integrity, honor and dignity, freedom of expression, freedom of association, and political rights, established in Articles 5.1, 11.1, 13.1, 16.1, and 23.1 of the American Convention, in relation to the obligations established in Article 1.1 of the same instrument, to the detriment of the members of the Voluntad Popular political party. Finally, the Commission found that the State is responsible for violating the right enshrined in Article 22.1 of the American Convention, in relation to Article 1.1 of the same instrument, to the detriment of Antonio Rivero and Darío Ramírez.

28. Pedro Baque Tuárez v. Ecuador

692. The case concerns Ecuador's international responsibility for the deaths of brothers Carlos Enrique Jaramillo Mera and Pedro Jorge Jaramillo Mera, and the attack suffered by Pedro Baque Tuárez, as well as the lack of due investigation and impunity for these acts.

693. At the time of the events, Pedro Baque Tuárez was 23 years old, worked in his parents' business, and spent his free time riding motocross bikes. On February 11, 1999, Pedro Baque, Carlos Jaramillo, and Pedro Jaramillo were riding their motorcycles in the El Guabito neighborhood when, next to the Becker Warehouse, a group of police officers consisting of José Delgado, Wilmilton Palacios, Wilmer Ayala, Francisco

Indio, Miguel Mayorga, Kléber Moreira, Wilson Alulema, and Jorge Seme stopped them on the grounds that they were suspects in the murder of a police officer.

694. According to the statement given by Mr. Baque Tuárez, when Pedro Jaramillo tried to find out what was happening, a police officer pulled out a gun and shot him in one of his eyes, killing him, and threw the others into a red pickup truck next to Pedro Jaramillo's body, where they were told that they would be taken to the Crime Investigation Office (OID). According to Mr. Baque, they went to Sancán, where they entered some bushes and, at that location, the police officers tortured Mr. Carlos Jaramillo, accusing him of the death of Officer Chango. In particular, he indicated that they cut his forehead, back, and neck with a knife, after which they put a gun in his mouth and shot him several times.

695. Mr. Pedro Baque stated that after Carlos Jaramillo was dead, the police officers shot him several more times in the back while he was kneeling. He indicated that, in that circumstance, a police officer grabbed him by the arm and said, "Now you talk", to which he replied that he knew nothing about the murder. He stated that a police officer then shot him twice in the lower jaw. He indicated that, already seriously injured, one of the police officers put his boot on his back and said, "He's not dead, kill him", and they shot him in the left shoulder blade. After fifteen to twenty minutes, the police officers left, and Pedro Baque sat down next to the bodies of Carlos and Pedro Jaramillo. He crawled to the road, where he was rescued by Mr. Jorge Tarira, who took him to the Jipijapa Hospital.

696. The events of this case were investigated in two separate proceedings: one aimed at evaluating the events related to the death and attempted murder of the victims, and the other aimed at investigating an alleged assault and motorcycle theft in which Pedro Baque was charged as one of the suspects.

697. On February 18, 1999, Pedro Baque's father filed a complaint with the Fifth Criminal Court of Jipijapa regarding the events that had occurred against his son. On April 1, 1999, the Fifth Criminal Court of Manabí requested that the Chief of the OID provide the names and surnames of the police officers who had acted in the February 11, 1999 operation. On April 28, 1999, the First Judge of the Fourth District of the National Police issued an order to initiate criminal proceedings against police officer Wilmilton Palacios "and other perpetrators, accomplices, and accessories to the crime under investigation".

698. On June 7, 1999, the Attorney General determined that the Manabí Prosecutor's Office should conduct an investigation into the events. On August 10, 1999, a preventive detention order was issued against the five police officers who participated in the operation. On September 17, 1999, Mr. Pedro Baque testified before that Court.

699. On July 2, 2001, the Presidency of the Court of Portoviejo issued an order to open a trial against the defendants Miguel Mayorga, Jorge Seme, Wilminton Palacios, Kléber Moreira, and Wilmer Ayala, considering that all of them participated in the operation that resulted in the death of the Jaramillo brothers and the attack on Pedro Baque. Furthermore, it also issued a provisional dismissal of the case and of the defendants Vicente Cascante Polo, Wilson Alulema, Carlos Grijalva, Jarder Yeri Pincay Indacochea, Holger Fredy Conforme Orrala, Francisco Indio, Neil Castro, Jorge Leli Tarira Zamora, Noel del Jesús Celi Merchan, and Temístocles Ismael Ramos Sánchez, due to insufficient evidence of their participation in the events. The victim and his family appealed the decision, and on September 5, 2001, the Portoviejo Court upheld the decision to dismiss the case.

700. On March 4, 2002, the Presidency of the Portoviejo Court sentenced the five defendants to twelve years of extraordinary imprisonment and ordered their detention. The decision was appealed by the defendants, and on April 25, 2002, the First Chamber of the Supreme Court of Justice upheld it. Several appeals were filed against this ruling. The defendants filed an appeal on points of fact and an appeal for cassation. The latter was declared inadmissible on September 23, 2003, by the Second Criminal Chamber of the Supreme Court of Justice (CSJ). In addition, they filed an appeal for clarification on September 29, 2003.

701. On January 22, 2004, it was reported that the decision had become final. On the same date, the immediate arrest of the five convicted police officers was ordered. On February 6, 2004, the request to revoke the arrest warrant was denied as inadmissible. Subsequently, on February 10, 2009, the president of the Plenary Session of the Provincial Court of Manabi was informed that the arrest warrants were still in effect. Of the five, only Jorge Seme was arrested.

702. On December 31, 2015, the Presidency of the Provincial Court of Justice of Manabi declared that the sentence imposed on four of the convicted individuals who had not yet been arrested had expired, ordering that the arrest warrants against them be lifted. With regard to Jorge Seme, it concluded that the statute of limitations did not apply, since he was already in custody.

703. In its Admissibility and Merits Report No. 333/22, with regard to the detention, the Commission noted that the State did not provide any document proving the existence of an order of deprivation of liberty issued by a competent judge against any of the three victims, nor did it present any documentation proving that they had been apprehended in flagrante delicto or immediately after the commission of the crime and with evidence of it. The Commission also considered that the victims were not informed of the reasons for their detention in accordance with the standards required by the American Convention. With regard to judicial control of deprivation of liberty, the Commission indicated that it is clear that in the present case the purpose of the arrest was not to bring the victims before a competent authority to determine the legality of the arrest and protect their personal safety, as required by that provision. For these reasons, the Commission concluded that the State violated the right to personal liberty.

704. Furthermore, considering that the State did not contest the allegations and statements that the victims were physically assaulted by the police, the Commission found that the State violated the right to personal integrity. With regard to the victims' submission to acts of torture, the IACHR considered that in the case under analysis, the elements necessary to classify the acts perpetrated against Pedro Baque and Carlos Jaramillo as torture were present. The Commission emphasized that, in the case of Pedro Baque, the acts perpetrated against him while he was deprived of his liberty by State agents were intentional and were intended to make him confess to his alleged participation in the death of a police officer. Furthermore, it found that the acts caused intense physical suffering to the victim.

705. With regard to Carlos Jaramillo, the Commission also found that the elements constituting torture were present. In particular, the Commission noted that, according to Pedro Baque's statement, which was not contested by the State, while he and Carlos Jaramillo were deprived of liberty in a vehicle, the police intentionally cut Mr. Jaramillo's forehead, back, and neck with a knife, causing him profound physical suffering. It also noted that, according to the available information, this was done in order to pressure him into confessing his responsibility for the death of a police officer.

706. With regard to the right to life, the Commission observed that, according to Mr. Pedro Baque's statement and the conclusions of the Judiciary, Mr. Pedro and Mr. Carlos Jaramillo were extrajudicially executed by State agents while in their custody.

707. For these reasons, taking into account the presumption that applies in these cases, given that the victims died while in State custody and suffered multiple assaults, the Commission concluded that the State violated the right to life of Pedro Jaramillo and Carlos Jaramillo. Similarly, it considered that the State violated the right to personal integrity to the detriment of the three victims, and violated the prohibition of torture to the detriment of Pedro Baque and Carlos Jaramillo.

708. Additionally, the Commission observed that the State committed a series of failures in the investigation into the torture and deaths of the victims. In particular, autopsies were not performed on Pedro and Carlos Jaramillo. Similarly, according to information provided to the IACHR, it was not until April 9, 1999, two months after the events, that the crime scene was examined, which compromised its forensic investigation.

709. With regard to the logical lines of investigation, the IACHR found that the file does not show that the State conducted effective investigations into the possible intellectual authors of the events in this case. The Commission also noted that the investigations were conducted by bodies linked to the accused or by the accused themselves. In particular, on February 12, 1999, Lieutenant Colonel Rodrigo Acosta Cansina, then head of the OID in Portoviejo, assigned police officer Wilmilton Palacios, one of the individuals accused by the victims' families, to conduct the investigation into the events. In addition, the investigations were conducted by the Manabí No. 4 Police, a body of which the accused were members.

710. With regard to the location of the five convicted persons, the Commission noted that the State limited itself to issuing various arrest warrants without any result, even though the accused continued to participate actively, through their defense attorneys, in the investigation and criminal proceedings. Furthermore, the Commission noted that although the State reported that a "Capture Brigade" had been created, which would have assigned a group of agents to carry out the capture of the agents at large, it was created more than ten years after the judgment that convicted them, and no information was provided to conclude that, after the Brigade's first attempt to locate them, other actions had been taken to enforce the aforementioned court decision.

711. The Commission observed that, linked to the lack of due diligence and effective enforcement of the sentence referred to above, on December 31, 2015, the statute of limitations was recognized in relation to the convicted fugitives from justice.

712. For these reasons, the Commission concluded that the State of Ecuador failed to comply with its obligation to investigate, prosecute, and punish, with due diligence, the torture and extrajudicial executions analyzed in its report, and is therefore responsible for the violation of the rights to judicial guarantees and judicial protection. Finally, the Commission considered that the arbitrary detentions, torture, and deaths of Pedro Jaramillo, Carlos Jaramillo, and Pedro Baque, as well as the absence of truth and justice, caused suffering and anguish to their families, in violation of their right to mental and moral integrity.

713. Based on the findings of fact and law in the report, the Inter-American Commission concluded that the State is responsible for the violation of the rights to life, personal integrity, personal liberty, judicial guarantees, and judicial protection, established in Articles 4, 5, 7, 8, and 25 of the American Convention, in relation to Article 1.1 of the same instrument, to the detriment of Pedro Jaramillo, Carlos Jaramillo, Pedro Baque, and their families.

29. Kevin Claudio Sebastián Peralta Farias and Carina Farias v. Argentina[202]

714. The case relates to Argentina's international responsibility for violations of judicial guarantees and judicial protection, in connection with the claim for full reparation for Kevin Claudio Sebastián Peralta Farias and his mother Carina Farias for the death of his father, Claudio Sebastián Peralta Asís, caused by State agents.

715. At the time of the events, Mr. Claudio Peralta was Carina Farias's de facto partner, and they both lived at the same address. On July 27, 1993, their son Kevin Peralta was born, but he was not registered in the civil registry after his birth. According to Roberto Domingo Peralta and Ramona Teresa Asís, Claudio Peralta's father and mother, he was unable to recognize his son before his death "for reasons beyond his control, namely the financial difficulties he was experiencing, which prevented him from paying the money necessary to obtain a national identity document".

716. On November 11, 1994, police authorities entered Mr. Claudio Peralta's home as part of an anti-drug operation, and one of the agents shot and killed him. This was confirmed in court on December 16,

[202] In accordance with Article 17.2.a of the Commission's Rules of Procedure, Commissioner Andrea Pochak, an Argentine national, did not participate in the debate or decision on this matter.

1996, by a ruling of the Second Federal Criminal Court of Mendoza, which found the officer who fired the shot guilty of manslaughter and sentenced him to two years and six months in prison.

717. Roberto Domingo Peralta and Ramona Teresa Asís participated as civil parties in the proceedings leading to the aforementioned ruling, and the court determined that the convicted police officer, the Province of Mendoza, and the National Government should pay compensation for moral damages and funeral expenses. Neither Carina Farias nor Kevin Peralta were parties to the aforementioned criminal proceedings, nor were they represented therein. Carina Farias was 19 years old at the time of Mr. Claudio Peralta's death, so a substantial part of the proceedings took place while she was considered a "minor" under domestic law.

718. On September 11, 1996, Kevin Peralta's birth certificate was issued. In that certificate, he was identified as "Kevin Claudio Sebastián Farias" and Carina Farias was identified as his mother, with no person identified as his father. On September 4, 1997, Carina Farias initiated the filiation process so that her son Kevin Peralta would be recognized as the son of Mr. Claudio Peralta. On May 15, 2001, the Civil, Commercial, and Mining Court of Mendoza issued a ruling granting the paternity suit. The court ordered that Kevin Peralta be registered as the son of Claudio Peralta and Carina Farias. On October 25, 2001, Ms. Carina Farias registered Kevin Peralta's birth in the Mendoza Registry of Civil Status and Capacity of Persons with a date of birth of July 27, 1993, identifying Claudio Peralta as the father and herself as the mother.

719. On December 4, 2001, Ms. Carina Farias filed a lawsuit requesting that her son Kevin Peralta be compensated for damages resulting from his father's death. On May 23, 2006, the Supreme Court issued a single-instance ruling rejecting the lawsuit and upholding a statute of limitations exception filed by the defendants.

720. In its Admissibility and Merits Report No. 156/23, the Commission analyzed whether the Argentine State provided adequate and effective remedies to guarantee full reparation to Kevin Peralta and his mother, Carina Farias, in the criminal proceedings related to Mr. Peralta's death and in the proceedings related to the compensation claim filed on behalf of Kevin Peralta.

721. The Commission noted that, during the criminal investigation that led to the conviction of the police officer for Mr. Peralta's death, the prosecuting and judicial authorities became aware that Carina Farias was Mr. Peralta's partner and that Kevin was their son, which was recorded in the December 1996 conviction. Despite this, the State did not take any measures to ensure that Kevin Peralta and his mother were represented and participated in the criminal proceedings and that they received compensation. The IACHR noted that at the beginning of the criminal proceedings, Kevin Peralta was one year old, while his mother, Carina Farias, was 19 years old and therefore considered a "minor" under the domestic law in force at that time. Despite this, the judicial authorities did not take any measures, in accordance with the principle of the best interests of the child, to ensure their participation in the proceedings.

722. With regard to the civil proceedings concerning the claim for compensation, the Commission considered that there were multiple elements to suggest that the court's decision failed to comply with standards relating to the rights to judicial guarantees, judicial protection, and the rights of the child. This was in light of Kevin Peralta's right to receive reparation for the death of Claudio Peralta, for which a State agent was responsible.

723. The Commission found that Kevin Peralta was deprived, without due justification or grounds, of access to an adequate and effective remedy to receive compensation for the death of his father, caused by a State agent. This was because the Supreme Court's decision made a rigid interpretation of the rules on filing the action and the statute of limitations, without adequately assessing Kevin Peralta's rights and his situation in accordance with the principle of the best interests of the child and other related standards. In addition, the situation of poverty in which Kevin and his mother Carina Farias found themselves, which was confirmed domestically, when Carina Farias was granted the "benefit of litigation without costs" on "grounds of poverty" was not taken into account.

724. The Commission considered that this, coupled with the lack of other available remedies, placed Kevin and Carina Farias in a situation of legal vulnerability, as to date they have been prevented from obtaining a court decision awarding them compensation for the death of their father and partner, respectively, caused by a public official. Consequently, the Commission concluded that the Argentine State is responsible for the violation of the rights to judicial guarantees and judicial protection. It also concluded that the State is responsible for the violation of rights of the child.

725. Finally, with regard to the guarantee of a reasonable time, the Commission determined that, given the characteristics of the case, the four-and-a-half-year duration of the proceedings exceeded what could be considered a reasonable time. Consequently, it concluded that the Argentine State is responsible for violating the guarantee of a reasonable time.

726. Based on these findings of fact and law, the Commission concluded that the State is responsible for violating the rights to judicial guarantees, the rights of the child, and the right to judicial protection established in Articles 8(1), 19, and 25(1) of the American Convention, in relation to Article 1(1) of the same instrument, to the detriment of the persons identified in the sections of the report.

30. Ana Vilma Díaz et al. v. Guatemala [203]

727. The case concerns the international responsibility of the State of Guatemala for violations of the judicial guarantees and political rights of Ana Vilma Díaz Lemus, Vilma Tatiana Cabrera Alvarado, Estela Bailey Beltetón, Claudia Lissette Escobar Mejía, and Helen Beatriz Mack Chang, which occurred in the context of the selection process for judges of the Supreme Court of Justice and the Court of Appeals that took place in 2014 for the 2014-2019 judicial term, through the mechanism of Nominating Commissions.

728. The election of judges to the Supreme Court of Justice and the Court of Appeals in Guatemala is regulated by the Constitution, the Law on the Judiciary, the Law on Nominating Commissions, the Law on Judicial Careers, and the Regulations of the Nominating Commissions approved by the Supreme Court of Justice in 2009.

729. Article 12 of Law No. 19-2009 provides that, once formed, the Nominating Commissions shall draw up the desired professional profile for the respective judicial positions. They shall also approve a grading scale of 1 to 100 points, with the aim of numerically quantifying ethical, academic, professional, and human qualities. According to Article 13 of the aforementioned law, after receiving the nominations, the commissions shall verify that the participants meet the requirements.

730. On July 2, 2014, the two Nominating Commissions were formed to carry out the process of selecting candidates for the Supreme Court of Justice and the Court of Appeals for the 2014-2019 term. The Nomination Commission for the election of members of the Supreme Court of Justice was composed of a representative of the rectors of the country's universities, who chaired the Commission, eleven deans of the law or legal and social sciences faculties of each university in the country, eleven representatives elected by the General Assembly of the Bar Association of Attorneys and Notaries of Guatemala, and eleven representatives elected by the sitting judges of the Chambers of the Court of Appeals.

731. The Nominating Commission for the election of members of the Supreme Court of Justice established a scoring table to evaluate each candidate, awarding 25 points for academic merits, 70 points for professional merits, and 5 points for human qualities. The petitioner pointed out that, although the Commission established a minimum score of 50 points, it subsequently decided on September 12, 2014, to lower it to 40 points.

[203] In accordance with Article 17.2.a of the Commission's Rules of Procedure, Commissioner Edgar Stuardo Ralón Orellana, a Guatemalan national, did not participate in the discussion or decision on this matter.

732. On July 21, 2014, the Commission published the call for applications. According to the information contained in the file, 208 people applied. In addition, the Supreme Court of Justice organized five-minute interviews for those applicants who obtained a score equal to or greater than 73, which was the sum of the evaluation of the shortlist and the score obtained in a psychometric test. The parties reported that interviews were conducted with 105 applicants out of a total of 208 candidates.

733. For its part, the Nominating Commission for the selection of members of the Court of Appeals was composed of one representative from the rectories of the universities of Guatemala, who chairs the Commission, eleven deans of the faculties of law or legal and social sciences of each university in Guatemala, eleven representatives elected by the General Assembly of the Bar Association of Attorneys and Notaries of Guatemala, and eleven representatives of the justices of the Supreme Court of Justice. This Commission established a grading scale awarding 20 points for academic merits, 75 points for professional merits, and 5 points for human qualities. The Commission established a minimum qualifying score of 48 points, but later, in the midst of evaluating the applications, decided to lower the average to 40 points.

734. On July 21, 2014, the Commission published the call for applications. According to the parties, 1,027 people applied. The parties also agreed that no interviews were conducted with the applicants during this process.

735. As for the method used to evaluate the applicants' files, the Nominating Commission for the selection of Court of Appeals judges decided to divide itself into groups or trios composed of a dean, a representative of the Bar Association, and a representative of the Supreme Court of Justice. Despite the provision contained in paragraph d of Article 2 of Law No. 19-2009, the nominating commissions decided that the session held on August 5, 2014, would take place without the participation of civil society or the media.

736. On August 25, 2014, both commissions published the lists of candidates who met the requirements and established a deadline for receiving objections or challenges. According to the information contained in the file, of the 77 objections filed against candidates for the Supreme Court of Justice, only three were admitted by the Nominating Commission. The petitioners argued that these decisions to reject objections were unjustified or issued without explanation.

737. Once the list of eligible candidates was finalized, the Nominating Commissions began evaluating and grading the files based on the grading tables. The petitioner argued that, at this stage, the commissions applied the aforementioned tables unevenly, resulting in scores without logical justification and placing applicants who had exclusively exercised judicial functions at a disadvantage. Furthermore, according to the petitioner, the Nominating Commission for the Court of Appeals did not evaluate the integrity of the candidates individually. It indicated that on the first day, this criterion was evaluated file by file, but subsequently, lists of 10, 20, 28, 50, and even 58 applicants were voted on at once.

738. Similarly, on September 21, 2014, the Nominating Commission for the Supreme Court of Justice began by individually evaluating the highest-scoring applications and agreed to include 10 of them on the final list. However, the following day, the evaluation and voting process was modified, and the applications were voted on block.

739. On September 22, 2014, after evaluating the applications and voting on the candidates, the Nominating Commissions finalized the lists of 26 candidates for the Supreme Court of Justice and 210 candidates for the Court of Appeals, sent them to the Congress of the Republic, and published them in the press on September 23, 2014. On September 25, the National Congress elected the justices of the Supreme Court of Justice. This election was held before the deadline for the submission and resolution of challenges before the Nominating Commission, which is established in Article 28 of Law No. 19-2009. Subsequently, on September 29, Congress elected the members of the Chambers of the Court of Appeals.

740. On the same day, after Congress had already elected the members of both courts, the Nominating Commission for the Supreme Court of Justice met to resolve some of the challenges that had been filed against the process and the list submitted to Congress. At that session, it was decided to reject all the appeals filed by the candidates.

741. With regard to the victims in this case, Ms. Ana Vilma Díaz Lemus submitted her application to become a judge of the Court of Appeals on July 25, 2014. In its evaluation, the Nominating Commission awarded her a score of 50 points. Ms. Estela Bailey Beltetón submitted her candidacy for judge of the Supreme Court on July 29, 2014, and also for judge of the Court of Appeals. In the selection process for the Supreme Court, she obtained a score of 76 points and was not included in the list sent to the National Congress. On the other hand, in the process for the Court of Appeals, she obtained a score of 80 points and was included in the list sent to Congress, but that body did not elect her.

742. Ms. Vilma Tatiana Cabrera Alvarado submitted her application to become a Supreme Court Justice in July 2014. The Nominating Commission evaluated her with a score of 82 points, but she was not included in the list sent to the National Congress. Ms. Claudia Lissete Escobar Mejía submitted her application for the position of Supreme Court Justice and also to join one of the Chambers of the Court of Appeals. In the selection process for the Supreme Court, she obtained a score of 57 points and was not included in the list sent to Congress on September 22, 2014. On the other hand, in the selection process for the Court of Appeals, she obtained a score of 77 points and was included in the list sent to Congress.

743. Given the difference in the results of the evaluations in the two processes, on September 24, 2014, Ms. Escobar Mejía filed an appeal with the Nominating Commission for the Supreme Court of Justice. She alleged that her file had been altered because some documents she had submitted to prove that she met the requirements to be a judge were missing, which did not allow for an objective evaluation. On September 29, 2014, the Nominating Commission rejected the appeal.

744. Ms. Ana Vilma Díaz and Ms. Vilma Cabrera learned that they had not been included in the lists of eligible candidates for the Court of Appeals and the Supreme Court of Justice, respectively, when these lists were sent to Congress and published, but they did not know the reasons why the Commissions had decided to exclude them. Estela Bailey and Claudia Escobar submitted their nominations for both courts but were only included in the final lists for the Court of Appeals. However, none of the Nominating Commissions explained the reasons for their decisions.

745. For her part, Ms. Helen Beatriz Mack Chang is president of the Myrna Mack Foundation and actively participated as an observer in the judicial elections. On October 7, 2014, Ms. Mack Chang filed an appeal with the Constitutional Court against the election of judges. On November 19, 2014, the Constitutional Court issued a final ruling, denying the appeal and ordering the inauguration of the persons elected as judges. The plaintiffs filed an appeal for clarification against this ruling on November 20, 2014, which was dismissed by the Constitutional Court on November 26, 2014.

746. In its Merits Report No. 116/24, the Inter-American Commission considered, first, that the State did not ensure that the 2014 selection process for judicial authorities selected candidates based on personal merit and professional ability. This was because internal regulations were not complied with, the Nominating Commissions failed in their duty to justify their decisions, the evaluation criteria were unclear, the impartiality of some commissioners was seriously compromised, and, in general, the process was conditioned by the implementation of a scheme that favored undue negotiation with political actors and other interested sectors.

747. Similarly, the Commission noted that the 2014 process for the election and appointment of judicial authorities was carried out in marked disregard for domestic law and international standards in this area, which did not allow for the election of judges based on merit and professional capacity, and in accordance with the principles of publicity, transparency, and equal conditions, seriously affecting judicial independence.

748. Consequently, the Commission found that the 2014 selection and appointment process for judicial authorities did not inspire confidence in ensuring a full separation of powers, nor did it provide sufficient guarantees to those subject to trial regarding the formation of impartial, independent courts established in accordance with domestic law.

749. In addition, the Commission noted that the irregularities in the selection and appointment process were not remedied by the authorities who heard the administrative and judicial complaints filed by the victims, applicants, and civil society that monitored the process. This meant that, in practice, the Guatemalan judiciary did not exercise any control or review over the actions of the bodies in charge.

750. In this regard, the Commission considered that the State is responsible for the violation of the right to judicial independence, judicial guarantees, the right to have access, under conditions of general equality, to public functions in one's country, and the right to judicial protection.

751. Based on these findings of fact and law, the Commission concluded that the State is responsible for violating the right to judicial independence and judicial guarantees, the right to have access, under conditions of general equality, to public functions in one's country, and the right to judicial protection established in Articles 8.1, 23.1.c, and 25.1 of the American Convention in relation to Articles 1.1 and 2 of the same instrument, to the detriment of Ana Vilma Díaz Lemus, Estela Bailey Beltetón, Vilma Tatiana Cabrera Alvarado, Claudia Lissete Escobar Mejía, and Helen Mack Chang.

31. Juan Carlos Jaguaco Asimbaya v. Ecuador

752. The case concerns the international responsibility of the Ecuadorian State for the illegal and arbitrary detention, torture, and extrajudicial execution of Juan Carlos Jaguaco Asimbaya by State agents in March 2001, as well as the situation of impunity in which the events remain.

753. At the time of the events, Juan Carlos Jaguaco Asimbaya was 23 years old, lived in the city of Quito, and worked for a construction company. On March 24, 2001, Mr. Jaguaco was returning home when he was detained by Sergeant Milton Fuentes, who accused him of stealing the radio from his car, proceeded to strike him in the face with a weapon, and attempted to handcuff him. Mr. Jaguaco managed to escape, but was detained moments later by police officers. Regarding the moment of the arrest, the officers stated that Sergeant Fuentes detained him and took him to patrol officers Cañar Chamba and Quishpe Visarrea, placing him in the back seat of the patrol car.

754. Officer Quishpe stated that the arrest was reported to the patrol radio center via his patrol car radio, while Officer Cañar stated that the report was made by Officer Quishpe from his cell phone. However, the arrest was not properly recorded in a police report and there is no evidence that it was reported to the police. In addition, according to the procedural documents of the investigation, it was not established that Mr. Jaguaco had Sergeant Fuentes' vehicle radio in his possession during his arrest, nor did the sergeant file a report of such theft.

755. According to the version of events given by police officers Cañar and Quishpe, while Mr. Jaguaco was being transported as a detainee to the corresponding police station, the officers observed the presence of two suspects in the distance who were carrying bunches of bananas while walking, so they slowed down the vehicle and Mr. Jaguaco proceeded to open the door and run away to the Machángara ravine.

756. Mr. Jaguaco's body was found lifeless on March 26, 2001, in the river ravine. The Medical-Legal Examination and Autopsy Protocol stated that "based on post-mortem characteristics, the autopsied body had been dead for approximately four to five days, victim of: laceration, cerebral hemorrhage, and traumatic brain injury, which constitute the obvious cause of death. The body shows signs of cadaveric anthropophagy".

757. The death of Mr. Jaguaco led to proceedings in both the ordinary criminal jurisdiction and the police criminal jurisdiction. With regard to the ordinary jurisdiction, Mr. Jaguaco's brother, Luis Alexander Jaguaco Asimbaya, filed a complaint with the Fourteenth Criminal Court of Pichincha. On June 5, 2001, this court issued an order formally opening the criminal proceedings and ordering the pretrial detention of the three police officers under investigation—Sergeant Fuentes and Corporals Cañar and Quishpe—as well as Ms. Valdiviezo, who was with Sergeant Fuentes at the time of the events, and a third implicated individual.

758. On February 20, 2002, the court issued an order for a trial by jury for the crime of unintentional homicide against Messrs. Fuentes, Cañar, and Quishpe, concluding that the detainee's escape occurred because he was not being transported with the proper security measures and that there was negligence on the part of the police officers. Subsequently, appeals were filed against the court's decision, and on May 16, 2002, the First Chamber of the Superior Court of Quito issued a ruling declaring all proceedings null and void because the three accused were active members of the National Police, and therefore ordered the case file to be referred to the police jurisdiction.

759. In the police jurisdiction, on July 15, 2002, the Third Court of the First District of the National Police issued an order to proceed against the three police officers, revoked the preventive detention order, and ordered their immediate release. According to the petitioner, no significant investigative measures were conducted in the police criminal jurisdiction. On June 4, 2003, the police judge closed the preliminary investigation and referred the case to the police Public Prosecutor's Office for a ruling. On July 28, 2003, the prosecutor of the Third Court of the First District of the National Police issued a ruling refraining from charging them.

760. On October 20, 2003, the Third Court of the First District of the National Police issued an order to open the trial. It held that there were serious presumptions of responsibility against police officers Cañar and Quishpe and dismissed the case against Sergeant Fuentes. The petitioner stated that the private prosecutor filed an appeal, considering that there was sufficient evidence to indicate that Sergeant Fuentes was responsible for the murder of Mr. Jaguaco. The petitioner added that, after various procedural steps, on July 8, 2004, the Police Prosecutor of the First District Court charged the three police officers with responsibility for the death of Juan Carlos Jaguaco.

761. On September 27, 2004, the First District Court of Police Justice issued a ruling upholding the prosecutor's decision and confirming the order. With regard to Mr. Fuentes, the Court revoked his dismissal and called him to trial. By order of October 27, the detention of the accused persons was ordered and the file was referred to the Third Court of the National Police.

762. On December 28, 2005, the Criminal Court of the National Police issued an acquittal in favor of the three police officers involved in the murder, stating that there was insufficient evidence. In response to this decision, Mr. Jaguaco's relatives filed an appeal, arguing that the authorities had not properly assessed the evidence presented in the case. On October 17, 2006, the First District Court of the National Police, by majority vote, decided to uphold the ruling issued by the police criminal court.

763. In its Merits Report No. 99/22, the Commission found that Mr. Jaguaco's detention was illegal and arbitrary, since the officers who arrested him did not have a warrant and there was no flagrante delicto. In particular, the Commission noted that, in relation to the alleged theft of a radio from a police officer's vehicle, there is no document proving that a search was conducted and that this was not the reason why the police officers detained him. The Commission also observed that (i) the official arrest report contained irregularities in the information provided; and (ii) it was never corroborated that the arrest was duly communicated to the Patrol Radio Center. In addition, the Commission indicated that Mr. Jaguaco was not informed of the reasons for his arrest in accordance with the standards required by the American Convention and that the purpose of the arrest was not to bring him before a competent authority. Based on these considerations, the Commission concluded that the State violated the victim's right to personal liberty.

764. Likewise, with regard to the right to life and personal integrity, the Commission emphasized that Mr. Jaguaco was detained by police officers on March 24, 2001, and that two days later, his body was found lifeless with signs of torture, and that the last time he was seen alive, he was in the patrol car after his arrest, heading to an unknown destination. In this regard, it indicated that the State had not provided an adequate explanation to refute its responsibility for the torture and death of Mr. Jaguaco and concluded, therefore, that his death constituted an extrajudicial execution and that the State was responsible for the violation of the right to life and personal integrity.

765. Additionally, the Commission referred to the right to judicial guarantees and judicial protection in relation to the proceedings followed in the ordinary courts and the police courts. The Commission emphasized that, in the case of human rights violations, and specifically violations of the rights to life and personal integrity, the acts cannot be considered in any way as crimes committed in the course of duty and, therefore, the investigation should have been conducted in the ordinary courts. The Commission noted that despite multiple requests by the relatives for the investigation to be referred to the ordinary criminal courts, these requests were denied, and that the proceedings before the police criminal courts concluded with the confirmation of the acquittal of the police officers involved, leaving the facts in a situation of total impunity.

766. For these reasons, the Commission concluded that, by applying police criminal justice to this case, the Ecuadorian State violated the rights to judicial guarantees and judicial protection, specifically the right to a competent, independent, and impartial authority, as well as the right to an adequate and effective judicial remedy. The Commission also considered that the lack of effective measures to prevent and punish torture in this case also constituted a violation of the obligations contained in the Inter-American Convention to Prevent and Punish Torture.

767. Finally, the Commission considered that, given that it was established that Mr. Jaguaco lost his life as a result of an extrajudicial execution committed by police officers, which constitutes a serious violation of human rights, and that the only conviction against those police officers was declared null and void, revoking the preventive detention order and ordering the immediate release of the accused police officers, the State violated the right to personal integrity of his relatives.

768. Based on these findings, the Commission concluded that the State is responsible for the violation of the rights to life, personal integrity, personal liberty, judicial guarantees, and judicial protection, established in Articles 4.1, 5.1, 5.2, 7.1, 7.2, 7.3, 7.4, 7.5, 8.1, and 25.1 of the American Convention on Human Rights, in relation to Articles 1.1 and 2 of the same instrument; and Articles 1, 6, and 8 of the Inter-American Convention to Prevent and Punish Torture.

- Luis Herrera Corsi v. Argentina [204]

769. The case concerns the international responsibility of the Argentine State for the discrimination suffered by Luis Antonio Herrera Corsi at the hands of authorities of the Province of Santiago del Estero, which was reflected in obstacles to obtaining promotions in his police career.

770. Mr. Luis Antonio Herrera Corsi graduated from the Coronel Lorenzo Lugones Police Academy in 1979 with the rank of Assistant Officer. According to information provided by the petitioning party, he is the brother of two leaders of the "Unión Cívica Radical–Loreto," a political force that, at the time of the events, identified itself as being in opposition to the government of the Province of Santiago del Estero.

771. On May 30, 1996, the Police Headquarters of Santiago del Estero set June 11 of that same year as the starting date for the Mandatory Training and Promotion Course for Principal Officers, and on November 12, 1996, a Board was convened for the purpose of evaluating police personnel to assign the vacant positions. On December 16, 1996, the Police of the Province of Santiago del Estero issued a communiqué informing of the rating obtained by Mr. Herrera Corsi. The Board assessed his performance as "very good," based on the score obtained of 86.82, noting that he was qualified for the immediately higher rank, subject to the availability of vacancies. According to the "order of merit" list, he ranked second among the 47 individuals who were evaluated.

[204] In accordance with Article 17.2.a of the Commission's Rules of Procedure, Commissioner Andrea Pochak, a Argentinean national, did not participate in the discussion or decision on this matter.

772. On June 5, 1998, the General Secretariat of the Governor's Office of Santiago del Estero promulgated Decree Series "E" No. 0.738, through which several Principal Officers were promoted to the rank of Deputy Commissioner. Mr. Herrera Corsi was not included in the list of promotions; however, among others, officials who had ranked 13th, 22nd, and 34th in the order of merit were promoted.

773. On November 19, 1998, the Evaluation Board for Subordinate Officers again issued its assessment of Mr. Herrera Corsi's performance, indicating that the petitioner was qualified for the immediately higher rank, subject to the availability of vacancies. In December 1999, the Evaluation Board assessed him once again and concluded that his performance had been excellent, assigning him a score of 90 points, subject to vacancies. In January 2002, the Evaluation Board for Subordinate Officers issued another evaluation report in which it assigned him a score of 95 points.

774. By Resolution No. 00596 of April 20, 2006, Mr. Herrera Corsi and other officers were separated from their positions in the police force for "falling within the provisions for Mandatory Retirement under Law No. 4.558 on Pensions, Retirement, and Benefits."

775. Mr. Herrera Corsi filed a complaint before the National Institute against Discrimination, which concluded that he had been the victim of discriminatory acts by the administrative authorities of the Province of Santiago del Estero. In that complaint, he stated that when his sister was a candidate for City Councilor for the Unión Cívica Radical, he was pressured to join the Justicialist Party; that when he refused, he was transferred to Police Precinct Section 34–Rivadavia, more than 400 kilometers from his residence; and that he was subsequently subjected to additional transfers.

776. Among other postings, he was transferred to the then Sub-Precinct 29–Tintina in the Mariano Moreno Department, more than 250 kilometers from his place of residence; to Police Precinct Section 27–Loreto, where he remained for a period of 14 months; and, on April 23, 1998, to Regional Unit No. 4–Quimilí, more than 300 kilometers from his home.

777. On April 23, 1998, a "Confidential and Secret Report" was prepared by the Provincial Police, Regional Unit No. 5 of Loreto, concerning Mr. Herrera Corsi. The report refers to the holding of a political meeting in which he allegedly participated and during which the Provincial Government of Carlos Arturo Juárez was reportedly criticized.

778. On October 14, 1998, the newspaper El Liberal published an article stating that the Chief of Regional Police Unit No. 5 referred to a political meeting that had allegedly taken place at the home of Councilor Herrera, the petitioner's brother, in which the petitioner was said to have participated. The press report indicates that the aforementioned Chief of the Regional Police Unit stated that, as a consequence of these events, the petitioner was transferred to Quimilí.

779. On February 22, 2012, Mr. Elvio Ernesto Coronel Díaz submitted a sworn statement before the Justice of the Peace of Loreto in which he indicated that in 1998, while serving as the head of Regional Unit No. 5–Loreto, he received express orders from the Chief of Police, a Commissioner General, and from the Provincial Undersecretary of Information to monitor and follow the work and private activities of then-officer Luis Antonio Herrera Corsi, on the grounds that he had been considered a political enemy of the Provincial Government and that "for this reason he was to be passed over in the promotions carried out annually, despite having the highest average score."

780. On July 3, 1998, Mr. Herrera Corsi filed an action for the protection of constitutional rights against the Government of the Police of Santiago del Estero as a result of the issuance of Decree Series "E" No. 0738 of June 5, 1998, through which the Government of the Province ordered the promotion of the police officers' corps. In that action, he alleged that he had been "illegitimately omitted" from the list of officers promoted. However, on September 22, 2011, the Superior Court of Justice of Santiago del Estero informed him orally that the action had been archived since 2005, and Mr. Herrera had not been notified of this.

781. Mr. Herrera Corsi also filed an administrative claim before the Police Headquarters of Santiago del Estero requesting the updating of his rank, alleging that other officers had been promoted without considering his record, his five years of seniority in the position, or the rating he obtained in 1996. On February 2, 1999, his claim was rejected, which led him to file additional administrative claims on August 3, 2001, and April 8, 2003.

782. Subsequently, on August 21, 2001, he filed a complaint before the Provincial Delegate of the National Institute against Discrimination alleging acts of ideological discrimination related to the postponement of his promotions and the arbitrary suspension of the Evaluation Boards. On March 17, 2003, the Institute concluded that the discriminatory nature of the reported acts had been convincingly established.

783. On March 10, 2004, he filed a habeas data action against the Department of Police Intelligence. In compliance with the judicial order issued as a result of that action, the D2 unit of the Provincial Police provided Mr. Herrera Corsi with an individual file containing his "morphological and chromatic profile," a press article regarding complaints he had filed against the administration for alleged acts of discrimination, a news item concerning the publication of a book he authored, and information regarding the activities and political affiliations of his brothers.

784. Finally, on April 16, 2004, he filed, together with another officer, a criminal complaint for the offenses of public intimidation, breach of the duties of a public official, and criminal association. In addition, he brought four administrative litigation actions challenging decrees of the provincial Executive Branch that ordered the promotion of other officers without taking him into account, none of which were admitted.

785. In its Admissibility and Merits Report No. 155/23, the Commission found that the postponement of Mr. Herrera Corsi's promotions despite his meeting the requirements established by law, the repeated transfers of his workplace, the surveillance and profiling carried out by the Provincial Police, as well as the investigation opened against him for allegedly participating in a political meeting organized by the opposition to the provincial government of Santiago del Estero at the time, constituted acts carried out for political reasons. The IACHR emphasized that the State did not present elements capable of refuting that these actions were carried out by state agents as a consequence of the victim's political orientation, nor did it offer alternative justifications for them beyond invoking administrative discretion.

786. The Commission indicated that this affected Mr. Herrera Corsi's right to work by subjecting him to arbitrary conditions related to the granting of promotions, the imposition of transfers, and acts of persecution that prevented the normal development of his career in the Provincial Police. The IACHR also considered that these circumstances are particularly serious insofar as they disregard the principles upon which a democratic society is founded and hinder the deliberative exercise of political oversight inherent to this type of political organization.

787. Moreover, the Commission observed that, in the present case, the administrative authorities responsible for determining promotions within the Provincial Police of Santiago del Estero interpreted and applied the domestic regulations governing the requirements for promotion and the selection process in a manner that produced effects contrary to the American Convention, which materialized, among other ways, in the violation of Mr. Herrera Corsi's human rights. As a consequence, the Commission considered that they failed in their duty to exercise conventionality control in order to ensure, at the domestic level, the effective application of the provisions of that treaty.

788. For these reasons, the Commission concluded that the State is responsible for the violation of the principles of equality and non-discrimination, the right of access to public service under conditions of equality, and the right to work.

789. Similarly, the Commission found that the monitoring and profiling activities directed at Mr. Herrera Corsi constituted restrictive measures affecting his rights to privacy and freedom of expression. In assessing their compatibility with the Convention, it recalled the requirements of legality, legitimate aim, suitability, necessity, and proportionality. Although the Commission did not have sufficient elements to determine whether these measures were provided for by law, it concluded—based on the context and the body of evidence—that they did not pursue a legitimate aim recognized by the American Convention. On the contrary, it considered that they were applied as a form of harassment and persecution, as he, together with his family members, was perceived as an opponent of the provincial government. Consequently, the Commission indicated that these measures constituted arbitrary interferences in his private life and restrictions incompatible with the Convention with respect to his freedom of expression.

790. The Commission established that the statements made by Mr. Luis Antonio Herrera Corsi, in which he denounced alleged irregularities by the government and the Provincial Police, not only lacked State protection but also gave rise to acts of persecution and harassment against him, including the opening of an investigation into his alleged participation in a political meeting of the opposition. Consequently, it concluded that the State is responsible for the violation of the rights to protection of honor and dignity, as well as to freedom of thought and expression.

791. On the other hand, the Commission observed that, in the present case, the victim filed a series of remedies to challenge the decisions through which the alleged discriminatory acts were carried out. However, the domestic authorities did not rule on the merits of the claims brought by the victim. In particular, the Commission noted that the authorities asserted that the decision to grant promotions to police officers derives from the discretionary powers of the administration. From this, it follows that the domestic authorities consider that there are powers of the Executive not subject to any oversight by other branches of government, among which would be the granting of promotions within the Provincial Police. The Commission warned that this implies that there is no adequate and effective remedy to report possible irregularities in the context of promotion processes within the Provincial Police.

792. Additionally, the Commission noted that the victim was not properly notified of the decisions through which the judicial authorities ruled on the human rights violations he had alleged. The Commission observed that the judicial authorities that issued decisions in the context of the remedies filed by the victim emphasized the discretionary authority of administrative bodies to decree promotions, without analyzing whether such authority was being exercised in a discriminatory or arbitrary manner.

793. With regard to the guarantee of a reasonable time, after analyzing the relevant elements, the Commission noted that there were unjustified delays that violated his right to judicial guarantees. In this regard, the Commission found that the State is responsible for the violation of the rights to judicial guarantees and to access to justice.

794. Based on these findings of fact and law, the Commission concluded that the Argentine State is responsible for the violation of the rights established in Articles 8(1), 11(1), 11(2), 23(1)(c), 24, 25(1), and 26 of the American Convention, in relation to Articles 1(1) and 2 of the same instrument, to the detriment of Luis Antonio Herrera Corsi.

- César Noé Castillo Castillo and members of his family v. Nicaragua

795. The case concerns the international responsibility of the Nicaraguan State for the injuries inflicted by public agents against César Noé Castillo Castillo in the context of a protest in 2018, as well as his subsequent death and the situation of impunity in which the events remain.

796. At the time of the events, César Noé Castillo Castillo was 42 years old and worked as an employee in a factory. Between April 19 and 20, 2018, various demonstrations were convened in several cities in Nicaragua, including one in the city of Estelí. According to information provided by the petitioning party, the protests sought to challenge the decision of the government at the time regarding modifications to the Nicaraguan Social Security Institute (INSS).

797. The protest held on April 20 in Estelí took place peacefully; however, from the outset the demonstrators were harassed by individuals in civilian clothing who blocked their path. One block before reaching the Estelí City Hall, they began to be attacked by members of the National Police, individuals inside the City Hall, and groups dressed in civilian clothing, who used rubber bullets, tear gas, and stones. According to accounts from those present, the individuals in civilian clothing were employees of the City Hall and members of the organization "Juventud Sandinista". Later that evening, the demonstrators began to receive gunfire directed at the chest and head, and as a result two people died at the scene and others were injured, including Mr. Castillo Castillo. In particular, the petitioning party indicated that he was shot in the chest while assisting another injured person.

798. Mr. Castillo Castillo was admitted to the hospital with a diagnosis of a "gunshot wound that perforated his right lung and became lodged in the spinal column," and he was discharged on April 27, 2018. The petitioning party indicated that he depended on an oxygen supply and that he was in a serious state of health at the time he was discharged. It further stated that a few hours later he was readmitted to the hospital after suffering a seizure, and that in the emergency room there was a nurse who informed them that they did not wish to admit those injured on April 20 in order to "[not have] problems with the boss". The petitioner explained that after the insistence of his relatives he was admitted and that on April 28 he was discharged once again.

799. Mr. Castillo Castillo died at his home on May 12, 2018, after suffering a respiratory collapse. The postmortem medical examination concluded that the cause of Mr. Castillo Castillo's death had been "acute respiratory failure."

800. On May 12, 2018, his sister, Miriam Lizbeth Castillo Castillo, filed a complaint before the National Police for the killing, as a result of which the State indicated that case file No. A-0020-2018-01320 was opened. From the available sections of the postmortem medical report dated May 17, 2018, it appears that a "foreign material corresponding to a firearm projectile" was extracted from the spinal area and handed over to a police officer. In addition, the anatomicopathological diagnosis was "pulmonary hemorrhagic infarction, bilateral pulmonary hematoma, hepatic steatosis, and hepatic cholestasis."

801. The State indicated that 32 interviews were conducted in the course of the investigation and provided testimony from some of those individuals, all of whom were employees of the City Hall, many of whom were not present at the scene of the events on April 20, 2018. Miriam Lizbeth Castillo Castillo maintained that the family was never provided with information about the investigation, that their request to obtain copies of the case file was denied, and that they only had a copy of the autopsy because they knew the doctor who performed it. The petitioning party further reported that on April 21, 2018, individuals dressed in civilian clothing cleaned the scene of the events, and that on May 1 members of the National Police went to Estelí's Central Park to conduct forensic examinations without notifying Mr. Castillo Castillo's family.

802. For its part, the State reported that, as a result of the investigative activities carried out, the participation of the agents who had service weapons inside the Municipal City Hall at the time of the events was ruled out. According to the information provided by the State, it was concluded that the perpetrator of the shooting was of unknown identity, and therefore, on May 12, 2018, the Estelí Police Delegation requested that the case file be closed.

803. On June 8, 2019, the National Assembly of Nicaragua adopted Law No. 999, which ordered that all administrative and judicial proceedings initiated as a result of the events that occurred beginning on April 18, 2018, be archived. The Office of the Public Prosecutor subsequently closed the case file pursuant to the amnesty law.

804. Following the death of Mr. Castillo Castillo, his sister participated in social protests on May 30, in July, and on August 13, 2018, during which she reported having been violently repressed by state agents. Among other incidents, she indicated that during the protest of May 30 individuals fired shots from the Estelí City Hall and that a man on a motorcycle fired at her and her daughter, forcing them to hide; and that in July, while she was wearing a T-shirt with her brother's face on it, armed men identified as "paramilitaries" began shooting at her. She also stated that her children were threatened and beaten, which forced them to change schools. In light of these attacks, the family decided to leave the country; Ms. Miriam Castillo left her children with her parents and stated that she cannot return to Nicaragua because she fears for her life and that of her family.

805. In its Admissibility and Merits Report No. 49/25, the Commission analyzed all the evidentiary, circumstantial, and contextual elements contained in the case file and found that the State had not succeeded in refuting that state agents fired shots at demonstrators, including Mr. Castillo Castillo. It also noted that the State did not submit documentation regarding the regulatory framework governing the use of lethal force by state agents during the protest, nor did it provide information on the legitimate purpose of the use of such force.

806. With regard to the necessity of the measure, the IACHR noted that there is no dispute between the parties that Mr. Castillo Castillo was not armed and that he did not resort to violent means during the demonstration. The IACHR further emphasized that he was a member of the civilian population and that no firearms were seized from any of the demonstrators, meaning that there were other less harmful measures available to disperse the protest. With respect to proportionality, the Commission highlighted that state agents fired multiple shots toward the place where Mr. Castillo Castillo was located, while he was unarmed, and concluded that the measure implemented was not proportionate.

807. For these reasons, the Commission found that the use of lethal force by the State against Mr. Castillo Castillo was arbitrary. Taking into account that he was injured as a result of a gunshot and that, as a consequence of that use of lethal force, he died days later, the IACHR concluded that the State is responsible for the violation of his rights to personal integrity and to life.

808. Similarly, the IACHR took note that the State asserted that, after Mr. Castillo Castillo was injured, state agents placed him in an ambulance to be taken to the hospital. In this regard, the Commission emphasized that the State did not submit any documentation to substantiate this claim. On the contrary, it noted that the audiovisual material presented shows that only civilians assisted him once he had been injured and that they placed him on a motorcycle to take him to a hospital.

809. The Commission emphasized that in cases in which a person is injured in the context of a social protest and the use of force may be attributed to state agents, the burden of proof rests with the State. Accordingly, the State should have initiated, ex officio and immediately, an impartial, independent, and thorough investigation, which was not demonstrated. In this regard, the Commission considered that the State failed to comply with its obligation to provide prompt medical assistance to a person who was the victim of the use of lethal force by public agents. Likewise, the Commission noted that the State did not submit any documentation demonstrating how medical care was provided, did not report on the type of treatment administered, and did not refute the allegations regarding why the victim had been discharged so quickly.

810. In addition, these events occurred within a context in which the IACHR identified that individuals who participated in the protests in April 2018, such as the victim, were deprived of receiving adequate health services. In particular, the Commission indicated that Mr. Castillo Castillo, while in a public hospital, was deprived of access to medical treatment in accordance with the applicable standards, and that this lack of treatment had a direct connection with his death.

811. For these reasons, the Commission concluded that, due to the lack of adequate medical care, the State is responsible for the violation of the right to health. The Commission also considered that the State did not refute that the victim's death occurred as a result of the lack of adequate medical care. Consequently, it determined that the State is responsible for the violation of the right to life.

812. The Commission also concluded that the State's actions to repress Mr. Castillo Castillo's exercise of the right of assembly through the use of lethal force were arbitrary. In that regard, it found that the State is responsible for the violation of the right of assembly.

813. Additionally, the Commission found that there were various shortcomings, omissions, and irregularities in the judicial investigation. In particular, among other elements, the Commission noted that there is no information indicating that initial actions were carried out following the victim's death in order to secure the crime scene, identify the type of weapon used, and compare the shell casings with the weapons of state agents. Likewise, the State did not report that, in the course of the investigation, testimonies had been collected from individuals who participated in the protest to determine whether public agents had fired shots at the demonstrators, and that the ballistic reports submitted were prepared in the context of another investigation and do not pertain to the projectile that struck Mr. Castillo Castillo.

814. In addition, the investigation conducted in the present case was archived pursuant to Law No. 999, and therefore the death of Mr. Castillo Castillo remains in impunity. This constitutes a failure by the State of Nicaragua to undertake diligent, impartial, and thorough investigations aimed at achieving justice for what occurred. In this regard, the Commission concluded that the State is responsible for the violation of the rights to judicial guarantees and judicial protection.

815. Finally, the Commission found that the use of lethal force, the lack of medical care, and the subsequent death of a person in a context such as that described in the present case, as well as the absence of a complete and effective investigation—which in turn causes suffering and anguish due to not knowing the truth—constitute in themselves an impairment of the psychological and moral integrity of Mr. Castillo Castillo's family members. Consequently, the Commission concluded that the State violated the right to psychological and moral integrity.

816. The IACHR also took note that Ms. Castillo Castillo left Nicaragua as a consequence of the threats, harassment, and attacks she suffered, which resulted in family separation, as she has not returned to Nicaragua to see her son and daughter. In this regard, the Commission declared the State responsible for the violation of the rights to protection of the family and to freedom of movement and residence. Likewise, taking into account that at the time of the events A.L.C.C. and E.N.C.C. were adolescents, the IACHR declared the State responsible for the violation of their rights of the child.

817. Based on these findings of fact and law, the Commission concluded that the State of Nicaragua is responsible for the violation of the rights to life, personal integrity, assembly, and health, in relation to Article 1(1) of the American Convention, to the detriment of César Noé Castillo Castillo. The IACHR also concluded that the State is responsible for the violation of the rights to psychological and moral integrity, judicial guarantees, and judicial protection, enshrined in Articles 5(1), 8(1), and 25(1) of the American Convention, in relation to Articles 1(1) and 2 of the same instrument, to the detriment of the family members of César Noé Castillo Castillo identified in the report. Finally, the Commission concluded that the State violated the rights to protection of the family and to freedom of movement and residence, established in Articles 17(1) and 22(1) of the American Convention, in relation to Article 1(1) of the same instrument, to the detriment of Miriam Lizeth Castillo Castillo; and the rights of the child provided for in Article 19 of the American Convention, in relation to Article 1(1) of the same instrument, to the detriment of the adolescents A.L.C.C. and E.N.C.C.

2. Interventions in response to requests for Advisory Opinions

818. On November 17, 2025, the Commission submitted its observations on the request for an advisory opinion submitted by the State of Guatemala on "Democracy and its protection in the Inter-American Human Rights System."

3. Submission of written observations in pending cases and in cases of supervision of compliance with judgments

819. During 2025, the IACHR submitted 200 written observations to the Inter-American Court related to active cases pending and in the stage of monitoring compliance with judgments, in accordance with Article 69 of the Rules of Procedure of the Inter-American Court.

4. Appearance and participation in public and private hearings

820. In 2025, the Commission participated in a total of 52 hearings, of which 26 were related to contentious cases pending and 26 to monitoring compliance with judgments. These hearings were:

E. Status of compliance with IACHR recommendations issued in the merits reports published under Article 51 of the American Convention on Human Rights or Article 47 of the IACHR Rules of Procedure

1. The mandate to follow up on the recommendations of the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights

821. Full compliance with the decisions of the Commission is essential to ensure the full enjoyment of human rights in the OAS Member States and to strengthen the Inter-American Human Rights System. For this reason, this section includes an analysis of the status of compliance with the decisions contained in the merits reports published by the Commission since 2001, as well as an analysis of the recommendations whose follow-up was activated upon request by one of the parties in the case of reports published before 2001[205].

822. On several occasions, the OAS General Assembly has encouraged Member States to follow up on compliance with the Commission's recommendations. 1701 (XXX-O/2000) urged States to make their best efforts to implement the recommendations of the Inter-American Commission based on the principle of good faith (operative paragraph 5.d). The OAS General Assembly spoke similarly in resolution AG/RES. 2672 (XLI-O/11), which addresses observations and recommendations on the Annual Report of the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (operative paragraph 3.b).

823. Likewise, the Commission considers that the effectiveness of the inter-American human rights system rests mainly on compliance with the decisions of its organs, which include orders, recommendations and agreements regarding comprehensive reparations for victims of human rights violations, both in the judgments of the Inter-American Court and in the merits reports issued by the Inter-American Commission. In this regard, the will of the States is fundamental to fulfill the objectives of the American Convention and the American Declaration of the Rights and Duties of Man in the application of the principle of pacta sunt servanda, which establishes that States must meet in good faith the obligations assumed in treaties.[206]

824. Both the American Convention on Human Rights (Article 41) and the Statute of the Commission (Article 18) explicitly grant the Commission the power to request information from the Member States and to produce such reports and recommendations as it deems appropriate. Specifically, Article 48 of the IACHR Rules of Procedure provides as follows:

Follow-up

825. Once the Commission has published a report on a friendly settlement or on merits that contains recommendations, it may adopt the follow-up measures it deems appropriate, such as requesting information from the parties and holding hearings in order to verify compliance with friendly settlement agreements and its recommendations.

[205] The IACHR conducts ex officio follow-up on the recommendations of merits reports that have been published since 2001. With respect to the merits reports that have been published before this year, the IACHR follows up and prepares a file when one of the parties requests the activation of this mandate.

[206] Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, United Nations. Doc. A/CONF.39/27 (1969), Article 26: "Pacta sunt servanda". Every treaty in force is binding upon the parties to it and must be performed by them in good faith.

826. The Commission shall report on progress in complying with those agreements and recommendations as it deems appropriate.

2. Methodology for following up on recommendations: actions carried out in the year 2025

827. In compliance with its conventional and statutory powers, and in accordance with the aforementioned resolutions and Article 48 of its Rules of Procedure, the Inter-American Commission requests information from the States regarding compliance with the recommendations included in the merits reports published under Article 51 of the American Convention on Human Rights and Article 47 of the IACHR Rules of Procedure. This practice began in 2001, and, since then, on an annual basis, the Commission requests information from the parties to the cases with published merits reports to follow up on its decisions and update the compliance status of each case. The Commission also receives information on compliance with recommendations in hearings or working meetings held during the year. Based on all the information collected, the Commission analyzes the status of compliance with the recommendations in each case.

828. The Commission has strengthened and consolidated its methodologies for collecting, systematizing and analyzing the information considered in the follow-up of its recommendations to optimize the development of this process and thus identify and draw attention to the individual and structural results of compliance with its decisions. This progress was achieved within the framework of the Special Program to Monitor IACHR Recommendations (Program 21) of the Commission's 2017–2021 Strategic Plan and Programs 8 and 9 of the Commission's 2023–2027 Strategic Plan on strengthening the follow-up of recommendations and the inter-American recommendations monitoring system (SIMORE), and on multilevel dialogue and working agenda with States, respectively.

829. To update the information contained in this chapter, from August 2025 onwards, the Commission has requested the parties to cases with published merits reports subject to follow-up to submit, within one month, information relevant to the implementation of the recommendations. To this end, the Commission has sent requests for information with specific questions regarding the recommendations in each case that have not been declared fully compliant. These questions were prepared based on the latest level of compliance determined by the Commission to obtain relevant information on the progress achieved and the areas of opportunity identified, considering the special features of each case. In this regard, since 2021, the Commission has begun to develop these specific questions in each request for information to guide the States involved and to ask the representatives of the victims to provide relevant, updated and valuable information to analyze compliance with each recommendation.

830. When each request for information was sent, the Commission gave the parties one month to submit information on the progress made and the challenges faced in complying with the recommendations. Although, in principle, that deadline was regarded as the cutoff for receiving inputs for the preparation of this chapter, the Commission considered information received after that date in the following situations: in cases in which, after that date, working meetings were held that led to additional actions agreed upon by the parties; when the Commission granted extensions requested by any of the parties; when the petitioner or the State sent complementary information to that provided on time; or in cases in which internal administrative situations allowed for processing information received after the closing date, considering the time limits set for the approval of this chapter. The information not included in the preparation of this chapter will be analyzed in the 2026 Annual Report of the Commission.

831. Following the follow-up model and methodology proposed in 2018, the Commission includes in this chapter:

(i) A summary of the follow-up activities carried out in 2025 concerning the published reports on the merits, which have included enhanced follow-up of some cases.

(ii) A table of the cases in the recommendations follow-up stage includes a follow-up factsheet for each case and, since 2018, provides greater detail on the progress made and challenges identified each year in relation to each recommendation subject to follow-up. In this regard, since 2023, the Commission has simplified the design and structure of these follow-up factsheets to present the information in a more accessible and practical manner.

(iii) A comprehensive presentation of the progress that, by 2025, the Commission identifies in terms of compliance with all the recommendations issued in the published merits reports, which include the compliance clauses of compliance agreements for those cases in which it is applicable. To present the results in terms of follow-up of and compliance with recommendations, the Commission highlights the relevant results concerning recommendations and cases based on the categories of full, substantial partial and partial compliance, which are described in the General Guidelines on the Follow-up of Recommendations and Decisions of the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights, which were published in 2019 and updated in 2023 (General Guidelines for Follow-up).[207]

832. Likewise, since 2023, in the exercise of its mandate to follow up on recommendations, the IACHR identified that, during the follow-up of published merits reports, the lack of response to requests for information from the victims or their representatives, especially for prolonged periods, is a serious obstacle to the development of this stage. In particular, the Commission has identified that this lack of response prevents it from knowing the current status of implementation of the recommendations and, therefore, of the reparation measures; it delays follow-up procedures of cases as a whole, considering that the number of published merits reports that enter the follow-up stage increases over time; it also interrupts the optimization of the follow-up of recommendations, which hinders the strengthening of the exercise of this mandate in cases where the victims or their representatives have a clear interest in the follow-up.

833. Archiving is a procedural option under Articles 41 and 42.1 of the IACHR Rules of Procedure that applies to petitions and cases under processing when the petitioner withdraws in writing or when unjustified procedural inactivity constitutes a serious indication of lack of interest in pursuing the petition[208]. In this regard, the Commission has begun to alert the parties to the possibility of archiving or deactivation of follow-up, with the objective of optimizing follow-up of the recommendations contained in published merits reports and strengthening follow-up methodologies, by focusing its efforts and institutional capacities on cases with active follow-up in which the victims' representatives have responded to the Commission's requests and have demonstrated a clear interest in follow-up by providing clear, comprehensive, and updated information that allows for an adequate assessment of the levels of compliance with the recommendations.

834. In this context, in 2025, the Commission identified 68 cases in which the victims' representatives had not submitted information in the two years before June 30, 2025. Based on that, the Commission sent a written communication to the relevant parties to alert them of the possibility of archiving their cases and grant them one month to submit updated information on the status of compliance with the recommendations.

835. In one of those cases, the petitioners contacted the follow-up team to request the reactivation of follow-up of the following case file, which has been reincorporated into the 2025 Annual Report together with the corresponding follow-up factsheet:

- Case 12.275, Denton Aitken (Jamaica)

836. Finally, since its inception in 2018, the Commission's Section for Follow-up of Recommendations and Impact (SSRI) has been tasked with analyzing the merits reports published under Article 51 of the American Convention on Human Rights or Article 47 of the IACHR Rules of Procedure. This has helped the Commission to conduct a more specialized follow-up on the matters under its responsibility.

[207] IACHR, General Guidelines on the Follow-up of Recommendations and Decisions of the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (second edition) (only available in Spanish), OEA/Ser.L/V/II. Doc.385/23, November 20, 2023.
[208] IACHR, Rules of Procedure of the IACHR, 2009.

The following is a separate and detailed description of the progress made in complying with the recommendations issued in merits reports. This description helps users to identify more clearly and quickly the status of each issue, the actions taken in each case, their individual and structural impacts, and the challenges and issues in which it is still necessary to continue taking steps to achieve their full implementation.

3. Categories of analysis

837. To provide the parties with objective information on the type of review carried out in each case, the Commission published the General Guidelines on the Follow-up of Recommendations and Decisions,[209] a technical instrument that contains categories of analysis of the information provided in the follow-up processes. The Guidelines were updated in November 2023 to strengthen the criteria for: (i) assessing the information received from the States, the civil society, victims, representatives and other stakeholders as regards the follow-up of recommendations; and (ii) analyzing and determining the level of implementation of those decisions.

838. These categories help the Commission to make a more detailed analysis of the information available and the parties to know whether the information submitted is relevant and timely for the Commission to assess compliance with the recommendations issued in published merits reports. In this regard, the following are the categories of information analysis that were defined in the General Guidelines for Follow-up and that were applied to the updating of this chapter:

- Relevant information provided: when the information was submitted to the Commission within the timeframe specified in the requesting the cases in which information was previously requested - and the information was pertinent, comprehensive, objective and updated.
- Non-relevant information provided: when the information was submitted within the timeframe specified by the Commission but (i) did not refer to measures adopted to comply with at least one outstanding recommendation, or (ii) was incomplete or outdated.
- Information not provided: when information on the measures adopted to comply with the recommendations issued was not provided; the Commission was expressly informed that the information would not be submitted; or the parties requested an extension(s) to provide information and, in the end, the information was not provided.

839. In addition, by means of its General Guidelines on the Follow-up of Recommendations and Decisions the Commission decided to expand the categories of analysis of its recommendations to raise the visibility of States' compliance efforts and to classify the status of compliance with each recommendation.[210] In that regard, the Commission approved the following categories for the individual analysis of recommendations:

- Full compliance: a recommendation is fully complied with when the State has initiated and successfully concluded the measures for its implementation. Full compliance is achieved when the following phases are completed:
- (i) initial phase, (ii) discussion phase, (iii) approval phase, and (iv) execution phase of the compliance measure.
- Substantial partial compliance: a recommendation reaches the level of substantial partial compliance when the State has adopted relevant measures for its implementation and has provided evidence of said measures, but the Commission considers that they have not been completed. In this case, the State has successfully completed the following phases: (i) initial phase, (ii) discussion phase, and (iii) approval phase; the (iv) compliance measure execution phase is still in progress and is beginning to produce significant effects.

[209] IACHR, General Guidelines on the Follow-up of Recommendations and Decisions of the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (second edition) (only available in Spanish), OEA/Ser.L/V/II. Doc.385/23, November 20, 2023.

- Partial compliance: a recommendation is partially complied with when the State has taken some steps towards compliance, but additional measures are still required. This means that the State has successfully completed the following phases: (i) initial phase and (ii) discussion phase; the (iii) approval phase is in the process of implementation.

- Pending compliance: compliance with a recommendation is pending when the State has not yet adopted any measures to implement the recommendation or when the measures are at an early stage and their adoption is very recent and has not yet produced concrete results.

- Non-compliance: a recommendation that, due to the conduct of the State, was impossible to comply with or that the State has explicitly indicated it will not comply with.

4. Status of compliance with the merits reports published under Article 51 of the American Convention on Human Rights or Article 47 of the Rules of Procedure of the IACHR

840. On the basis of the goals established in Program 8 of the 2023–2027 Strategic Plan—on strengthening follow-up of recommendations—the Commission made efforts to disclose and provide more accessible information on the progress achieved in implementing the merits reports it has published under Article 51 of the American Convention on Human Rights or Article 47 of its Rules of Procedure. In that regard, the Committee updated individual follow-up factsheets with the information received in each case throughout the year, including its analysis of the status of compliance with the recommendations that have not yet been declared fully complied with. The Commission analyzed each recommendation issued in the published merits reports and identified the compliance measures that were undertaken, the individual and structural results that were achieved and the challenges that persist, according to the information submitted by the parties involved in each case.

841. In addition, during 2025, merits reports were published for the following cases, which entered the follow-up stage that year (the first follow-up factsheets thereof are included in this annual report):

- Case 13.092, Héctor Leonardo Kemelmajen and Rafael Chaikin
- Case 13.079, Diego Armando Pacheco
- Case 12.935, Hebe Sanchez de Amendola and daughters
- Case 12.692, M.E.F
- Case 13.055, Julio César Rito de los Santos et al.
- Case 12.704, Ramón Nicolás Guarino
- Case 12.936, Oscar Alfonso Morales Díaz
- Case 14.042, Anastasio Hernandez Rojas and family

842. It should be clarified that, in 2025, although the Report on Merits No. 37/25 (Case 12.952, Mariela del Carmen Echeverría de Sanguino, regarding Colombia), it was not included in the follow-up portfolio, inasmuch as the Commission declared full compliance with the recommendations issued therein.

843. Below is a list of merits reports published since 2001, including those that are no longer subject to active follow-up, as well as cases with reports published before 2001 for which activation of follow-up has been requested. Of the total 156 cases, 80 (51.28%) are open and have a 2025 follow-up factsheet, 14 (8.9%) are closed, and 62 (39.7%) are under review for archiving[211]. This table provides direct links to the

5. Activities carried out in the follow-up process in 2025

844. With regard to the follow-up of individual cases provided for in Article 48 of the IACHR Rules of Procedure, during 2025, the Commission focused on increasing the number of follow-up actions carried out throughout the year to build shared road maps for compliance with the recommendations and to re-establish or maintain contact with States, representatives of victims and victims of cases in relation to which it had not received information in recent years.

845. As part of the work to update the follow-up factsheets for inclusion in the 2025 Annual Report, the Commission sent 160 letters to the States and petitioners (two for each of the 80 cases under follow-up), requesting information on compliance with the recommendations during the year. As a result, 80 responses were received, representing 48.7% of the total requests sent to both parties. Of those responses, 18.9% (31 responses) were sent by the States and 29.8% (49 responses) by the petitioners.

846. In addition, the IACHR held bilateral videoconference meetings on different cases with petitioners, victims, and State representatives. In this regard, bilateral meetings were held regarding case 12.525, Nelson Iván Serrano Sáenz, regarding Ecuador (April 24, 2025); and case 11.101, "Caloto" Massacre, regarding Colombia.

847. In addition, during 2025, the Commission continued to promote portfolio review meetings, that is, coordination meetings with the States to discuss the progress achieved and the challenges faced in complying with the recommendations in the cases under follow-up. These meetings were held with the States of Chile (April 4), Guatemala (August 26), Argentina (April 29 and October 1), and Peru (November 6). In addition, at the request of the State, the IACHR held a working meeting on December 1, 2025, with the Mexican State, the petitioners, and the victim in Case 12.228, Alfonso Martín del Campo Dodd.

848. By way of requests for information to the parties to each case, working meetings, bilateral and portfolio meetings, and the relay of information between the parties, in 2025, the Commission monitored compliance in 100 percent of the open cases whose merits reports were published after 2001 pursuant to Article 51 of the American Convention on Human Rights or Article 47 of its Rules of Procedure.

6. Relevant results

a. Progress achieved in 2025 in the implementation of recommendations issued in published merits reports

849. Progress in complying with the recommendations issued by the Commission advanced significantly in 2025, driven by the importance that this mandate has acquired in the Commission's work agenda, particularly within the framework of Program 8 of the 2023–2027 Strategic Plan. The IACHR also recognizes the valuable commitment of the States and of the victims and their representatives in the follow-up processes, which has enabled favorable results to be achieved in levels of compliance.

850. The Commission notes that compliance with the recommendations and compliance agreements clauses is the result of a complex process that involves a sound and continuous interaction among the users of the inter-American human rights system. For this reason, the Commission reaffirms its commitment to implementing all measures within its reach to promote continuous and effective compliance with the recommendations issued to ensure greater enjoyment and safeguarding of human rights in the region.

851. In 2025, the Commission followed up on 80 cases in which merits reports have been published under Article 51 of the American Convention or Article 47 of the IACHR Rules of Procedure. These reports contained a total of 415 recommendations and 144 compliance agreements involving 18 States. During the period under review, no case experienced a change in its overall level of compliance; however, specific recommendations advanced in their level of compliance, as detailed below. In 2025, nine new cases had merits reports published and were incorporated into the follow-up portfolio, while 9 cases were submitted for analysis for potential archiving due to the lack of procedural momentum on the part of the victims' representatives.

852. Based on the follow-up carried out in 2025, the Commission determined that 3 reparation measures reached full compliance, 5 reparation measures reached substantial partial compliance, and 2 reparation measures attained partial compliance. It also noted an increase in the number of measures implemented by States to advance fulfillment of their obligations: whereas 13 measures were implemented in 2024, 24 were documented in 2025 (adopted by Argentina, Brazil, Chile, Jamaica, and Mexico). The following table provides a detailed description of these 24 measures and their specific contribution to compliance with the recommendations and clauses contained in the respective compliance agreements.

Case	Scope of the compliance measure	Recommendation or clause of the compliance agreement	Results reported	Level of compliance in 2025

853. The Commission applauds the steps taken by the States of Brazil, Mexico, and Colombia in 2025 to achieve full compliance with reparation measures, including recommendations issued in published merits reports and clauses of compliance agreements, and welcomes the progress made in the implementation of these decisions. At the same time, the Commission takes this opportunity to urge all OAS Member States to comply with the recommendations issued in its merits reports published under Article 51 of the American Convention on Human Rights, so that full compliance can be attained and progress can be made towards the cessation of follow-up of such matters.

854. In addition, eight cases included one recommendation that changed its status to noncompliant:

- Case 11.517, Diniz Bento Da Silva, Brazil.
- Case 11.556, Corumbiara, Brazil.
- Case 11.634, Jailton Neri Da Fonseca, Brazil.
- Case 12.019, Antonio Ferreira Braga, Brazil.
- Case 12.213, Aristeu Guida Da Silva and Family, Brazil.
- Case 12.310, Sebastião Camargo Filho, Brazil.
- Case 11.564, Gilberto Jimenez Hernández (La Grandeza), Mexico.
- Case 11.740, Victor Manuel Oropeza, Mexico.

b. Cases with no information submitted in 2025

855. The Commission indicates that it did not receive information from any of the parties to the 20 cases below as of the closing date of the present report, neither in response to the Commission's requests for information to be used as input for the Annual Report nor prior to that request:

- 11.430, José Francisco Gallardo Rodríguez, Mexico
- 11.481, Monsignor Oscar Arnulfo Romero, El Salvador
- 12.158, Benedict Jacob, Grenada
- 11.765, Paul Lallion, Grenada
- 12.028, Donnason Knights, Grenada
- 11.771, Samuel Alfonso Catalán Lincoleo, Chile
- 13.095, T.B and S.H, Jamaica
- 12.275, Denton Aitken, Jamaica
- 11.381, Milton García Fajardo, Nicaragua
- 12.545, Isamu Carlos Shibayama, Kenichi Javier Shibayama, and Takeshi Jorge Shibayama, United States
- 11.753, Ramon Martinez Villarreal, United States
- 10.573, José Isabel Salas Galindo and others, United States
- 13.352, Jurijus Kadamovas et al., United States
- 12.832, Gregory Thompson, United States
- 11.140, Mary and Carrie Dann, United States

- 12.476, Oscar Elías Biscet and others, Cuba
- 11.444, Amparo Constante Merizalde, Ecuador
- 12.487, Rafael Ignacio Cuesta Caputi, Ecuador

856. The Commission urges the parties to submit updated information on the actions undertaken by the States to comply with the recommendations issued by the Commission in these cases.

F. Precautionary Measures

1. Introduction

857. Precautionary measures in the Inter-American Human Rights System are part of a protection mechanism of the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR), through which a State is required to protect one or more individuals who are at serious and urgent risk of suffering irreparable harm. Any person or organization may submit a request for precautionary measures in favor of an identified or identifiable individual or group of individuals who are at risk.

858. The precautionary measures mechanism has more than four decades of history in the inter-American system and has served as an effective tool to protect the fundamental rights of the people of the States under the jurisdiction of the Inter-American Commission. The capacity of the IACHR to request the adoption of precautionary measures shows a common practice in international human rights law. In the particular context of the region, it has operated as an effective instrument of protection and prevention against potential serious and irreparable harm to persons or groups of persons facing situations presenting an imminent risk.

859. The precautionary measures are part of the Commission's function of overseeing compliance with the human rights obligations set forth in Article 106 of the Charter of the Organization of American States. These general oversight functions are provided for in Article 41(b) of the American Convention on Human Rights, as well as in Article 18(b) of the Statute of the IACHR. The mechanism of precautionary measures is set forth in Article 25 of the Commission's Rules of Procedure. In accordance with this Article, the Commission grants precautionary measures in serious and urgent situations in which these measures are necessary to avoid irreparable harm to persons. In the process of reaching a decision, according to Article 25(2) of its Rules of Procedure, the Commission considers that:

a. "serious situation" refers to a grave impact that an action or omission can have on a protected right or on the eventual effect of a pending decision in a case or petition before the organs of the inter-American system;

b. "urgent situation" refers to risk or threat that is imminent and can materialize, thus requiring immediate preventive or protective action; and

c. "irreparable harm" refers to injury to rights which, due to their nature, would not be susceptible to reparation, restoration or adequate compensation.

860. The nature and purpose of the precautionary measures granted by the Inter-American Commission differ from those available in national jurisdictions. Precautionary measures have a dual nature related to the protection of fundamental rights under the regulations of the inter-American system. The Inter-American Commission and the Inter-American Court of Human Rights ("the Inter-American Court" or "I/A Court H.R.") have repeatedly established that precautionary and provisional measures have a dual nature, both protective and precautionary.[212] With respect to their precautionary nature, these measures may be intended to prevent the enforcement of judicial, administrative or other measures that may render ineffective an eventual decision of the IACHR on an individual petition. These measures aim to safeguard the rights at risk until the petition pending before the inter-American system is resolved. In this way, they seek to ensure the integrity and effectiveness of an eventual decision on the merits, and, thus, avoid any further infringement of the rights at issue, a situation that may adversely affect the useful effect (effet utile) of the final decision. An example of this can be seen in those situations in which the IACHR has urged the State to suspend the application of the death penalty, in order to allow the Commission to later analyze in the petition or case the alleged violations reported by the applicants in relation to the applicable instruments.

861. With regard to the protective nature, the measures seek to prevent irreparable harm and thus preserve the exercise of human rights. These factors have led to the granting of precautionary measures in a wide range of situations, particularly in order to avoid irreparable harm against the life and personal integrity of the beneficiaries. To do this, the IACHR shall assess the problem raised, the effectiveness of state actions to address the situation described, and how vulnerable the proposed beneficiaries would be left in case the measures are not adopted.[213] For example, matters concerning disappearances, access to medical treatments, situations involving threats, harassment and persecution, including those connected to the beneficiary's work or affiliation, among several other circumstances.

862. Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure of the IACHR establishes that the granting of such measures and their adoption by the State shall not constitute a prejudgment on the violation of the rights protected under the American Convention on Human Rights or other applicable instruments. Furthermore, the IACHR emphasizes that, pursuant to Article 25(6) of its Rules of Procedure, the analysis of a request for precautionary measures is carried out taking into account the context, the particularities of each specific situation, and the nature of the risk and the harm that is sought to be avoided.

863. Precautionary measures have been sought to protect thousands of people or groups of people who are at risk. In 2025, these groups mainly included persons deprived of liberty, human rights defenders, missing persons, and persons in situations of human mobility.

2. Requests for precautionary measures

864. In 2025, the IACHR continued to implement Resolution 3/2018 "Strengthening of the processing of requests for precautionary measures," which has been strengthening the initial study methodology of the requests received. Resolution 3/2018 streamlined the processing of matters that, historically and consistently, the Commission has considered unsuitable for analysis through the mechanism of precautionary measures, as they would require an analysis of the merits of the matter itself, which is specific to the petition and case system.[214] In addition, Resolution 3/2018 established criteria that allow for the

[212] See in this regard: Inter-American Court of Human Rights (I/A Court H.R.), Matter of the Yare I and Yare II Capital Region Penitentiary Center (Yare Prison), Provisional Measures regarding the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela, Order of March 30, 2006, considerandum 5; Case of Carpio Nicolle et al. v. Guatemala, Provisional Measures, Order of July 6, 2009, considerandum 16 (Available only in Spanish).

[213] See in this regard: I/A Court H.R., Matter of Milagro Sala, Provisional Measures regarding Argentina, Order of November 23, 2017, considerandum 5 (Available only in Spanish); Matter of Capital El Rodeo I and El Rodeo II Judicial Confinement Center, Provisional Measures regarding Venezuela, Order of February 8, 2008, considerandum 9; Matter of the Criminal Institute of Plácido de Sá Carvalho, Provisional Measures regarding Brazil, Order of February 13, 2017, considerandum 6 (Available only in Spanish).

[214] In this regard, the Commission recalls that, in accordance with its established practice, the mechanism of precautionary measures is not suitable for addressing requests that deal strictly with matters or claims such as the following: i) alleged violations of due process and judicial protection in criminal or civil proceedings (Articles 8 and 25 of the ACHR and Article XVIII of the American Declaration); ii) determination of the compatibility, in abstract terms, of a regulation with the American Convention or other applicable instruments; iii) payment of pecuniary compensations, including civil and commercial proceedings, pensions, and other related issues; iv) allegedly unjustified dismissals of personnel of private or public companies not elected by popular vote, payment of salaries, determinations on promotions and vacations; v) commercial or civil attachment of property and evictions where no situations presenting a risk to life or personal integrity are alleged; vi) requests for resources or financial support; vii) strictly administrative proceedings, deactivation of requests for precautionary measures in which no response was received from the applicants during the established deadlines.[215]

865. Thus, requests for precautionary measures continue to be assessed[216] per day and classified according to the information available regarding their respective urgency. This allows the IACHR to prioritize requests in which greater elements of urgency are identified, in accordance with Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure, favoring more expeditious decision-making regarding matters that present indications of imminent risk.

866. During 2025, the Commission received 1969 new requests for precautionary measures, managing to evaluate 84.71% of them in the same year. That number represents an increase of 557 requests with respect to those received in the previous year, almost 40%. This is a record number of requests for precautionary measures received, which has exceeded even the record of 2018, when 1,618 requests were registered in the context of the human rights crisis in Nicaragua. In 2025, requests increased by approximately 66% compared to the average annual volume observed between 2020 and 2024.

867. In 2025, a higher number of requests were received with respect to different countries. In percentage terms, the countries with the most significant increases were El Salvador (208.3%), Cuba (166.6%), Argentina (113.4%), the United States (111.5%), Brazil (83.2%), Guatemala (59.2%) and Venezuela (56.2%; while in the number of requests received, the countries with the highest increases were Brazil (124 more requests than in 2024), Colombia (116 more requests), Argentina (101 more requests), the United States (51 more requests) and Venezuela (36 more requests). There were also increases in the number of requests received regarding other countries, although to a lesser extent.

868. In all these countries, the increase in requests received is due, in part, to requests for protection for persons facing risks to their lives, personal integrity and health in situations of deprivation of liberty, including situations involving persons with indications of forced disappearance and persons whose whereabouts are unknown. In the cases of the United States and El Salvador, the increase is due in part to requests regarding people in situations related to human mobility (as a result from the immigration and asylum policies and measures implemented by the current administration in the United States.[217] In Colombia, Cuba, El Salvador and Venezuela requests regarding human rights defenders who face risks in the development of their work also explain the increase registered. In Argentina, Brazil, Chile, Colombia and Mexico there have been complaints alleging violations of ESCER. Lastly, the IACHR continued to receive requests regarding missing persons in Venezuela since the intensification of persecution against human rights defenders and political opponents in the post-election context.

869. At the same time, in 2025, the IACHR continued to review the requests for precautionary measures pending a final decision based on chronological criteria. In this regard, the processing of all the precautionary measures registered for 2022 was concluded, taking a final decision, as well as 99.38% of the requests registered in 2023, and 97.59% of those registered in 2024.

870. As a result of the evaluations carried out, in 2025 the IACHR granted and/or extended 73 precautionary measures through 65 resolutions, for the protection of more than 7681 people. The scenario of increased requests for precautionary measures this year implied an additional effort to guarantee the success in the opportunity of responses to high-risk requests, such as those related to the protection of people whose including the issuance of certificates, expediting proceedings, and declaratory resolutions. For more information, see Resolution 3/2018 on "Strengthening the processing of precautionary measures."

[215] The Commission recalls that a new request for precautionary measures may be filed.

[216] The initial diagnosis evaluates what the matter is about and assesses its degree of urgency, allowing the Commission to prioritize situations of greater risk. This diagnosis is different from the legal evaluation of the matter, which refers to the technical analysis of whether a request meets the procedural requirements for the granting of a precautionary measure.

[217] IACHR, Press Release 37/25, IACHR expresses concern over recent migration and asylum policies and measures in the United States, February 12, 2025.

whereabouts or destination is unknown.[218] In some cases, the IACHR granted precautionary measures in exceptionally short terms, such as only two days for the human rights defender and executive director of Espacio Público, Carlos José Correa Barros, who was reportedly detained on January 7, 2025, in Venezuela, and whose whereabouts were unknown.[219]

871. As a result of this effort, the Commission managed to grant 71.1% of precautionary measures in less than 90 days after their registration, guaranteeing the opportunity to attend to imminent situations. In previous years, the figures were as follows: in 2020, 63.8% of the measures granted were processed in less than 90 days; in 2021, 34.9%; in 2022, 48%; 67.3% in 2023; and 76.81% in 2024.

872. Finally, it should be noted that, in 2025, the IACHR's action regarding precautionary measures was impacted by the financing crisis faced by international human rights organizations. Despite the loss of workforce, the Commission managed to deliberate on precautionary measures through 1525 consultations submitted for its consideration.

3. Follow-up on the precautionary measures in force

873. In light of Resolution 2/2020 - "Strengthening of the Monitoring of Precautionary Measures in Force," in 2025, the Commission continued its commitment to States, beneficiaries, and their representatives to strengthen the monitoring of precautionary measures in force, as well as to promote transparency, predictability, and legal certainty in decisions. Resolution 2/2020 provides for the possibility that the IACHR may issue Follow-up Resolutions that warrant a pronouncement to promote compliance with protection measures; as well as to hold working meetings outside of the Periods of Sessions; and to conduct on-site visits to establish closer contact with the beneficiaries and their representatives and state authorities, and to directly assess the status of implementation of the measures and evaluate the current risk.

[218] In 2025, 32.8% of the requests granted/extended seek protection for persons whose whereabouts or destination are unknown.

[219] IACHR, Resolution 3/25, Precautionary Measure No. 16-25, Carlos José Correa Barrios regarding Venezuela, January 10, 2025.

874. In view of the above, and in order to continue improving the monitoring of the measures in force, the Commission adopted a working methodology that allows it to periodically evaluate the precautionary measures in force, both on the suitability and effectiveness of the protection measures adopted by the States, and on the whether the procedural requirements remain met. In this way, the Commission continues to focus on those matters that, due to the ongoing risk under the terms of Article 25, require its due attention.[220] In this regard, the IACHR continued to adopt, at the same time, Resolutions to Lift Precautionary Measures in matters where it no longer finds compliance with the procedural requirements.[221] This work has been carried out since 2020 with the support of the Special Protection Oversight Group (GESP).

875. The portfolio of precautionary measures in force amounts to 655, which cover 85,449 beneficiaries in the region. Regarding the year 2025, the Commission carried out at least one supervisory action (working meetings, bilateral meetings, public hearings, follow-up resolutions, on-site visits, requests for information, among others) in 99% of the precautionary measures in force. This achievement reflects a change in the model for monitoring measures in force, initiated in 2020, which allows for more regular and comprehensive follow-up on precautionary measures, as well as more timely updates to the IACHR regarding the continuity of threatening events. In the same vein, the IACHR also managed to ensure that the parties' reports were forwarded at least once a year in 98.77% of the precautionary measures in force.

876. In 2025, the IACHR was able to execute its strategy of carrying out on-site visits to follow up on precautionary measures in force on five occasions:

- Colombia. From April 22 to 25, 2025, the IACHR visited the cities of Bogotá and Cali to monitor the Colombian State's progress in implementing reparations measures under friendly settlement agreements (ASA) and agreements to comply with recommendations in transition cases, and to meet with authorities and parties involved in precautionary measures. The delegation was led by the President and Country Rapporteur, Commissioner José Luis Caballero, and the Executive Secretary, Tania Reneaum Panszi. During the visit, meetings were held with authorities, working meetings, and training sessions.[222]
- Guatemala. From June 4 to 6, 2025, the IACHR visited Guatemala City to hold bilateral and working meetings on precautionary measures and cases in the stage of follow-up of recommendations, as well as to provide training workshops for civil servants and civil society. The delegation was led by Vice-President and Country Rapporteur Commissioner Andrea Pochak, accompanied by Executive Secretary Tania Reneaum Panszi and a technical team.[223]
- Brazil. From August 4 to 8, 2025, the IACHR visited Vale do Javari, in the state of Amazonas, Brazil, to monitor compliance with the commitments made within the framework of the Joint Working Group for the implementation of PM 449-22 Bruno Araújo Pereira and Dom Phillips; and 11 members of UNIVAJA. The delegation was led by Executive Secretary Tania Reneaum Panszi, accompanied by the technical team. In Manaus, Tabatinga, and Atalaia do Norte, the IACHR delegation met with officials from the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, the Federal Police, the Federal Prosecutor's Office, social communicators, beneficiaries, and civil society. It also held a working meeting on the precautionary measure and attended meetings on journalism, communication and disinformation in the Amazon, as well as on the protection of human rights [221] According to Article 25, paragraph 9, of the IACHR Rules of Procedure: The Commission shall evaluate periodically, at its own initiative or at the request of either party, whether to maintain, modify, or lift the precautionary measures in force. At any time, the State may submit a well-founded request for the Commission to revoke the precautionary measures in force. The Commission shall request observations from the beneficiaries before deciding on the State's request. The submission of such a request shall not suspend the precautionary measures in force. defenders, in addition to visiting the Monument of the Crosses in tribute to Bruno Araújo Pereira and Dom Phillips.

- Honduras. From October 8 to 10, 2025, the IACHR carried out a working visit in Tegucigalpa with the aim of holding bilateral meetings and working sessions related to precautionary measures. It also conducted training for representatives of civil society, as well as officials of state institutions. The delegation was led by the Vice-President of the IACHR and Rapporteur for Honduras, Commissioner Andrea Pochak, who was accompanied by the technical team of the Executive Secretariat.[224]
- Bahamas. On December 3 and 4, 2025, the IACHR conducted a working visit to Nassau, during which the Commission could follow up, on the ground, on precautionary measure 535-14, which protects the people in the Carmichael Road immigration detention center. The IACHR delegation was led by Commissioner Andrea Pochak, country rapporteur and rapporteur on Human Mobility, and was supported by the Executive Secretariat team.[225]

877. The IACHR also highlights additional follow-up actions in 2025 to bring the parties closer together. A total of 2969 letters were sent to States and representatives, requesting specific information to monitor the implementation of such measures. The IACHR also held bilateral meetings with some of the parties, working meetings with both parties, and public hearings. In 2025, a high number of bilateral meetings were held, with 73 meetings in relation to 102 precautionary measures. In 2024, there were 103 meetings on 137 precautionary measures; in 2023, 107 bilateral meetings on 111 precautionary measures; and in 2022, 75 bilateral meetings on 80 precautionary measures.[226] Additionally, in 2025, 32 working meetings were held with both parties regarding 31 precautionary measures, as well as two public hearings[227] regarding 45 precautionary measures. Likewise, in 2025, the practice of holding working meetings outside the Periods of Sessions was maintained, with 13 such meetings having been held. In addition, the IACHR held six portfolio meetings with the States of Argentina, the Bahamas, Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, and Mexico, in which the requests under analysis and the precautionary measures in force with respect to these States were addressed.

[225] IACHR, Press Release 269/25, IACHR concludes visit to The Bahamas, December 17, 2025.
[226] This decrease in the number of bilateral meetings (but not in the precautionary measures addressed in those meetings) is explained by the strategy of holding meetings on several precautionary measures; for example, a meeting was held on 36 precautionary measures regarding Venezuela, in preparation for the hearing to be held during the 194th Period of Sessions.

879. In 2025, the IACHR continued to follow up on the Joint Working Group on the implementation of precautionary measures in favor of Bruno Araújo, Dom Phillips, and members of UNIVAJA in Brazil, created in 2023. The Joint Working Group operates within the framework of the follow-up process for Precautionary Measure 449-22 and aims to contribute to full compliance with the precautionary measures, ensuring coordination and complementarity between national authorities and the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights. The Working Group includes an Action Plan developed by the parties and approved by the IACHR through Follow-up Resolution 76/23.[228] The Working Group is expected to last two years. In 2025, the IACHR issued a press release recognizing the progress made in the implementation of the Joint Working Group,[229] including: the adoption of collective indigenous protection measures in the Javari Valley; the inclusion of UNIVAJA members in the Protection Program for Human Rights Defenders, Journalists, and Environmentalists, which has a federal technical team in Amazonas; the development of the National Plan for the Protection of Human Rights Defenders; and progress in the criminal proceedings against the perpetrators of the murder of Bruno Araújo Pereira and Dom Phillips, as well as the indictment of the alleged mastermind and third parties involved in the concealment of the victims' corpses. Likewise, as detailed above, the IACHR carried out an on-site visit to monitor the implementation of the commitments assumed within the framework of the Working Group from August 4 to 8, 2025 at Vale do Javari.

880. Follow-up Resolutions are a practice that the IACHR consolidated through the aforementioned Resolution 2/2020. They provide an opportunity for the Commission to evaluate the implementation and mitigation measures adopted by the State and to delve into the specific aspects of each matter, taking into account the criteria established in the aforementioned Resolution. In 2025, the IACHR adopted three follow-up resolutions regarding three precautionary measures, which are detailed below:

- Resolution No. 13/25 – PM 1581-18 – Jorge David Glas Espinel (Extension and Follow-up)

  On February 10, 2025, the IACHR adopted Follow-up and Extension Resolution 13/2025 regarding the situation of Jorge Glas in Ecuador. After conducting a follow-up visit to Ecuador in November 2024 to assess the beneficiary's situation, the IACHR considered that Jorge Glas continues to be at risk following his detention in April 2024. It noted that his mental health was in a particularly serious state, despite the medical care provided by the State in 2024, and that both his conditions of detention and the violent incidents that have occurred in the prison where he is currently held are impacting the deterioration of the beneficiary's mental health and could impact his physical integrity. Upon analyzing the submissions of fact and law, in accordance with Article 25 of its Rules of Procedure, the Commission concluded that the situation of Mr. Jorge David Glas Espinel in Ecuador remains in force and decided the following:

  a. Continue to follow up on the situation of Jorge David Glas Espinel.

  b. In light of the assessments made in this resolution, extend the scope of the precautionary measures in force to include the beneficiary's right to health. Consequently, the State of Ecuador is requested to adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life, personal integrity, and health of Jorge David Glas Espinel. In particular, assessing and implementing those most appropriate to his personal circumstances, and that allow for the creation of conditions that ensure and respect his rights, and compliance with the extension of the precautionary measure. This must include, at least, that the State:

     i. Maintain the continuous operation of the independent Technical Table that will have the following functions: 1. to be an instance of dialogue that allows reaching scientific medical consensus in case of discrepancies; and 2. to resolve any medical discrepancies that may arise between the trusted doctors of the beneficiary of the precautionary measure and the doctors in charge of the treatment of Mr. Jorge David Glas Espinel.

[228] IACHR, Press Release 286/23, IACHR welcomes installation of the Working Group for the precautionary measures of Bruno Araújo, Dom Phillips and UNIVAJA regarding Brazil, December 11, 2023.
[229] IACHR, Press Release 68/25, IACHR acknowledges progress on implementation of Joint Working Group on precautionary measures for UNIVAJA, Bruno Pereira, and Dom Phillips in Brazil, April 2, 2025.

ii. In light of the available medical documentation, to carry out a complete medical evaluation immediately in a hospital center, and to draw up a protocol that, without endangering the life or personal integrity of the beneficiary, establishes the appropriate protocol for admission to and discharge from a hospital whenever it is necessary to provide hospital treatment that cannot be provided in the detention center or to attend to a physical or mental health emergency of Mr. Jorge David Glas Espinel.

c. Following the medical evaluation and the recommended treatment, the State must act with absolute diligence and take into account the scientific evaluations of the Technical Table and ensure that the conditions of detention, whether in a detention center or in a hospital if the beneficiary is receiving hospital treatment, must be compatible with applicable international standards in this area, including:

i. Mr. Jorge David Glas Espinel should be immediately transferred to a detention center other than the Guayas No. 3 Detention Center (CPL);

ii. That the new detention center has at least the following characteristics and conditions of detention:

- An adapted cell without objects that can be used for self-injury
- Illuminated, ventilated, clean and not overcrowded spaces, with access to basic services.
- Trained personnel with specialized training in mental health, suicide risk detection and psychological first aid.
- Avoid conditions of extreme isolation, allowing safe social interactions.
- Access to support networks, family visits, contact with lawyers and religious assistance if desired. All in private spaces.
- Allow for the access to independent monitoring mechanisms and accredited and specialized external institutional organizations to monitor detention conditions.
- Keep logs of the actions taken for the protection of the beneficiary, which are accessible and transparent.
- Ensure clear intervention protocols to respond to emergencies in situations presenting a risk to the life and integrity, and care for people with suicidal intentions and/or attempts.
- Ensure the timely and regular flow of medical information from the beneficiary and visits and participation of the beneficiary's trusted doctors.
- Guarantee specific treatments for Mr. Jorge David Glas Espinel including therapies and medication. In case of discrepancy of opinion on the part of the beneficiary's trusted physicians, such discrepancies shall be known and resolved by the Independent Technical Table.

- Access to the care of psychologists, psychiatrists and social workers who must be available in order to be able to comply with the medical treatment prescribed.

- Constant monitoring through uninterrupted supervision by trained personnel, which must be documented in a transparent recording mechanism.

d. Consult and agree upon the measures to be adopted with the beneficiary and his representatives, in accordance with the assessments and scope delimited in this resolution. In particular, strengthen the existing internal consultation mechanisms, taking into account the assessments and scope delimited in this resolution; and

e. Report on the actions taken to investigate the facts that gave rise to the adoption and continuity of this precautionary measure, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring. In particular, send the IACHR periodic information on the status of the investigation into the claims of ill-treatment and torture made in the context of this matter.

- Resolution No. 37/25 – PM 137-23 - Identified members of the Comité Municipal de Defensa de los Bienes Comunes y Públicos de Tocoa and Bufete Justicia para los Pueblos regarding Honduras (Follow-up, Extension and Partial Lifting).

  On May 1, 2025, the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) decided to issue Follow-up, Extension and Partial Lifting Resolution 37/2025, regarding precautionary measures 137-23 in favor of members of the Municipal Committee for the Defense of Common and Public Goods of Tocoa (Comité Municipal de Defensa de los Bienes Comunes y Públicos de Tocoa) and the Justice for the People Law Firm (Bufete Justicia para los Pueblos) in Honduras.

  In the resolution, the IACHR decided to maintain the precautionary measures, lift them with respect to Juan López following his assassination in September 2024, and to extend them in favor of 13 defenders and/or members of the Committee and relatives of Juan López, due to the serious and urgent risk arising from their activities in defense of the environment in the context of mining projects in the Bajo Aguán region, as well as the search for justice following the murder of Juan López.

  Consequently, in accordance with Article 25 of its Rules of Procedure, the Commission decided:

  a. Keep the precautionary measures granted in favor of Juana Ramona Zúniga Martínez, Gabriela Ofelia Sorto Cruz, David Lemus, J.M., D.M., Olayo Méndez, Juana Esquivel, A.C., D.S., Esly Emperatriz Banegas Ávila, Rita Isabel Romero, Aida Rodríguez, Mario López, Gregorio Vásquez, Ernesto López, Dinora Castro, A.A., José Abelino Cedillo, Reynaldo Domínguez, Eugenio Esquivel, J.S.H., O.H, José Daniel Márquez, Marco Tulio Ramos, Kelvin Romero, Porfirio Sorto, Edy Alexander Tábora Gonzales, Kenia Oliva, and Carlos Jiménez;

  b. Extend the precautionary measures granted in favor of Telma Pena, Claudia López, Julia López, Melvin Darvin Espino López, Enma Iveth Gutiérrez Velásquez, Roxana Yamileth Romero Ruiz, Gloria Dubon, Antonio Alvarado, Miguel Ángel Vásquez, José Nuncio Veliz Alfaro, Limbor Otoniel Velásquez Sarmiento, Jose Juan Cedillo Martínez, and Angel Augusto Centerero;

  c. Lift the precautionary measures granted to Juan Antonio López;

d. Strengthen the implementation of measures to protect the beneficiaries and assess the situations that place them at risk, as soon as possible, with a view to adopting appropriate and effective measures to protect their lives and personal integrity;

e. Strengthen the presence of state institutions in the area within the framework of environmental and disarmament policies as part of the measures to be implemented to mitigate the risk to the beneficiaries; and

f. Investigate with due diligence the alleged acts of risk and thus prevent impunity and the repetition of such acts, in particular the murder of human rights defender Juan Antonio López.

- Resolution No. 95/25 - PM 990-21 - Vicente Iván Suástegui Muñoz and his family regarding Mexico (Extension, Follow-up, and Partial Lift)

  On December 20, 2025, the IACHR adopted Follow-up, Extension, and Partial Lifting Resolution No. 95/2025 regarding the situation of Vicente Iván Suástegui Muñoz and family in Mexico (PM-990-21). The IACHR considered that the situation of risk noted in relation to Vicente Iván Suástegui Muñoz, following his disappearance on August 5, 2021, as well as in relation to his family members, continues. It also considered that the family members of Samantha Colón, Vicente Iván Suástegui Muñoz's partner, share the situation of risk, and therefore extended the measures in their favor. Finally, the Commission lifted the measures in relation to Marco Antonio Suástegui Muñoz, following his murder in April 2025. The IACHR positively assessed the search and investigation actions carried out by the State in relation to Vicente Iván Suástegui Muñoz, as well as the implementation of various protection and support measures for his beneficiary family members. Under the terms of Article 25 of its Rules of Procedure, the Commission requested that Mexico:

  a. To maintain the precautionary measures granted to all the persons indicated in Resolution No. 93/2025 of November 23, 2021;

  b. Strengthen the search actions and investigations, as well as advance the judicial processes regarding the disappearance of Vicente Iván Suástegui Muñoz;

  c. Strengthen the protection measures in relation to Samantha Valeria Colón Morales;

  d. Extend the precautionary measures in favor of Faustino Colón Delgado, Ignacia Morales Salmerón, Sandra Paola Téllez Colón; J.A.S.T. and P.M.T.C., as relatives of Samantha Valeria Colón Morales;

  e. Lift the precautionary measures granted in favor of Marco Antonio Suástegui Muñoz;

  f. Investigate alleged acts of risk with due diligence in order to prevent impunity and the repetition of such acts, in particular the murder of Marco Antonio Suástegui Muñoz.

881. In the periodic evaluation of its precautionary measures, the IACHR analyzes whether they continue to meet the requirements of Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure, and may decide to lift them when there is no longer a serious and urgent risk of irreparable harm. In the process of monitoring the implementation of the measures, the IACHR also considers contextual information and a differentiated approach in the case of groups in situations of particular vulnerability, as well as a gender, intercultural, and age perspective, taking into account the risk that persons belonging to these groups may face in certain contexts.

882. On the other hand, it should be noted that the granting of precautionary measures has a temporary nature. In view of the foregoing, and under Article 25, paragraph 9, of its Rules of Procedure, the IACHR shall evaluate periodically, at its own initiative or at the request of either party, whether to maintain, modify, or lift the precautionary measures in force. In this regard, in 2025, the Commission issued 36 resolutions regarding 38 precautionary measures (see details of each Resolution below).

883. In 2025, the IACHR decided to fully lift 34 precautionary measures in force and partially lift two. The liftings refer to inactive matters, that have been rendered moot, or, in general, in which no risk factors were identified that would justify keeping them in force. As indicated in Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure, decisions to lift precautionary measures are issued through reasoned resolutions (see summaries below). Among other aspects, the following are taken into account: i) the existence or continuation of the risk; ii) whether it has changed during implementation; iii) the effectiveness of the measures adopted by the State; iv) risk mitigation; v) whether the beneficiaries continue to reside or have a presence in the State in question; vi) inactivity or lack of response by representatives to requests for information made by the IACHR, such that there is no information to justify keeping the precautionary measures in force. The foregoing is part of the strategy of keeping the portfolio of precautionary measures more focused on those matters that, due to their current level of risk, require special attention from the IACHR.

884. The IACHR particularly highlights the lifting of precautionary measures in matters where States have complied with its recommendations. On the one hand, the IACHR lifted precautionary measures in which it assessed the suitability and effectiveness of the protection measures implemented by the States. In this sense, it lifted PM 729-22, granted on February 6, 2023, in favor of Liz Patricia Benavides Vargas and her family unit in Peru. In assessing compliance with the procedural requirements, the IACHR found that the factual situation regarding Liz Patricia Benavides Vargas had changed, as she no longer held the position of Attorney General of the Nation, and that the security details and investigative measures adopted by the State were adequate and effective.[230] In the same sense, it lifted PM 1123-19, granted on December 25, 2019, in favor of María Patricia Arce Guzmán and her children, in Bolivia. In evaluating compliance with the procedural requirements, the IACHR found that the factual situation had changed in relation to the beneficiary, particularly due to the adequacy and effectiveness of the security details and investigative measures adopted by the State.[231]

885. The IACHR also lifted PM 251-15 granted on June 30, 2015, in favor of "Alejandro" and his family unit, in Michoacán, Mexico. The IACHR assessed that the factual situation regarding "Alejandro" and his family members had changed, in part due to the provision of protection measures and medical care required by the IACHR.[232] Also in relation to Mexico, it lifted PM 250-09 granted on April 23, 2010, in favor of José Alejandro Solalinde Guerra, David Álvarez Vargas, Areli Palomo Contreras, Mario Calderón López, and Norma Araceli Doblado Abrego, who worked or were staying at the "Hermanos en el Camino" Migrant Shelter, in the municipality of Ixtepec, state of Oaxaca. The IACHR assessed the measures adopted by the State, mainly the adequacy and effectiveness of the security details and investigative measures, which have allowed the beneficiary and the shelter to carry out their work in defense of human rights.[233]

886. On the other hand, the IACHR lifted precautionary measures that protected people at risk from possible deportations or expulsions. In this sense, it lifted PM 330-24 granted on November 25, 2024, in favor of Reinaldo Picado Miranda in Costa Rica. On that occasion, it was decided that Costa Rica be requested to refrain from deporting, expelling, or extraditing the beneficiary to Nicaragua until the competent administrative and/or judicial authorities have duly assessed, in accordance with applicable international standards and the principle of non-refoulement, the alleged risk the individual would face if deprived of liberty in the current context in Nicaragua. As a result of the State's decision to grant refugee status to the beneficiary, the IACHR understood that it did not have the elements to find that the requirements of Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure were met.[234] It also lifted PM 490-18, granted on October 15, 2018, in favor of M.B.B.P., a Venezuelan woman living in Panama who faced risks in a deportation proceeding initiated after it was discovered that she was living with HIV. The Commission requested that Panama refrain from deporting or expelling her to Venezuela until the domestic authorities had duly assessed the alleged risk she faced with regard to her health situation. The IACHR decided to lift these precautionary measures after assessing the actions taken by the State of Panama, in particular, the order not to deport or expel the beneficiary, the granting of a visa on humanitarian grounds, and the provision of medical treatment for her health condition, which modified the beneficiary's legal and factual situation, thereby no longer verifying compliance with the requirements of Art. 25 of the Rules of Procedure.[235]

887. Next, reference is made to the 99 resolutions on precautionary measures adopted during 2025, concerning: 69 precautionary measures granted; one precautionary measure extended; one precautionary measure extended with a follow-up resolution; two precautionary measures extended with follow-up resolution and lifting; and 37 measures lifted.

ARGENTINA

Resolution No. 52/25 (LIFTED)
PM 540-15 - María and Mariano, Argentina

The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) decides to lift these precautionary measures in favor of María and Mariano, in Argentina. Given that the Inter-American Court of Human Rights (I/A Court H.R.) issued a decision on the merits regarding the Matter of María et al. v. Argentina in 2023, the Commission considers that it is appropriate to lift these precautionary measures and continue to participate in the monitoring of compliance with this judgment. In particular, in the reparation measures concerning Mariano's legal situation and the development of the relationship between María and Mariano, elements that were the focus of the precautionary measures in their favor.

Resolution No. 63/25 (GRANTED)
PM 702-25 - Mariano Javier Oteiza Hernández, Argentina

On September 15, 2025, the IACHR granted precautionary measures on behalf of Mariano Javier Oteiza Hernández, after considering that he is in a serious and urgent situation, given that his rights to life, personal integrity, and health are at risk of irreparable harm in Argentina.

According to the request, the beneficiary is deprived of his liberty and is at risk of having his left leg amputated, allegedly as a result of repeated lack of access to adequate and timely medical care. For its part, the State mentioned that there has been an improvement in the infection, that the beneficiary is walking with crutches, and that he has been provided with ongoing support and care. The Commission assessed that the beneficiary would continue to suffer from conditions resulting from the lack of adequate medical care and that, despite court decisions in favor of the beneficiary to receive all the medical care required for his diagnosis, this had not been implemented. Therefore, based on Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure, the Commission requests that Argentina:

a. adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life, personal integrity, and health of the beneficiary. In particular, provide the prescribed medical treatment in a timely and appropriate manner, as well as the effective management of the required medical appointments;
b. consult and agree upon the measures to be adopted with the beneficiary and his representative;
c. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged facts that led to the adoption of this resolution, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 77/25 (LIFTED)
PM 999-23 - Juan Carlos Hollman, Argentina

The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) decides to lift these precautionary measures in favor of Juan Carlos Hollman, in Argentina. In 2024, the parties confirmed the beneficiary's death. The Commission expressed its regret over the incident, and observed that the precautionary measures are ineffective in the absence of the person they were intended to safeguard. Therefore, it has decided to lift these measures.

BAHAMAS

Resolution No. 88/25 (LIFTED)
PM 706-16 - Fred Smith, Joseph Darville, Romauld Ferreira, Kirkland Bodie, Francisco Núñez, and their families, Bahamas

The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) decides to lift these precautionary measures in favor of Fred Smith, Joseph Darville, Romauld Ferreira, Kirkland Bodie, Francisco Núñez, and their families, in The Bahamas. The Commission assessed the information submitted by the parties regarding the implementation of the precautionary measures. Following the request for lifting submitted by the State, and in the absence of a response from the beneficiaries' representation in nearly six years, the Commission does not have elements to continue to find that a situation presenting a serious and imminent risk exists. After failing to identify compliance with the requirements of Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure, the IACHR decided to lift the precautionary measures at hand.

BOLIVIA

PM 1123-19 - María Patricia Arce Guzmán and her children, Bolivia

The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) decided to lift these precautionary measures in favor of María Patricia Arce Guzmán and her children in Bolivia. At the time of making the decision, the Commission recognized the measures taken by the State during the implementation, as well as the passage of time without threatening events. After several requests for information to the representation and the State's request to lift the measures, no response has been received from the representation in a period of time. Taking into account the nature of the precautionary measures and in light of the information available, the Commission considered that at this time it is not possible to establish a threatening situation under the terms of Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure, and decided to lift the measures.

CHILE

PM 19-25 - Julia Chuñil Catricura, Chile

On July 14, 2025, the IACHR granted precautionary measures in favor of Julia Chuñil Catricura, after considering that she is in a serious and urgent situation presenting a risk of irreparable harm to her rights in Chile. It was alleged that the beneficiary is the president of the Putreguel Mapuche Community, and a leader in the defense of the ancestral territory in the Los Ciruelos sector, Máfil commune, Los Ríos region, Wallmapu. Since November 8, 2024, her whereabouts have been unknown. Despite the complaints filed after her disappearance and the search and tracing procedures carried out by the state authorities, to date the beneficiary's whereabouts remain unknown. The Commission also assessed the search efforts and actions implemented by the State. However, after more than seven months since the disappearance of the beneficiary, her whereabouts have not been found and there is no information available to clarify the facts. In accordance with Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure, the Commission requests that Chile:

a. redouble its efforts to determine the situation and whereabouts of Julia Chuñil Catricura; and
b. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged events that gave rise to this resolution, so as to prevent them from reoccurring, keeping the beneficiary's family informed, as appropriate.

COLOMBIA

Resolution No. 18/25 (LIFTED)
PM 113-07 – Luis Fernando Quijano and eleven other persons, Colombia

The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) decided to lift these precautionary measures in favor of twelve persons identified as members of the Corporation for Peace and Social Development (CORPADES). The Commission evaluated the actions taken by the State during implementation as well as the observations of the beneficiaries' representation. Based on several requests for information, the Commission understands that the circumstances for which the precautionary measures were granted have changed significantly. In this regard, taking into account the nature of the precautionary measures mechanism and in light of the information available, the Commission considered that it did not have the elements to find that the requirements of Article 25 of its Rules of Procedure were met. Consequently, the IACHR decided to lift these precautionary measures.

Resolution No. 19/25 (LIFTED)
PM 693-03 – Members of councils and reservations of the Pijao indigenous people in the department of Tolima, Colombia

The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) decides to lift these precautionary measures in favor of members of 15 cabildos and reservations (resguardos) of the Pijao indigenous people in the department of Tolima, Colombia. Upon receiving a request to lift the measures submitted by the State, the Commission assessed the actions taken by the State during the implementation, as well as the lack of concrete, current, and specific events against the beneficiaries that would allow it to identify a situation of serious and imminent risk. Taking into account the nature of precautionary measures and in light of the information available, the Commission considered that it is currently not possible to establish a situation that presents a risk under the terms of Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure. Consequently, the IACHR decided to lift the measures.

PM 833-24 – Adolescent S.J.C.A., Colombia

The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) decided to lift these precautionary measures in favor of the adolescent S.J.C.A. with respect to Colombia. At the time of making the decision, the Commission considered the State's request to lift and the observations provided by the representation. The Commission warned that the location of the beneficiary represents a significant change in the factual circumstances. Consequently, the IACHR decided to lift these precautionary measures.

Resolution No. 24/25 (LIFTED)
PM 110-99 – Edgar Quiroga, Gildardo Fuentes, and other persons, Colombia

The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) decides to lift these precautionary measures in favor of Edgar Quiroga, Gildardo Fuentes et al., in Colombia. At the time of making the decision, the Commission assessed the actions taken by the State during implementation, as well as the lack of events that put the beneficiaries at risk since 2022. Upon not identifying compliance with the procedural requirements, the IACHR has decided to lift these precautionary measures.

Resolution No. 29/25 (LIFTED)
PM 1-01 – ECOPETROL employees who are also members of the Oil Industry Workers' Union (USO), Colombia

The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) has decided to lift the precautionary measures in favor of ECOPETROL employees in Colombia who are also members of the Oil Industry Workers' Union (Unión Sindical Obrera de la Industria del Petróleo, USO). At the time of making the decision, the Commission evaluated the actions taken by the State during implementation as well as the observations of the beneficiaries' representation. Despite several requests for information, the representation has not provided a response since 2021. In this regard, taking into account the nature of the precautionary measures mechanism and in light of the information available, the Commission considered that it does not have the elements to find that the requirements of Article 25 of its Rules of Procedure were met. Consequently, the IACHR decided to lift these measures.

Resolution No. 49/25 (GRANTED)
PM 262-24 - Dumar Eliecer Blanco Ruiz, Colombia

On July 21, 2025, the IACHR granted precautionary measures on behalf of Dumar Eliecer Blanco Ruiz, after considering that he is in a serious and urgent situation, given that his rights to life and personal integrity are at risk of irreparable harm in Colombia. According to the request, the beneficiary had reported corruption by authorities and criminal acts by non-state armed groups in the country. Consequently, it was alleged that he was the target of dangerous events attributed to non-state actors. The measures implemented by the State for his protection were also questioned. Under these circumstances, based on Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure, the Commission requested that Colombia:

a. adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life and integrity of the beneficiary;
b. implement the necessary measures so that Dumar Eliecer Blanco Ruiz can carry out his activities as a political actor or human rights defender, as appropriate, without being subjected to threats, harassment, or other acts of violence in the exercise of his work;
c. consult and agree upon the measures to be adopted with the beneficiary and his representatives; and
d. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged facts that gave rise to this resolution, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 50/25 (GRANTED)
PM 834-25 - Wendy Vanessa Quintero Guerrero, her mother and son, Colombia

On July 24, 2025, the IACHR granted precautionary measures in favor of Wendy Vanessa Quintero Guerrero, her mother, and her son in Colombia, considering that they are in a serious and urgent situation presenting a risk of irreparable harm to their rights. The applicant indicated that the beneficiary is a social leader in the Catatumbo region and that, after being temporarily detained by the ELN in January 2025 and declared a military target by that group, she has been the subject of death threats, harassment, break-ins at her home, and kidnapping attempts. She is currently displaced. The State reported on the state of internal unrest declared in the Catatumbo region, the status of investigations into the alleged events, and the security arrangements for the beneficiary. The IACHR assessed the alleged risks, as well as the inadequacy and ineffectiveness of the measures taken by the State to mitigate them.

Therefore, the IACHR, in accordance with Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure, requested that Colombia:

a. adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life and integrity of the beneficiaries;
b. implement the necessary measures, with a gender perspective, so that Wendy Vanessa Quintero Guerrero can carry out her activities as a social leader without being subjected to threats, harassment, intimidation, or other acts of violence in the exercise of her duties;
c. consult and agree upon the measures to be adopted with the beneficiaries and their representatives; and
d. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged facts that gave rise to this precautionary measure, so as to prevent them from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 58/25 (GRANTED)
PM 813-25 - Juan Camilo Castaño Gutiérrez and his mother Gloria Nancy Gutiérrez, Colombia

On August 18, 2025, the IACHR granted precautionary measures in favor of Juan Camilo Castaño Gutiérrez and his mother Gloria Nancy Gutiérrez, after considering that they are in a serious and urgent situation presenting a risk of irreparable harm to their rights in Colombia. The request alleged that Juan Camilo Castaño Gutiérrez has been missing since March 25, 2025, after being intercepted by four armed men who approached him and took him away to an unknown destination in Colombia. Since then, the beneficiary's mother has been subjected to threats and extortion by members of a criminal group while attempting to locate him. Despite the complaints filed, his whereabouts remain unknown to date. The Commission took into account the facts alleged in light of the context and assessed the actions taken by the State in this case. However, it noted with concern the lack of information on progress in the search for Juan Camilo Castaño Gutiérrez. Nor was there any evidence that protective measures had been implemented on behalf of Juan Camilo Castaño Gutiérrez's mother. Therefore, in accordance with Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure, the IACHR requested that Colombia:

a. take the necessary measures to determine the situation and whereabouts of Juan Camilo Castaño Gutiérrez, in order to protect his rights to life and personal integrity;
b. implement the necessary measures to protect Gloria Nancy Gutiérrez from threats, extortion, or other acts of violence while she continues to denounce and search for her son;
c. consult and agree upon the measures to be implemented with Gloria Nancy Gutiérrez and her representatives; and
d. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged facts that gave rise to this resolution, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 60/25 (LIFTED)
PM 402-23 - E.R.L., Colombia

The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) decides to lift these precautionary measures in favor of E.R.L. in Colombia. At the time of making the decision, the Commission evaluated the actions taken by the State during implementation as well as the observations of the beneficiaries' representation. In 2025, the parties confirmed the beneficiary's death in December 2024. As a result of his death, the Commission considered that the measures had been left without the person under protection, so it decided to lift the precautionary measures.

Resolution No. 73/25 (GRANTED)
PM 516-25 - Juan Pablo Galvis Arango, Colombia

On October 10, 2025, the IACHR granted precautionary measures on behalf of Juan Pablo Galvis Arango, after considering that he is in a serious and urgent situation, given that his rights to life and personal integrity are at risk of irreparable harm in Colombia. According to the request, the beneficiary is at risk because of his work as a human rights defender. To date, he does not have effective and sufficient protection measures from the State. Under these circumstances, based on Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure, the Commission requests that Colombia:

a. adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life and integrity of Juan Pablo Galvis Arango;
b. implement the necessary measures so that the beneficiary can carry out his activities as a human rights defender without being subjected to threats, harassment, or other acts of violence in the exercise of his work;
c. consult and agree upon the measures to be adopted with the beneficiary and his representatives; and
d. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged facts that gave rise to this resolution, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 78/25 (GRANTED)
PM 673-25 - Moisés Elías Payares Bolaño, his immediate family, and Jesús David Brun Gazabon, Colombia

On November 16, 2025, the IACHR granted precautionary measures to Moisés Elías Payares Bolaño, his immediate family, and Jesús David Brun Gazabon, after determining that they are in a serious and urgent situation, given that their rights to life and personal integrity are at risk of irreparable harm in Colombia. According to the request, the beneficiaries are the target of threats attributed to illegal armed groups, which originated after they were publicly linked to criminal organizations in a military operation on November 19, 2024, at Finca El Paraíso, where they live and work. In the absence of adequate state protection measures, they were forced to flee. The State reported that preventive measures have been implemented by the police and that the request for a risk analysis by the UNP is still under review. It also indicated that it has no knowledge of any open investigations into the reported threats. The IACHR observed that the farm continues to be the target of armed incursions and that the beneficiaries remain displaced, as well as the inadequacy of preventive measures to repel such events and the delay in comprehensively assessing the situation reported. Under these circumstances, based on Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure, the Commission requests that Colombia:

a. adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life and integrity of the beneficiaries;

b. consult and agree upon the measures to be implemented with the beneficiaries and their representatives; and

c. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged events that led to the adoption of this precautionary measure, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 80/25 (GRANTED)
PM 1314-25 - Andrés Felipe Hio Paniagua and Didier Alexander Villegas Soto, Colombia

On November 16, 2025, the IACHR granted precautionary measures on behalf of Andrés Felipe Hio Paniagua and Didier Alexander Villegas Soto, who are in a serious and urgent situation of irreparable harm to their rights in Colombia.

According to the request, the beneficiaries are members of the Ad Gentes Missionary Priestly Fraternity and the International Defense Corporation CORPAZ. They are at risk due to their work as human rights defenders in territories affected by the presence of criminal groups and due to the exercise of their pastoral duties as bishops. The State reported that the respective risk level studies have been carried out and are ongoing. Although it was indicated that the beneficiaries have security measures implemented by the UNP and the National Police, the schemes implemented would operate as provisional measures, derived from a court order. In this regard, it is alleged that these security measures are ineffective, as they have restricted their movements and affected their ability to carry out their work in the territory.

Under these circumstances, based on Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure, the Commission requests that Colombia:

a. adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life and integrity of Andrés Felipe Hio Paniagua and Didier Alexander Villegas Soto;

b. implement the necessary measures so that the beneficiaries can carry out their pastoral and human rights defense work without being subjected to threats, harassment, or other acts of violence;

c. consult and agree upon the measures to be adopted with the beneficiaries and their representatives; and

d. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged events that led to the adoption of this precautionary measure, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 89/25 (GRANTED)
PM 548-25 - L. E. C. V., J. E. M., and D. F. P. M., members of CONPAZCOL, Colombia

On November 30, 2025, the IACHR granted precautionary measures to L.E.C.V., J.E.M., and D.F.P.M., members of the board of directors of the Association of Afro-descendant, Indigenous, and Peasant Communities Building Peace in Colombia (CONPAZCOL), who are in a serious and urgent situation, as their rights to life and personal integrity are at risk of irreparable harm in Colombia. According to the request, the beneficiaries are at risk because of their work as human rights defenders in rural and urban areas affected by armed conflict. As a result, they have been the target of multiple threats against them so far in 2025, such as threats, surveillance, harassment, and acts of armed violence against them, which have not ceased over time . The State reported on the implementation of self-protection and preventive measures, such as courses, patrols, and educational campaigns. The Commission notes that the continuity and seriousness of the events that have affected the beneficiaries demonstrate the persistence of the risks and methods used by non-state actors to prevent them from carrying out their work in defense of human rights. The protection measures currently in place are not adequate to address the risks to which one of the beneficiaries is exposed. Likewise, the other two beneficiaries do not have any state protection measures in place.

Under these circumstances, based on Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure, the Commission requests that Colombia:

a. take the necessary measures to protect the rights to life and integrity of the beneficiaries;

b. implement the relevant measures so that the beneficiaries can carry out their work as human rights defenders without being subjected to threats, harassment, or other acts of violence in the exercise of their duties;

c. consult and agree upon the measures to be adopted with the beneficiaries and their representatives; and

d. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged facts that gave rise to this resolution, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 98/25 (LIFTED)
PM 175-18 - Giomar Patricia Riveros Gaitán, Colombia

The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) decides to lift these precautionary measures in favor of Giomar Patricia Riveros Gaitán in Colombia. At the time of making the decision, the Commission assessed the actions taken by the State during implementation, and the change in the factual circumstances assessed in 2018, as well as the absence of events that would be sufficient to continue to find a situation presenting a risk under the terms of Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure. Consequently, the IACHR decided to lift these measures.

COSTA RICA

Resolution No. 68/25 (LIFTED)
PM 330-24 - Reinaldo Picado Miranda, Costa Rica

The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) decides to lift these precautionary measures in favor of Reinaldo Picado Miranda in Costa Rica. At the time of making the decision, the Commission assessed the actions taken by the State to comply with these precautionary measures, which include a change in the beneficiary's legal and material situation. Consequently, upon analyzing the information available to the parties and not identifying compliance with the requirements set forth in Article 25 of its Rules of Procedure, the IACHR has decided to lift these measures.

CUBA

Resolution No. 9/25 (GRANTED)
PM 393-24 - Luis Wilber Aguilar Bravo Rivera and his family, Cuba

On January 30, 2025, the IACHR granted precautionary measures in favor of Luis Wilber Aguilar Bravo Rivera and his family, upon considering that he is at serious and urgent risk of irreparable harm to his rights in Cuba. According to the request, the beneficiary is the father of Walnier Luis Aguilar Rivera, a person with a disability who is deprived of liberty and a beneficiary of precautionary measures. Since his son's detention, the beneficiary has been protesting and filing complaints regarding human rights violations against political prisoners in Cuba. Due to this, since 2022, the beneficiary has been subjected to constant surveillance by state agents. He has also been subjected to repeated detentions, during which there have been reports of episodes of isolation from his family, inadequate detention conditions, such as lack of access to water and food, and repeated threats by state agents. The frequency and incidence of events intensified from 2024, including restrictions on freedom of movement and freedom of expression. Consequently, under the terms of Article 25 of its Rules of Procedure, it requested that Cuba:

a. adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life and personal integrity of the beneficiaries;

b. implement the necessary measures to enable them to carry out their human rights activities without being subjected to threats, harassment, or acts of violence;

c. consult and agree upon the measures to be adopted with the beneficiaries and their representatives; and

d. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged facts that gave rise to this resolution, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 28/25 (GRANTED)
PM 671-23 - Mario Alberto Hernández Leyva, Cuba

On March 27, 2025, the IACHR granted precautionary measures in favor of Mario Alberto Hernández Leyva, considering that he is in a serious and urgent situation presenting a risk of irreparable harm to his rights in Cuba. According to the request, the beneficiary is the vice-president of the Opposition Movement for a New Republic (MONR) and promoter of the citizens' campaign Cuba Decide. Since 2023, he has been subjected to repeated detentions, during which episodes of incommunicado detention, beatings, inclusion in punishment cells and restriction of rights and benefits, such as visits and contact with the outside world, have been reported. This situation, added to the lack of adequate medical attention, and the mental health problems that he is already facing, reflect that he would be in a situation of lack of protection against the risk events that he is facing.

Given the lack of response from the State, the Commission has no elements to assess the actions that have been purportedly initiated in his favor.

Consequently, under the terms of Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure, it requested that Cuba:

a. adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life and personal integrity of the beneficiary;
b. take the necessary measures so that his detention conditions comply with applicable international standards. In particular, ensuring that the corresponding medical diagnoses are made, as well as the definition of his medical treatment;
c. consult and agree upon the measures to be adopted with the beneficiary and his representatives; and
d. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged events that gave rise to this resolution, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 54/25 (LIFTED)
PM 799-20 - Maikel Herrera Bones, Cuba

The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) decides to lift these precautionary measures in favor of Maikel Herrera Bones in Cuba. On December 8, 2024, the representatives reported that the beneficiary had died due to lack of adequate medical care. Consequently, the Commission expressed its regret over the occurrence, observing that the protection measures are ineffective in the absence of the person they were intended to safeguard. It has therefore decided to lift these measures.

Resolution No. 71/25 (GRANTED)
PM 1303-25 - Juan Enrique Pérez Sánchez, Cuba

On October 4, 2025, the IACHR granted precautionary measures to Juan Enrique Pérez Sánchez, after considering that he is in a serious and urgent situation, given that his rights to life, personal integrity, and health are at risk of suffering irreparable harm in Cuba.

According to the request, the beneficiary has been deprived of his liberty since 2021 and is at risk due to a fever and possible tuberculosis, among other medical conditions, which are not being treated. In particular, it is alleged that the State has used the denial of medical treatment and access to medication as a form of punishment and has also prevented the verification of injuries and physical assaults. For its part, the State did not provide information to the IACHR.

Under these circumstances, based on Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure, the Commission requests that Cuba:

a. adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life, personal integrity, and health of Juan Enrique Pérez Sánchez;
b. implement the necessary measures so that his detention conditions comply with applicable international standards;
c. immediately carry out a comprehensive medical assessment of his health status, and guarantee adequate health care through the precise definition of medical treatment, timely access to the required medications, and the medical information that occurs;
d. consult and agree upon the measures to be adopted with the beneficiary and his representatives;
e. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged facts that led to the adoption of this resolution, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 75/25 (LIFTED)
PM 218-11 - Yris Tamara Pérez Aguilera, Cuba

The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) decides to lift these precautionary measures in favor of Yris Tamara Pérez Aguilera in Cuba. Despite several requests for information, the IACHR has not received a response from the representation since 2013. The State did not respond to the requests. Upon not identifying compliance with the requirements set forth in Article 25 of its Rules of Procedure, and given that 12 years have elapsed without information from the beneficiary, the IACHR has decided to lift these precautionary measures.

Resolution No. 94/25 (LIFTED)
PM 350-12, 420-12 y 34-13 - Yoani María Sánchez Cordero, Antonio G. Rodiles, and "X", Cuba

The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) decides to lift the precautionary measures in favor of Yoani María Sánchez Cordero, Antonio G. Rodiles, and "X" regarding Cuba. The IACHR identified that the State of Cuba did not comply with its duty to provide information to this body. However, the representation did not respond during the time the precautionary measures were in force, which would have allowed this Commission to consider the requirements of Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure to have been met. Consequently, the IACHR has decided to lift these precautionary measures.

ECUADOR

Resolution No. 13/25 (EXTENSION AND FOLLOW-UP)
PM 1581-18 – Jorge David Glas Espinel, Ecuador

On February 10, 2025, the IACHR adopted Follow-up and Extension Resolution 13/2025 in relation to the situation of Jorge Glas in Ecuador. After carrying out a follow-up visit to the beneficiary's situation in November 2024 in Ecuador, the IACHR considered that Jorge Glas's risk continues, after his detention in April 2024. It warned that his mental health is going through a state of special gravity, despite the medical care provided by the State in 2024, and that both his detention conditions and the events of violence that have occurred in the prison where he is currently, in addition to the detention conditions, are allegedly impacting the deterioration of the mental health of the beneficiary, and could impact his physical integrity. Having analyzed the submissions of fact and law, in accordance with Article 25 of its Rules of Procedure, the Commission concluded that the situation of Mr. Jorge David Glas Espinel in Ecuador remains in force and decided:

a. Continue to follow up on the situation of Jorge David Glas Espinel.

b. In light of the assessments made in this resolution, extend the scope of the precautionary measures in force to include the beneficiary's right to health. Consequently, the State of Ecuador is requested to adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life, personal integrity, and health of Jorge David Glas Espinel. In particular, assessing and implementing those most appropriate to his personal circumstances, and that allow for the creation of conditions that ensure and respect his rights, and compliance with the extension of the precautionary measure. This must include, at least, that the State:

    i. To maintain the continuous operation of the independent Technical Table that will have the following functions: 1. to be an instance of dialogue that allows reaching scientific medical consensus in case of discrepancies; and 2. to resolve any medical discrepancies that may arise between the trusted doctors of the beneficiary of the precautionary measure and the doctors in charge of the treatment of Mr. Jorge David Glas Espinel.
    ii. In light of the available medical documentation, to carry out a complete medical evaluation immediately in a hospital center, and to draw up a protocol that, without endangering the life or personal integrity of the beneficiary, establishes the appropriate protocol for admission and discharge to a hospital center each time it is necessary to carry out hospital treatment that cannot be provided in the detention center or to attend a physical or mental health emergency of Mr. Jorge David Glas Espinel.

c. Following the medical evaluation and the recommended treatment, the State must act with absolute diligence and take into account the scientific evaluations of the Technical Table and ensure that the conditions of detention, whether they occur in a detention center or in a hospital center if the beneficiary is receiving hospital treatment, must be compatible with the applicable international standards in the matter, including:

    i. Mr. Jorge David Glas Espinel is immediately transferred to a detention center other than the Guayas No. 3 Detention Center (CPL).

    ii. That the new detention center has at least the following characteristics and conditions of detention:
        - An adapted cell without objects that can be used for self-injury.
        - Illuminated, ventilated, clean and not overcrowded spaces, with access to basic services.
        - Trained personnel with specialized training in mental health, suicide risk detection and psychological first aid.
        - Avoid conditions of extreme isolation, allowing safe social interactions.
        - Access to support networks, family visits, contact with lawyers and religious assistance if desired. All in private spaces.
        - Allow for the access to independent monitoring mechanisms and accredited and specialized external institutional organizations to monitor detention conditions.
        - Keep logs of the actions taken for the protection of the beneficiary, which are accessible and transparent.
        - Ensure clear intervention protocols to respond to emergencies in situations presenting a risk to the life and integrity, and care for people with suicidal intentions and/or attempts.

- Ensure the timely and regular flow of medical information from the beneficiary and visits and participation of the beneficiary's trusted doctors.
- Guarantee specific treatments for Mr. Jorge David Glas Espinel including therapies and medication. In case of discrepancy of opinion on the part of the beneficiary's trusted physicians, such discrepancies shall be known and resolved by the Independent Technical Table.
- Access to the care of psychologists, psychiatrists and social workers who must be available in order to be able to comply with the medical treatment prescribed.
- Constant monitoring through uninterrupted supervision by trained personnel, which must be documented in a transparent recording mechanism.

d. Consult and agree upon the measures to be adopted with the beneficiary and his representatives, in accordance with the assessments and scope delimited in this resolution. In particular, strengthen the existing internal consultation mechanisms, taking into account the assessments and scope delimited in this resolution; and

e. Report on the actions taken to investigate the facts that gave rise to the adoption and continuity of this precautionary measure, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring. In particular, send the IACHR periodic information on the status of the investigation into the claims of ill-treatment and torture made in the context of this matter.

Resolution No. 97/25 (GRANTED)
PM 402-25 - 26 missing persons and six female searchers within the framework of a state of emergency, Ecuador

On December 24, 2025, the IACHR granted precautionary measures to 26 missing persons and six female searchers in the context of a state of emergency in Ecuador, after considering that they are in a serious and urgent situation, given that their rights to life and personal integrity are at risk of irreparable harm in Ecuador. According to the request, the 26 proposed beneficiaries, including six adolescents, were allegedly detained by members of the Armed Forces in various operations carried out during 2024, with no official information available to date on their fate or whereabouts, despite judicial decisions and complaints filed internally. Likewise, the six women searchers are allegedly being subjected to threats and acts of intimidation. The State reported that it has internal mechanisms in place to mitigate risks and that the cases mentioned are being handled by the Attorney General's Office for the alleged crime of forced disappearance. Regarding assistance to family members, it indicated that the risk assessment did not identify a verifiable risk, without prejudice to a reassessment being carried out.

The IACHR considered that the whereabouts of the 26 disappeared persons has not been determined, nor their fate. It also identified that threats and acts of intimidation against the women searchers have continued. Under these circumstances, based on Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure, the Commission requests that Ecuador:

a. Redouble its efforts to determine the situation and whereabouts of the 26 missing persons identified in this resolution, in order to protect their rights to life and personal integrity, through a search plan with measurable results, family participation, and an age-based approach, in accordance with applicable international standards and obligations;
b. Facilitate the immediate delivery of all available information that may shed light on the fate of the proposed beneficiaries, including, but not limited to, all information required by domestic court decisions and urgent actions of the United Nations Committee on Enforced Disappearances;
c. Adopt the necessary measures, with a gender-based approach, to protect the life and integrity of the six female searchers: Lorena Jacqueline Roca Magallón, Wendy Gabriela Álvarez Chávez, the wife of Jonathan Daniel Villón Velasco, Mercí Rocío García Bajaña, Mayra Álvarez Chávez, and Jeniffer Pillajo Córdova, in accordance with applicable international standards;
d. Provide physical and mental health care to the six identified relatives of the disappeared persons, in a coordinated and voluntary manner;

e. Consult and agree upon the measures to be adopted with the relatives of the beneficiaries and their representatives; and
f. Report on the actions taken to investigate with due diligence the alleged events that led to the adoption of this precautionary measure and thus prevent such events from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 99/25 (GRANTED)
PM 197-25 - Persons deprived of liberty in the Center for the Deprivation of Liberty Guayas No. 1, Ecuador

On December 30, 2025, the IACHR granted precautionary measures to persons deprived of liberty at Guayas No. 1 Detention Center in Guayaquil, Ecuador, after determining that they are in a serious and urgent situation, given that their rights to life, personal integrity, and health are at risk of irreparable harm. According to the request, the beneficiaries are exposed to overcrowding, structural deficiencies, insufficient access to medical care, the spread of infectious diseases —particularly tuberculosis— undernutrition, and limited access to drinking water and adequate food. In addition, a significant number of deaths were reported inside the center, allegedly associated with these conditions.

The State indicated that it has taken various measures to address the situation at the center, including interagency coordination, tuberculosis control and treatment programs, the establishment of medical care areas, the transfer of prisoners with infectious diseases, and the implementation of public prison health policies. The State also reported the existence of internal judicial mechanisms, such as habeas corpus petitions and autonomous precautionary measures, to demand medical care and adequate conditions of detention.

The IACHR considered that the high number of deaths, their sustained increase, and the lack of disaggregated state information on the causes, combined with the findings of judicial visits, among other pronouncements by state entities, demonstrate the need to strengthen the measures adopted by the State. Consequently, based on Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure, it requests that Ecuador:

a. adopt the necessary and effective measures to prevent the loss of life and harm to the physical integrity of all persons deprived of liberty in CPL Guayas No. 1;

b. immediately implement the necessary measures to ensure that the detention conditions of the beneficiaries are compatible with applicable international standards in this matter, including:

    i. guaranteeing access to adequate and specialized medical care, as well as to the necessary treatments and medications, including the immediate performance of comprehensive medical screenings and evaluations in accordance with their health issues;
    ii. ensuring immediate access to quality food in sufficient quantities to meet nutritional needs, as well as sufficient and continuous access to drinking water;
    iii. taking immediate action to substantially reduce overcrowding within CPL Guayas No. 1; and
    iv. guaranteeing regular access to CPL Guayas No. 1 for legal representatives and family members;

c. consult and agree upon the measures to be adopted with the beneficiaries and their representatives by establishing an inter-institutional roundtable that reflects the urgency of the situation;

d. inform the IACHR of the actions taken to investigate the events that led to the adoption of these precautionary measures, in particular the deaths that occurred, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring; and

e. respond to the IACHR's request for consent to conduct an on-site visit to CPL Guayas No. 1 in order to verify the implementation of immediate actions under the terms of this resolution in favor of persons deprived of their liberty in that center.

EL SALVADOR

Resolution No. 66/25 (GRANTED)
PM 667-25 - Ruth Eleonora López Alfaro, El Salvador

On September 22, 2025, the IACHR granted precautionary measures in favor of Ruth Eleonora López Alfaro, after considering that she is in a serious and urgent situation of risk of irreparable harm to her rights in El Salvador. It was alleged that the human rights defender is the head of the Justice and Anti-Corruption Unit of the Cristosal Foundation. On May 18, 2025, she was deprived of her liberty and, since her admission on July 4, 2025, to the Women's Penitentiary Center, Granja de Izalco, she has been held incommunicado without contact with her family or legal representatives. Given the situation of absolute incommunicado detention, there is no certainty about her current situation or her health condition, considering her chronic illnesses. The Commission considered the alleged facts in light of the context and assessed the actions taken by the State in this matter. In this regard, the State reported that the beneficiary would receive personal hygiene kits and food provided by her family and would be integrated into general activities and programs within the prison. In addition, it indicated that it had taken measures to guarantee the beneficiary's right to health. However, it considered that the beneficiary would be deprived of her liberty under a provisional detention measure, without a defined term, and in a state of absolute isolation, without contact with her family members and legal representatives, who would have no possibility of knowing firsthand her current situation, state of health, and conditions of detention, despite the internal actions taken on her behalf. Therefore, in accordance with Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure, the State of El Salvador is requested to:

a. take the necessary measures to protect the rights to life, personal integrity, and health of Ruth Eleonora López Alfaro;
b. take the necessary measures to ensure that the beneficiary's conditions of detention comply with international standards. In particular, that the situation of prolonged incommunicado detention be immediately ended; guarantee regular contact and access with her family members, attorneys, and representatives as a means of safeguarding her rights; and, considering the exceptional nature of pretrial detention and the risk to life, personal integrity, and health assessed in this resolution, proceed to review the continuation of pretrial detention in light of applicable standards, including the possibility of alternative measures to pretrial detention;
c. agree on the measures to be adopted with the beneficiary and her representatives; and
d. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged events that gave rise to this resolution, including their relationship to her activity as a human rights defender, in order to prevent their recurrence.

Resolution No. 67/25 (GRANTED)
PM 929-25 - Salvador Enrique Anaya Barraza, El Salvador

On September 22, 2025, the IACHR granted precautionary measures on behalf of Salvador Enrique Anaya Barraza, after considering that he is in a serious and urgent situation, given that his rights to life, personal integrity, and health are at risk of irreparable harm in El Salvador.

According to the request, the beneficiary is a constitutional lawyer, professor, and critic of the current government of El Salvador. He has been deprived of his liberty since June 7, 2025, and currently remains incommunicado, with neither his family nor his lawyers aware of his conditions of detention or state of health, despite the actions taken internally. For its part, the State asserted that the beneficiary's due process rights have been ensured at all times, including his right to legal representation and health care. The Commission took into account the alleged facts in light of the context and assessed the steps taken by the State in this matter. However, it observed that the beneficiary was being deprived of his liberty under a provisional detention order with no defined term and incommunicado from his family and legal representatives, who had no way of knowing firsthand his situation, conditions of detention, or state of health, despite the internal actions taken before various judicial institutions. In addition, the Commission emphasized the enhanced protection that should be granted to him as an older adult deprived of his liberty. Therefore, based on Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure, the Commission requests that El Salvador:

a. adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life, personal integrity, and health of Salvador Enrique Anaya Barraza;

b. implement the necessary measures to ensure that the beneficiary's conditions of detention comply with international standards, in particular, immediately ending the prolonged incommunicado detention; guaranteeing regular contact and access with his family members, lawyers, and representatives as a means of safeguarding his rights, as well as providing him with the prescribed medical treatment in a timely and adequate manner; and, considering the exceptional nature of pretrial detention and the risk to life, personal integrity, and health assessed in this resolution, proceed to review the continuation of pretrial detention in light of applicable standards, including the possibility of alternative measures to pretrial detention;

c. consult and agree upon the measures to be adopted with the beneficiary and his representatives; and

d. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged events that gave rise to this resolution, including their relationship to his activity as a human rights defender, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring

PM 1101-25 - Irvin Jeovanny Quintanilla García, El Salvador

On October 2, 2025, the IACHR granted precautionary measures in favor of Irvin Jeovanny Quintanilla García, after considering that he is in a serious and urgent situation presenting a risk of irreparable harm to his rights in El Salvador. It was alleged that the beneficiary was deported on March 15, 2025, from the United States to El Salvador and that, as of that date, his whereabouts or destination were unknown. Despite the complaints filed and requests for a search by his relatives and legal representatives before the state authorities, to date there is still no information about his location and current situation. For its part, the State reported on the actions and coordination efforts to determine the beneficiary's location. It highlighted the verification of records at the General Directorate of Migration, the Attorney General's Office, the General Directorate of Penal Centers, and the National Civil Police, without finding any record in Salvadoran territory. It also referred to an investigation into the beneficiary's disappearance, in which the Attorney General's Office instructed the National Civil Police to carry out exhaustive investigations, including interviews with family members, inquiries on social media, and consultations with various institutions. The Commission appreciated the actions taken by the State through its various institutions, as well as the investigation into the beneficiary's disappearance. However, more than six months after the beneficiary's disappearance, his whereabouts remain unknown and there is no information that would allow the facts to be clarified. In accordance with Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure, the Commission requests that El Salvador:

a. adopt the immediate measures necessary to determine the situation of the beneficiary, and inform this Commission, legal representatives, and family members of his whereabouts, in order to protect his rights to life and personal integrity;
b. consult and agree upon the measures to be implemented with his representatives; and
c. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged events that led to the adoption of this precautionary measure, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 82/25 (GRANTED)
PM 1150-25, 1152-25, 1153-25 - William Alexander Martínez Ruano, José Osmin Santos Robles, and Brandon Bladimir Sigarán Cruz, El Salvador

On November 17, 2025, the IACHR granted precautionary measures to William Alexander Martínez Ruano, José Osmin Santos Robles, and Brandon Bladimir Sigarán Cruz, after considering that they are in a serious and urgent situation, given that their rights to life and personal integrity are at risk of irreparable harm in El Salvador. According to the request, the beneficiaries are Salvadoran citizens who were deported from the United States. After entering El Salvador, they were deprived of their liberty and their whereabouts were initially unknown. Currently, they remain incommunicado, with neither their families nor their lawyers having any knowledge of their conditions of detention, their legal situations, or their health conditions, despite the actions taken internally. For its part, the State emphasized its diligent efforts in the search, as the reports responding to the Commission account for the whereabouts of the beneficiaries, and considered that the requests do not comply with the IACHR Rules of Procedure. Upon analyzing the submissions of fact and law, the Commission considers that, at present, the beneficiaries are being held incommunicado from their relatives and legal representatives, who have no way of directly ascertaining their legal situations, conditions of detention, or states of health. This situation has continued despite the internal actions taken in the country before various judicial and administrative institutions.

In accordance with Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure, the Commission requests that El Salvador:

a. adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life and personal integrity of the beneficiaries;

b. clarify the legal situation of the beneficiaries. In particular, formally indicate whether the beneficiaries have been charged with any crime and/or whether they have been brought before the appropriate judicial authority;

c. implement the necessary measures to ensure that the conditions of detention of the beneficiaries comply with international standards. In particular, that the situation of prolonged incommunicado detention be ended; that regular contact and access with their families, lawyers, and representatives be guaranteed as a means of safeguarding their rights;

d. consult and agree upon the measures to be adopted with the beneficiaries and their representatives; and

e. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged facts that gave rise to this resolution, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

GUATEMALA

Resolution No. 36/25 (LIFTED)
PM 87-11 - Blanca Estela Puac Menchú and her family unit, Guatemala

The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) decides to lift these precautionary measures in favor of Blanca Estela Puac Menchú and her family unit in Guatemala. Following the State's request to lift, the Commission confirmed that the beneficiary no longer lives in Guatemala and that no incidents have been reported against her in the last three years. Upon not identifying compliance with the requirements set forth in Article 25 of its Rules of Procedure, the IACHR has decided to lift these precautionary measures.

HAITI

Resolution No. 45/25 (LIFTED)
PM 157-13 – Members of the Union of Consequent Citizens for the Respect of Human Rights (UCCRDH), Haiti

The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) decides to lift these precautionary measures in favor of the members of the Union of Consequent Citizens for the Respect of Human Rights (Union des Citoyens Conséquents pour le Respect des Droits de l'Homme, UCCRDH) regarding Haiti. At the time of making the decision, the Commission considered that, during the more than 11 years the precautionary measures had been in force, the State had not provided a response. Additionally, over 10 years had passed without any communication from the representation that would allow the Commission to determine that the requirements of Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure continued to be met. Consequently, the Commission has decided to lift these precautionary measures.

HONDURAS

Resolution No. 12/25 (GRANTED)
PM 1350-24 - Edwin Edgardo Lainez Ordoñez, Honduras

On February 2, 2025, the IACHR granted precautionary measures to Edwin Edgardo Lainez Ordoñez, whose whereabouts have remained unknown in the city of Tegucigalpa since November 13, 2024. As background, in August 2023, the beneficiary was approached by a group of individuals identified as members of a criminal organization who threatened him and demanded the payment of one million lempiras. The requesting party warned that the kidnapping could be linked to the same individuals who had previously extorted him. The Honduran State informed that the Police Directorate Against Maras, Gangs, and Organized Crime (DIPAMPCO) received a complaint from Lainez's father for alleged disappearance and deprivation of liberty. In addition, the Police Directorate of Investigations (DPI) reported having carried out different investigative actions, such as search rounds to collect information and identify security cameras, among others.

The Commission appreciated the fact that the State has taken investigative actions and that it has expressed its commitment to continue developing measures to locate him. However, it noted that despite the time that has elapsed and the complaints filed, there is no official information regarding the place and conditions in which Edwin Edgardo Lainez Ordoñez is. Similarly, the latest communication from the State does not indicate any progress or results in the investigations carried out by the competent authorities. After analyzing the available information, the IACHR, in accordance with Article 25 of its Rules of Procedure, requested that Honduras.

a. adopt the necessary measures to determine the whereabouts or fate of Edwin Edgardo Lainez Ordoñez, in order to protect his rights to life and personal integrity;

b. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged events that led to the adoption of this precautionary measure, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring; and

c. ensure that the family of Mr. Lainez Ordoñez is kept duly informed of the measures adopted and the progress of the investigation.

Resolution No. 37/25 (EXTENSION, FOLLOW-UP, AND PARTIAL LIFT)
PM 137-23 - Identified members of the Comité Municipal de Defensa de los Bienes Comunes y Públicos de Tocoa and Bufete Justicia para los Pueblos, Honduras

On May 1, 2025, the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) decided to issue Resolution of Follow-up, Extension, and Partial Lift 37/2025, regarding precautionary measures 137-23 in favor of members of the Municipal Committee for the Defense of the Common and Public Goods of Tocoa (C*omité Municipal de Defensa de los Bienes Comunes y Públicos de Tocoa,* CMDBCPT) and the law firm Justice for the People (Bufete Justicia para los Pueblos) in Honduras.

In the resolution, the IACHR decided to maintain the precautionary measures, lift them with respect to Juan López after his murder in September 2024, and extend them in favor of 13 defenders and/or members of the Committee and family members of Juan López, due to the serious and urgent risk as a result of their activities in defense of the environment in the context of mining projects in the Bajo Aguán region, as well as the search for justice after the murder of Juan López.

Consequently, pursuant to Article 25 of its Rules of Procedure, the Commission decided as follows:

a. Keep the precautionary measures granted in favor of Juana Ramona Zu´niga Marti´nez, Gabriela Ofelia Sorto Cruz, David Lemus, J.M., D.M., Olayo Me´ndez, Juana Esquivel, A.C., D.S., Esly Emperatriz Banegas A´vila, Rita Isabel Romero, Aida Rodri´guez, Mario Lo´pez, Gregorio Va´squez, Ernesto Lo´pez, Dinora Castro, A.A., Jose´ Abelino Cedillo, Reynaldo Domi´nguez, Eugenio Esquivel, J.S.H., O.H, Jose´ Daniel Ma´rquez, Marco Tulio Ramos, Kelvin Romero, Porfirio Sorto, Edy Alexander Ta´bora Gonzales, Kenia Oliva, and Carlos Jime´nez;

b. c. Lift the precautionary measures granted to Juan Antonio López;
d. Strengthen the implementation of measures to protect beneficiaries and assess the situations that place them at risk, as soon as possible, with a view to adopting appropriate and effective measures to protect their lives and personal integrity;
e. Strengthen the presence of state institutions in the area within the framework of environmental and disarmament policies as part of the measures to be implemented to mitigate the risk to beneficiaries; and
f. Investigate with due diligence the alleged acts of risk and thus prevent impunity and the repetition of such acts, in particular the murder of human rights defender Juan Antonio López.

Resolution No. 55/25 (LIFTED)
PM 688-16 - Érick Pérez et al., Honduras

The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) decides to lift the precautionary measures in favor of Érick Pérez et al., in Honduras. Following the State's request to lift the measures, the Commission assessed the actions taken to implement the precautionary measures. The Commission also considered the extended period without facts that indicate an ongoing situation which places the beneficiaries at imminent risk. Upon not identifying compliance with the requirements set forth in Article 25 of its Rules of Procedure, the IACHR has decided to lift these precautionary measures.

MEXICO

Resolution No. 17/25 (LIFTED)
PM 13-15 – Norma Mesino Mesino and ten identified members of her family, Mexico

The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) decided to lift these precautionary measures in favor of Norma Mesino Mesino and ten members of her family, in Mexico. At the time of making the decision, the Commission assessed the actions taken by the State during the implementation and the lack of concrete, current and specific events against the beneficiaries that allow identifying a situation posing a serious and imminent risk. Taking into account the nature of precautionary measures and in light of the information available, the Commission considered that it is currently not possible to establish a situation presenting a risk under the terms of Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure. Consequently, the IACHR decided to lift the measures.

Resolution No. 30/25 (LIFTED)
PM 448-10 – Víctor Ayala Tapia, Mexico

The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) has decided to lift these precautionary measures in favor of Víctor Ayala Tapia, in Mexico. At the time of making the decision, the Commission assessed the actions taken by the State during implementation as well as the observations presented by the beneficiaries' representation. Taking into account the nature of the precautionary measures and in light of the information available, the Commission considered that it is not possible to establish a situation of risk under the terms of Article 25 of its Rules of Procedure at this time. Upon not identifying compliance with the procedural requirements, the IACHR has decided to lift these precautionary measures.

Resolution No. 34/25 (LIFTED)
PM 917-20 – José Ángel Peñaloza Hernández et al., Mexico

The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) decides to lift these precautionary measures in favor of Franco Peñaloza Hernández, Yazmín Yareli Sánchez, José Ángel Peñaloza Hernández, and Paulina

Lemus Hernández, in Mexico. At the time of making the decision, the Commission assessed the actions taken by the State during the implementation, as well as the lack of information from the representation. Taking into account the nature of the precautionary measures and in light of the information available, the Commission considered that it is not possible to establish a situation presenting a risk under the terms of Article 25 of its Rules of Procedure at this time. Upon not identifying compliance with the procedural requirements, the IACHR has decided to lift these precautionary measures.

PM 251-15 - "Alejandro" and his family unit, Mexico

The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) decides to lift these precautionary measures in favor of "Alejandro" and his identified family unit, in Mexico. At the time of making the decision, the Commission assessed the actions taken by the State during the implementation and the lack of concrete, current, and specific events against the beneficiaries that would allow it to identify a situation of serious and imminent risk. Taking into account the nature of precautionary measures and in light of the information available, the Commission considered that it is currently not possible to establish a situation presenting a risk under the terms of Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure. Consequently, the IACHR decided to lift the measures.

Resolution No. 42/25 (LIFTED)
PM 250-09 - José Alejandro Solalinde Guerra and Members of the "Hermanos en el Camino" Migrant Shelter of Ixtepec, Mexico

The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) decides to lift these precautionary measures in favor of José Alejandro Solalinde Guerra and members of the "Hermanos en el Camino" Migrant Shelter in Ixtepec, Oaxaca, Mexico. At the time of making the decision, the Commission assessed the actions taken by the State during their implementation. It was also noted that, regarding the main beneficiary, no information has been available that would support the identification of a situation presenting an imminent risk under Article 25 of its Rules of Procedure, since 2017. Consequently, the IACHR decided to lift the measures.

Resolution No. 84/25 (LIFTED)
PM 77-15 - Esperanza Hernández, defender "K", and their family units, Mexico

The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) decides to issue this Resolution to lift the precautionary measures in the terms of Article 25 of its Rules of Procedure. Having analyzed the available information, the Commission does not have sufficient elements to continue to comply with the procedural requirements. Consequently, the Commission decided to lift this matter and remind the State of its international obligations under the terms of Article 1 (1) of the American Convention.

Resolution No. 87/25 (LIFTED)
PM 388-12 - Edgar Ismael Solorio Solís and thirteen other persons, Mexico

The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) decides to lift these precautionary measures in favor of Edgar Ismael Solorio Solís et al., in Mexico. At the time of making the decision, the Commission assessed the actions taken by the State during the implementation and the lack of concrete, current, and specific events against the beneficiaries that allow a situation posing a serious and imminent risk to be identified. Taking into account the nature of precautionary measures and in light of the information available, the Commission considered that it is currently not possible to establish a situation presenting a risk under the terms of Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure. Consequently, the IACHR decided to lift the measures.

Resolution No. 92/25 (GRANTED)
PM 1514-25 - Ana Amelí García Gámez, Mexico

On December 12, 2025, the IACHR granted precautionary measures in favor of Ana Amelí García Gámez, after considering that she is in a serious and urgent situation presenting a risk of irreparable harm to her rights in Mexico. It was alleged that on July 12, 2025, the beneficiary, aged 20, left for a walk in the Cumbres del Ajusco National Park, located in the Tlalpan borough, in Mexico City (CDMX). Since that date, her whereabouts have been unknown, and her relatives have raised a series of questions and criticisms about the procedures and actions of the state authorities with regard to the search and investigation of the beneficiary's situation, including the lack of solid lines of investigation and the lack of substantive progress in locating her. In addition, They refered to the State's failure to comply with the recommendations issued by the United Nations Committee on Enforced Disappearances through Urgent Action No. 2133/2025. Despite the complaints filed and the proceedings carried out, her whereabouts remain unknown to date. For its part, the State reported on the search efforts and actions being carried out by its various institutions, as well as the lines of investigation opened into the alleged events. It highlighted the implementation of a search plan by the Mexico City Commission for the Search for Persons with a gender perspective. It also reported that it was carrying out follow-up activities, meetings, and working groups, as well as coordination between different state institutions, in order to continue agreeing on the necessary steps to locate the proposed beneficiary. The Commission assessed the actions implemented by the State through its various institutions, as well as the investigation opened into the disappearance of the beneficiary. However, almost five months after the beneficiary's disappearance, her whereabouts remain unknown and there is no information available to help clarify the facts. In accordance with Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure, the Commission requests that Mexico:

a. redouble its efforts to determine the situation and whereabouts of Ana Amelí García Gámez, in order to protect her rights to life and personal integrity;

b. ensure that the comprehensive search plan considers differentiated measures due to gender, and respond to the recommendations issued by the UN Committee on Enforced Disappearances and the questions raised by the family; and, as appropriate, provide the relatives with an explanation for their inclusion or dismissal in the actions to be implemented;

c. continue to promote smooth and periodic channels of communication with relatives and their representatives on the progress made with respect to the comprehensive search plan and on the open lines of investigation, indicating the reasons for the inclusion or dismissal of the hypothesis of possible state participation in the events reported, and provide information on new proceedings; and

d. update on the actions taken to investigate the alleged events that led to the adoption of this resolution, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 95/25 (EXTENSION, FOLLOW-UP, AND PARTIAL LIFT)
PM 990-21 - Vicente Iván Suástegui Muñoz and his family, Mexico

On December 20, 2025, the IACHR adopted Follow-up, Extension, and Partial Lifting Resolution No. 95/2025 regarding the situation of Vicente Iván Suástegui Muñoz and family in Mexico (PM-990-21). The IACHR considered that the situation of risk noted in relation to Vicente Iván Suástegui Muñoz, following his disappearance on August 5, 2021, as well as in relation to his family members, continues. It also considered that the family members of Samantha Colón, Vicente Iván Suástegui Muñoz's partner, share the situation of risk, and therefore extended the measures in their favor. Finally, the Commission lifted the measures in relation to Marco Antonio Suástegui Muñoz, following his murder in April 2025. The IACHR positively assessed the search and investigation actions carried out by the State in relation to Vicente Iván Suástegui Muñoz, as well as the implementation of various protection and support measures for his beneficiary family members. Under the terms of Article 25 of its Rules of Procedure, the Commission requested that Mexico:

a. To maintain the precautionary measures granted to all the persons indicated in Resolution No. 93/2025 of November 23, 2021;

b. Strengthen the search actions and investigations, as well as advance the judicial processes regarding the disappearance of Vicente Iván Suástegui Muñoz;

c. Strengthen the protection measures in relation to Samantha Valeria Colón Morales;

d. Extend the precautionary measures in favor of Faustino Colón Delgado, Ignacia Morales Salmerón, Sandra Paola Téllez Colón; J.A.S.T. and P.M.T.C., as relatives of Samantha Valeria Colón Morales;

e. Lift the precautionary measures granted in favor of Marco Antonio Suástegui Muñoz;

f. Investigate alleged acts of risk with due diligence in order to prevent impunity and the repetition of such acts, in particular the murder of Marco Antonio Suástegui Muñoz.

NICARAGUA

Resolution No. 4/25 (GRANTED)
PM 1436-24 - Angélica Patricia Chavarría Altamirano, Nicaragua

On January 10, 2025, the IACHR granted precautionary measures in favor of Angélica Patricia Chavarría Altamirano, after considering that she is in a serious and urgent situation presenting a risk of irreparable harm to her rights in Nicaragua. It was alleged that the beneficiary's whereabouts have remained unknown as from her detention on May 19, 2024. It was alleged that police officers detained her and her partner, under house arrest, without the possibility of communicating. After the latter's death in September 2024, her relatives have not been able to find her whereabouts or fate in Nicaragua. The state authorities have not provided official information about her whereabouts or her current state. The Commission also assessed that the State did not provide any information regarding the measures adopted to mitigate the beneficiary's risk or regarding the actions taken to determine her whereabouts. Pursuant to Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure, the Commission requests that Nicaragua:

a. adopt the necessary measures to determine the situation and whereabouts of the beneficiary, in order to protect her rights to life and personal integrity;

b. detail if the beneficiary is in the custody of the State, the circumstances, and conditions of her detention. In particular, report on the place of her detention, and allow access to her legal representatives and family, as well as the necessary health care; and

c. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged events that led to the adoption of this resolution, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

PM 117-25 – Julio Antonio Quintana Carvajal, Nicaragua

On February 18, 2025, the IACHR granted precautionary measures in favor of Julio Antonio Quintana Carvajal, after considering that he is in a serious and urgent situation presenting a risk of irreparable harm to his rights in Nicaragua. It was alleged that the beneficiary's whereabouts are unknown. On November 26, 2024, during a police operation, he was detained by police officers at his home. Since his detention, his whereabouts have not been known nor has he had contact with persons close to him. The state authorities have also not provided official information about his whereabouts or his current state. The Commission also assessed that the State did not provide any information regarding the measures adopted to mitigate the beneficiary's risk or regarding the actions taken to determine his whereabouts. Pursuant to Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure, the Commission requested that Nicaragua:

a. adopt the necessary measures to determine the situation and whereabouts of the beneficiary, in order to protect his rights to life and personal integrity;

b. detail whether the beneficiary is in the custody of the State, and if so, specify by what legal authority, and the circumstances and conditions of his detention. In particular, report on the place of his detention, and allow access to his legal representatives and family, as well as the necessary health care; and

c. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged events that led to the adoption of this resolution, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

PM 1214-24 – Jhon Fernando Paladines Rubio, Nicaragua

The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) has decided to lift the precautionary measures in favor of Jhon Fernando Paladines Rubio in Nicaragua. Following the request to lift presented by the representation, the Commission confirmed that to date, the beneficiary's situation has changed significantly, and he is currently living abroad. Upon not identifying compliance with the requirements set forth in Article 25 of its Rules of Procedure, the IACHR has decided to lift these precautionary measures.

Resolution No. 26/25 (GRANTED)
PM 222-25 – José Alejandro Hurtado Díaz, Nicaragua

On March 14, 2025, the IACHR granted precautionary measures in favor of José Alejandro Hurtado Díaz, after considering that he is in a serious and urgent situation presenting a risk of irreparable harm to his rights in Nicaragua. It was alleged that the beneficiary's whereabouts are unknown. On January 27, 2025, he was detained by police officers at his home. Since his detention, his whereabouts have not been known nor has he had contact with persons close to him. The state authorities have also not provided official information about his whereabouts or his current state. The Commission also assessed that the State did not provide any information regarding the measures adopted to mitigate the beneficiary's risk or regarding the actions taken to determine his whereabouts. Pursuant to Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure, the Commission requests that Nicaragua:

a. adopt the necessary measures to determine the situation and whereabouts of the beneficiary, in order to protect his rights to life and personal integrity;
b. indicate whether the beneficiary is in the custody of the State, and if so, specify whether he has been charged with an offence and/or taken before a court of appropriate jurisdiction;
c. clarify the circumstances and conditions of his detention, including the place of his detention, and if he has access to his legal representatives and family, as well as the necessary health care; and
d. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged events that led to the adoption of this resolution, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 33/25 (GRANTED)
PM 252-25 – Douglas Gamaliel Pérez Centeno, Nicaragua

On April 6, 2025, the IACHR granted precautionary measures in favor of Douglas Gamaliel Pérez Centeno, after considering that he is in a serious and urgent situation presenting a risk of irreparable harm to his rights in Nicaragua. It was alleged that the beneficiary was extradited from Costa Rica on February 16, 2025, and since then has been detained by Nicaraguan state authorities. Since then, his next of kin reportedly do not have precise information on his place of detention, conditions of detention, and current status, despite the steps and actions taken with the State authorities. The Commission also found that the State did not provide official information on the current situation of the proposed beneficiary, including his current location and conditions of detention, or information on the measures adopted to address the beneficiary's risk situation. In accordance with Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure, the Commission requested that Nicaragua:

a. adopt the necessary measures to protect his rights to life and personal integrity. In particular, clarifying where he is being held in Nicaragua or his legal situation following his extradition to the country;
b. specify whether, since his extradition from Costa Rica, he has been brought before the appropriate judicial authority, and if not, indicate the reasons for his detention without judicial review. Likewise, to report on his conditions of deprivation of liberty, including the procedural stage of the criminal case against him, and whether he has access to his legal representatives and family members, as well as the necessary health care; and

c. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged facts that gave rise to this resolution, so as to prevent them from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 46/25 (GRANTED)
PM 755-25 - Aníbal Martín Rivas Reed, Nicaragua

On June 24, 2025, the IACHR granted precautionary measures for the benefit of Aníbal Martín Rivas Reed, after considering that he is in a serious and urgent situation, given that his rights to life and personal integrity are at risk of irreparable harm in Nicaragua.

According to the request, the beneficiary was detained at his home on May 17, 2025, by police officers. Since that date, his next of kin and relatives have no knowledge of his whereabouts or fate in Nicaragua. For its part, the State did not provide information to the IACHR. Under these circumstances, based on Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure, the Commission requests that Nicaragua:

a. adopt the necessary measures to determine the situation and whereabouts of the beneficiary, in order to protect his rights to life and personal integrity;
b. state whether the beneficiary is in the custody of the State, and if so, specify whether he has been charged with an offence and/or taken before a court of appropriate jurisdiction;
c. clarify the circumstances and conditions of his detention, including the place of his detention, and if he has access to his legal representatives and family, as well as the necessary health care; and
d. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged events that led to the adoption of this resolution, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 65/25 (GRANTED)
PM 1230-25 - Armando José Bermúdez Mojica et al., Nicaragua

On September 16, 2025, the IACHR granted precautionary measures to Armando José Bermúdez Mojica, Olga María Lara Rojas, Pedro José López Calero, Jessica María Palacios Vargas, and Rudy Antonio Palacios Vargas, after determining that they were in a serious and urgent situation, given that their rights to life and personal integrity were at risk of irreparable harm in Nicaragua. According to the request, the beneficiaries were detained at their homes on July 17, 2025, by agents of the Special Operations Directorate of the National Police (DOEP) in Jinotepe, Carazo, as possible retaliation for belonging to a family that opposes and criticizes the Nicaraguan government. Since then, their relatives and close friends claim to have no information about their whereabouts or fate. For its part, the State has not provided any information to the IACHR. In these circumstances, and based on Article 25 of its Rules of Procedure, the Commission requests that Nicaragua:

a. adopt the necessary measures to determine the situation and whereabouts of Armando José Bermúdez Mojica, Olga María Lara Rojas, Pedro José López Calero, Jessica María Palacios Vargas, and Rudy Antonio Palacios Vargas in order to protect their rights to life and personal integrity;
b. formally indicate whether the beneficiaries have been charged with a crime and/or have been brought before the appropriate judicial authority; and if not, clarify the reason for their detention without charge and judicial supervision;
c. clarify the circumstances and conditions of their detention, including the place of their detention, and whether they have access to their legal representatives and family, as well as the necessary health care; and
d. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged facts that led to the adoption of this resolution, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 74/25 (GRANTED)
PM 1326-25, 1372-25 - Álvaro Antonio Baltodano Cantarero and nine other persons, Nicaragua

On October 27, 2025, the IACHR granted precautionary measures on behalf of Álvaro Antonio Baltodano Cantarero, Álvaro Baltodano Monroy, Octavio Enrique Caldera, Marvin Antonio Campos Chavarría, Chester Jeramil Cortez Narváez, Yerri Gustavo Estrada Ruiz, Larry Javier Martínez Romero, Antonio Mercado López,

Luis Francisco Ortiz Calero, and María José Rojas Arburola, who are in a serious and urgent situation of irreparable harm to their rights in Nicaragua. According to the request, the beneficiaries are recognized or perceived as political opponents of the current Nicaraguan government and were detained by state authorities between May and August 2025. Currently, there is no information about their whereabouts or conditions of detention. For its part, the State did not provide information to the IACHR. Under these circumstances, based on Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure, the Commission requested that Nicaragua:

a. adopt the necessary measures to determine the situation and whereabouts of the beneficiaries, in order to protect their rights to life, personal integrity, and health;

b. formally indicate if the beneficiaries have been charged with any crime and/or whether they have been brought before the appropriate judicial authority. If not, clarify the reason for their detention without charges and without judicial supervision;

c. clarify the circumstances and conditions of their detention, including the place of their detention. In particular, guarantee regular contact with their families, trusted legal representatives, and consular authorities of the country of which they are nationals;

d. immediately carry out a comprehensive medical assessment to determine the wellbeing of those with health conditions, and guarantee adequate care through the precise definition of medical treatment, and allow timely access to the required medications, while consulting and agreeing upon the measures to be adopted with the beneficiaries and their representatives; and

e. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged facts that led to the adoption of this resolution, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 93/25 (GRANTED)
PM 1225-24 - Walter José Balmaceda Ruiz and eight other persons deprived of their liberty, Nicaragua

On December 12, 2025, the IACHR granted precautionary measures on behalf of (1) Walter José Balmaceda Ruiz, (2) Jairo Alberto Obando Delgadillo, (3) Eddy Antonio Gutiérrez Delgadillo, (4) Zacarias Cano Angulo, (5) Rosendo Antonio Huerta González, (6) Leonel Antonio Poveda Palacios, (7) José Olivar Meza Raudez, (8) Wilfredo Balmaceda Castrillo, and (9) José Ricardo Cortez Dávila; after considering that they are in a serious and urgent situation, given that their rights to life, personal integrity, and health are at risk of irreparable harm in Nicaragua.

According to the request, the beneficiaries do not have access to adequate medical care to treat their health conditions and are being held in precarious conditions of detention. In addition, they are allegedly being threatened by prison officials. For its part, the State did not provide information to the IACHR. Under these circumstances, based on Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure, the Commission requests that Nicaragua:

a. adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life, personal integrity, and health of the beneficiaries;

b. implement the necessary measures to ensure that the beneficiaries' detention conditions are compatible with applicable international standards on the matter, including:

    i. guarantee that they are not subjected to violence, threats, intimidation, and aggression inside the prison;
    ii. ensure access to adequate and specialized medical care, treatments, and medications, and immediately carry out a comprehensive medical evaluation of their health;
    iii. provide immediate access to adequate food and water;

c. consult and agree upon the measures to be implemented with the beneficiaries and their representatives; and

d. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged facts that led to the adoption of this resolution, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

PANAMA

Resolution No. 14/25 (LIFTED)
PM 105-11 – Communities of the Kuna peoples of Madungandí and Emberá de Bayano, Panama

The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) decides to lift these precautionary measures in favor of the communities of the Kuna de Madungandí and Emberá de Bayano indigenous peoples in Panama. Following the State's request to lift these measures, the Commission assessed that the Inter-American Court of Human Rights (I/A Court H.R.) issued a substantive judgment regarding the case related to the proposed beneficiaries. Similarly, it noted the long period without relevant information from the representation, which it required to assess keeping the precautionary measures in force. Consequently, upon not identifying compliance with the procedural requirements, the Commission has decided to lift these precautionary measures. Lastly, the Commission recalls that the situation of the beneficiary communities has been subject to supervision by the Inter-American Court of Human Rights in the context of the judgment in the Case of the Kuna of Madungandí and Emberá de Bayano Indigenous Peoples and their members v. Panama.

PM 490-18 - M.B.B.P, Panama

The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) decides to lift these precautionary measures in favor of M.B.B.P. regarding Panama. At the time of making the decision, the Commission evaluated the actions taken by the State during implementation; which account for a significant change in the beneficiary's legal and factual situation, following the adoption of domestic decisions in her favor. Consequently, the IACHR considered that the requirements of Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure and has decided to lift these precautionary measures.

PARAGUAY

PM 1323-24 - A.R.C.B., Paraguay

On June 7, 2025, the IACHR granted precautionary measures to A.R.C.B., after considering that he is in a serious and urgent situation, given that his rights face a risk of irreparable harm in Paraguay. According to the request, Maura Raquel Barrios Recalde has had no contact with her son, 9-year-old A.R.C.B., since 2023, despite the existence of a final judgment of 2021 on a cohabitation regime between the mother and her son. Consequently, based on Article 25 of its Rules of Procedure, the Commission requests that the State of Paraguay adopt the necessary measures to safeguard the rights to family life, identity, and personal integrity of the child A.R.C.B. In particular, the State must immediately define an appropriate program for him to interact with his mother, in the terms assessed by the court judgment of January 7, 2021, and the corresponding psychosocial accompaniment, according to the evaluations deemed pertinent to be carried out under the applicable standards of the best interests of the child.

Resolution No. 86/25 (LIFTED)
PM 68-17 - Matter of Panambi, Paraguay

The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) decides to lift these precautionary measures in favor of Panambi, in Paraguay. The precautionary measures were granted in light of the serious and urgent situation faced by the proposed beneficiary, whose life and personal integrity were at risk. The IACHR decided to lift the precautionary measures after considering that the State has reported on the adoption of measures aimed at implementing them, and that for over five years the representation has not reported on facts indicating that the beneficiary's risk persists. Consequently, since the requirements of Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure were not identified as having been met, the IACHR decided to lift the measures.

PERU

Resolution No. 5/25 (LIFTED)
PM 729-22 - Liz Patricia Benavides Vargas and her family unit, Peru

The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) decides to lift the precautionary measures at hand in favor of Liz Patricia Benavides Vargas and her family unit in Peru. At the time of making the decision, the Commission recognized the measures taken by the State during the implementation, as well as the change of factual circumstances in relation to the beneficiary's functions, coupled with the passage of time without threatening events. Following the State's repeated requests so that the IACHR issue a ruling on the validity of these precautionary measures, including a request to lift them, the IACHR asked for information from the beneficiaries' representation, who stopped responding. Taking into account the nature of the precautionary measures and in light of the information available, the Commission considered that at this time it is not possible to establish a threatening situation under the terms of Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure, and decided to lift the measures at hand.

Resolution No. 20/25 (LIFTED)
PM 113-16 – Members of the "Tres Islas" Native Community of Madre de Dios, Peru

The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) decides to lift these precautionary measures in favor of Members of the "Tres Islas" Native Community of Madre de Dios in Peru. When making its decision, the Commission assessed the measures adopted internally by the State. In addition, the IACHR considered the prolonged lack of response from the representation. Taking into account the nature of the precautionary measures and in light of the information available, the Commission considered that, at this time, it is not possible to identify a situation of risk under the terms of Article 25 of its Rules of Procedure, and has decided to lift these measures.

TRINIDAD AND TOBAGO

Resolution No. 22/25 (LIFTED)
PM 83-14 – Keron López and Garvín Sookram, Trinidad and Tobago

The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) decides to lift these precautionary measures in favor of Keron López and Garvín Sookram regarding Trinidad and Tobago. At the time of making the decision, the Commission observes that, in the approximately 11 years that these precautionary measures have been in force, the representation has not submitted a written response to any of the requests for information issued by the Commission. The State did not provide any response either. Moreover, according to public information, the beneficiaries were removed from death row. Consequently, the Commission considers that there is no information to continue to consider that the requirements of Article 25 of its Rules of Procedure have been met. Therefore, it deems it appropriate to lift these precautionary measures.

UNITED STATES

PM 176-23 - Michael Tisius, United States

The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) decides to lift these precautionary measures in favor of Michael Tisius in the United States. The State executed the beneficiary, despite the precautionary measures that were in force. The IACHR observed that carrying out the death penalty represents a substantial change in the factual circumstances that gave rise to these precautionary measures and, at the same time, a failure to comply with them. At the time of adopting the decision to lift this matter, the IACHR condemns the enforcement of the death penalty against beneficiaries of precautionary measures. The Commission proceeds with its analysis of the related petition.

VENEZUELA

PM 1432-24 - Nahuel Agustín Gallo, Venezuela

On January 1, 2025, the IACHR granted precautionary measures in favor of Nahuel Agustín Gallo after considering that he is in a serious and urgent situation, given that his rights to life and personal integrity face a risk of irreparable harm in Venezuela. According to the request, the proposed beneficiary is a First Corporal of the National Gendarmerie in Argentina, and was detained on December 8, 2024, at the Francisco de Paula Santander International Bridge, in Ureña, Venezuela. Since that date, his whereabouts, the conditions of his detention and state of health have been unknown. The State did not provide information to the IACHR. Consequently, based on Article 25 of its Rules of Procedure, the Commission requests that Venezuela:

a. adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life and personal integrity of the beneficiary. In particular,

   i. inform whether the beneficiary is in the custody of the State and the circumstances of his detention; or the measures taken to determine his whereabouts or fate;

   ii. specify whether the beneficiary was brought before a competent court to review his detention if he has been charged with a crime;

   iii. expressly indicate the court that reportedly hears his criminal case, if any, or the reasons why he has not been released to date;

   iv. allow the beneficiary to communicate with his family and trusted legal representatives, giving them full access to his criminal file, if any; and

   v. allow the beneficiary to communicate with his country of nationality; and

b. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged events that led to the adoption of this precautionary measure, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 2/25 (GRANTED)
PM 1438-24 - Alberto Trentini, Venezuela

On January 7, 2025, the IACHR granted precautionary measures in favor of Alberto Trentini, considering that he is in a serious and urgent situation given that his rights to life and personal integrity face a risk of irreparable harm in Venezuela. According to the request, the proposed beneficiary is an Italian national and a humanitarian worker of the NGO "Humanity and Inclusion," in Venezuela. He was detained on November 15, 2024, by Venezuelan authorities at the checkpoint of Guasdualito, Venezuela. Since that date, his whereabouts have been unknown. The State did not provide information to the IACHR. Therefore, pursuant to Article 25 of its Rules of Procedure, it requests that Venezuela:

a. adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life and personal integrity of the beneficiary. In particular, officially report whether he is in custody of the State and the circumstances of his detention; or else, the measures taken to determine his whereabouts or fate;

b. establish the necessary measures to ensure that the beneficiary's detention conditions are compatible with the applicable international standards on the matter, including:

   i. guaranteeing regular contact with and access to his family members, lawyers, and representatives, and allow the beneficiary to communicate with his country of nationality;

   ii. officially report on the legal situation of the beneficiary in the framework of the criminal process in which he is said to be involved, as well as the reasons why he has not been released to date and if a court has reviewed his detention; and

   iii. immediately carry out a medical evaluation of his health and guarantee access to the necessary medical care;

c. consult and agree upon the measures to be adopted with the beneficiary and his representatives; and

d. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged facts that led to the adoption of this resolution, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 3/25 (GRANTED)
PM 16-25 - Carlos José Correa Barros, Venezuela

On January 10, 2025, the IACHR granted precautionary measures in favor of Carlos José Correa Barros, after considering that he is in a serious and urgent situation given that his rights to life and personal integrity face a risk of irreparable harm in Venezuela. According to the request, he is a human rights defender and executive director of the organization Espacio Público, who was allegedly detained on January 7, 2025, by security authorities of the State of Venezuela. His whereabouts are currently unknown. The State did not provide information to the IACHR. Under these circumstances, based on Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure, the Commission requests that Venezuela:

a. adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life and personal integrity of Carlos José Correa Barros. In particular, provide official information on whether he is in the custody of the State and the circumstances of his detention, or on the measures taken to determine his whereabouts or fate;

b. implement the necessary measures so that the beneficiary can carry out his human rights defense activities without being subjected to threats, stigmatizing and disqualifying statements, harassment, or acts of violence;

c. establish the necessary measures to ensure that the conditions of detention of the beneficiary are compatible with the applicable international standards on the matter, including:

   i. guaranteeing regular contact and access to his family members, his attorneys, and representatives;

   ii. provide official information on the legal situation of the beneficiary in the framework of the criminal proceedings in which he is allegedly involved, such as the reasons why he has not been released to date, and whether he has been brought before a court for a review of his detention; and

   iii. immediately carry out a medical assessment of his health situation and guarantee access to the necessary medical care;

d. consult and agree upon the measures to be adopted with the beneficiary and his representatives; and

e. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged facts that gave rise to this resolution, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 6/25 (GRANTED)
PM 1271-24 - Gustavo de los Reyes Ruiz, his wife and his son, Venezuela

On January 20, 2025, the IACHR granted precautionary measures in favor of Gustavo de los Reyes Ruiz, his wife, and son, after considering that they are in a serious and urgent situation given that their rights to life and personal integrity face a risk of irreparable harm in Venezuela. According to the request, the proposed beneficiaries are being harassed by Venezuelan State security agents due to their political activity and affiliation with the opposition party "Vente Venezuela" in the country. For its part, the State did not provide information to the IACHR. Under these circumstances, based on Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure, the Commission requests that Venezuela:

a. adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life and personal integrity of the beneficiaries;

b. ensure the corresponding measures to guarantee that they can continue to carry out their political participation activities without being subjected to threats, harassment, or acts of violence in the exercise thereof. In particular, the State must ensure that its agents respect the rights and personal integrity of the beneficiaries in accordance with the standards established by international human rights law, as well as in relation to acts of risk attributable to third parties;

c. report on existing criminal investigations against them; exhibit the judicial arrest warrants that exist, if any; and allow them to have security guarantees in the development of the eventual investigations;

d. consult and agree upon the measures to be adopted with the beneficiaries and their representatives; and

e. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged facts that gave rise to this precautionary measure, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

PM 205-24 - Carlos Julio Rojas, Venezuela

On January 20, 2025, the IACHR granted precautionary measures in favor of journalist and social activist Carlos Julio Rojas, upon considering that he is at serious and urgent risk of irreparable harm to his rights in Venezuela. On April 15, 2024, he was detained by Venezuelan security forces. Since his deprivation of liberty, he has not been allowed access to a trusted lawyer and has not had contact with his relatives since July 28, 2024. It was reported that the beneficiary allegedly suffers from diseases and there is no official information on his detention or health conditions. For its part, the State did not provide information to the IACHR. Under these circumstances, based on Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure, the Commission requests that Venezuela:

a. adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life, personal integrity, and health of Carlos Julio Rojas, in accordance with the applicable international standards;

b. implement the necessary measures to ensure that his detention conditions are compatible with the applicable international standards on the matter, in particular:

   i. guarantee regular contact with and access to his family members, lawyers, and representatives;

   ii. provide official information on the legal situation of the beneficiary in the framework of the criminal process in which he is said to be involved;

   iii. immediately carry out a medical evaluation of his health and guarantee access to the necessary medical care;

c. consult and agree upon the measures to be adopted with the beneficiary and his representatives; and

d. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged facts that led to this resolution, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 8/25 (GRANTED)
PM 25-25, 26-25 - Víctor Manuel Borjas Albornoz and Manuel Alejandro Muñoz Camacho, Venezuela

On January 26, 2025, the IACHR granted precautionary measures in favor of Víctor Manuel Borjas Albornoz and Manuel Alejandro Muñoz Camacho, after considering that they are in a serious and urgent situation presenting a risk of irreparable harm to their rights in Venezuela. It was alleged that the beneficiaries are political and human rights activists in Venezuela. On January 9, 2025, they were detained by State security authorities during nationwide protests. Since their detentions, their whereabouts have not been known nor have they had contact with their relatives and/or legal representatives. The Commission also assessed that the State did not provide any information regarding the measures adopted to mitigate the beneficiaries' risk or regarding the actions taken to determine their location. Pursuant to Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure, the Commission requests that Venezuela:

a. adopt the necessary measures to safeguard the rights to life and personal integrity of Víctor Manuel Borjas Albornoz and Manuel Alejandro Muñoz Camacho. In particular, officially report whether they are in the custody of the State and the circumstances of their detention; or, the measures taken to determine their respective whereabouts or fate;

b. establish the necessary measures to ensure that the beneficiaries' detention conditions are compatible with the applicable international standards on the matter, including:

   i. guaranteeing regular contact with and access to their family members, lawyers, and representatives; and

   ii. officially report on their legal situation in the framework of the criminal process in which they are said to be involved, as well as the reasons why they have not been released to date, and whether they have been presented to a court for review of their detention;

c. consult and agree upon the measures to be adopted with the beneficiaries and their representatives; and

d. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged facts that led to this resolution, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 10/25 (GRANTED)
PM 27-25 - Jesús Gabriel Useche Moncada, Venezuela

On January 30, 2025, the IACHR granted precautionary measures in favor of Jesús Gabriel Useche Moncada, after considering that he is in a serious and urgent situation since his rights to life and personal integrity face a risk of irreparable harm in Venezuela. According to the request, the 19 year-old beneficiary, who has an intellectual disability, was detained on January 9, 2025, during the demonstrations in Venezuela. To date, he remains isolated and incommunicado, with no information on the conditions of his detention or his current state of health. For its part, the State did not provide information to the IACHR. Under these circumstances, based on Article 25 of its Rules of Procedure, the Commission requested that Venezuela:

a. adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life, personal integrity, and health of Jesús Gabriel Useche Moncada;

b. promote the necessary measures to ensure that the conditions of detention of the beneficiary are compatible with the applicable international standards on the matter, particularly taking into account his disability, inter alia:

   i. guarantee regular contact with and access to his family members, trusted lawyers, and representatives;

   ii. provide official information about the legal situation of the beneficiary in the framework of the criminal proceedings in which he is allegedly involved, such as the reasons for which he has not been released to date, and whether he has been brought before a court for the review of his detention;

   iii. immediately carry out a medical assessment of his health situation and guarantee access to necessary medical care;

c. consult and agree upon the measures to be implemented with the beneficiary and his representatives; and

d. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged facts that gave rise to this resolution, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 15/25 (GRANTED)
PM 45-25 - Daniel García Morillo, Venezuela

On February 18, 2025, the IACHR granted precautionary measures to Daniel García Morillo. It was reported that on January 9, 2025, the beneficiary was deprived of his liberty by members of the Bolivarian National Guard in Maracaibo, Zulia state. From that moment on, his location has been unknown. In addition, they reported that the beneficiary suffers from Immune Thrombocytopenic Purpura (ITP), a bleeding disorder that reportedly requires constant and adequate medical attention.

When assessing the decision, the Commission took into account that the beneficiary's whereabouts are unknown, that it is not possible to ensure the conditions in which he finds himself or consider that he has the minimum guarantees necessary to protect his fundamental rights, and that family members do not have the possibility of requesting protection measures at the domestic level or ensuring that the required actions are taken to locate the beneficiary.

Having analyzed the information available, pursuant to the provisions of Article 25 of its Rules of Procedure, the IACHR requested that Venezuela

a. adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life and personal integrity of Daniel García Morillo. In particular, among others, disclose whether Daniel García Morillo is in the custody of the State and if so for what charges and by what legal authority as well as the circumstances of his detention;

b. promote the necessary measures to ensure that the conditions of detention of the beneficiary are compatible with the applicable international standards on the matter, including:

   i. guaranteeing regular contact with and access to his family members, his trusted attorneys and representatives;

   ii. provide official information on the legal situation of the beneficiary in the framework of the criminal proceedings in which he is allegedly involved, such as the reasons why he has not been released to date, and whether he has been brought before a court for the review of his detention; and

iii. immediately carry out a medical assessment of his health situation and guarantee access to necessary medical care;

c. consult and agree upon the measures to be implemented with the beneficiary and his representatives; and

d. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged facts that gave rise to this resolution, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 21/25 (GRANTED)
PM 143-25 - Carlos Marcelino Chancellor Ferrer, Venezuela

On February 28, 2025, the IACHR granted precautionary measures in favor of Carlos Marcelino Chancellor Ferrer, considering that he is in a serious and urgent situation given that his rights to life, personal integrity, and health face a risk of irreparable harm in Venezuela. According to the request, the beneficiary, 65 years old, is an opposition politician and former mayor of the municipality of Sifontes, in the state of Bolívar. He has been detained since August 6, 2024, following the post-election context in Venezuela. To date, he remains without access to medical care for his illnesses. For its part, the State did not provide information to the IACHR. Under these circumstances, based on Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure, the Commission requests that Venezuela:

a. adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life, personal integrity, and health of Carlos Marcelino Chancellor Ferrer;

b. implement sufficient measures to ensure that the beneficiary's detention conditions are compatible with applicable international standards. In particular, the following:

i. immediately carry out a medical assessment of his health situation and guarantee access to the necessary medical care;

ii. facilitate contact with his trusted lawyer, giving him access to the criminal file that is being processed against the beneficiary; and

iii. inform the representation about the reasons for which the beneficiary continues to be deprived of liberty and the judicial decisions regarding his legal situation;

c. consult and agree upon the measures to be adopted with the beneficiary and his representatives; and

d. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged facts that gave rise to this resolution, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 27/25 (GRANTED)
PM 247-25 - Lucas Jonas Hunter, Venezuela

On March 22, 2025, the IACHR granted precautionary measures to Lucas Jonas Hunter. It was reported that Lucas Jonas Hunter is a French and United States citizen, works as an investment analyst and does not speak Spanish. On January 7, 2025, he got lost while riding his motorcycle near Paraguanchón, Guajira department, in northern Colombia, and was detained by officials of the Venezuelan Bolivarian National Guard at the border control. Since that date, his whereabouts are unknown. The Commission took into consideration that the whereabouts of the beneficiary are unknown, that it is not possible to ascertain the conditions in which he is, that communication between the beneficiary and the countries of which he is a national has not been guaranteed, preventing consular authorities, legal representatives and lawyers in Venezuela from providing him with support and assistance.

After analyzing the available information, the IACHR, in accordance with Article 25 of its Rules of Procedure, requested that Venezuela:

a. adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life and personal integrity of the beneficiary. In particular,

   i. inform whether the beneficiary is in the custody of the State and the circumstances of his detention; or the measures taken to determine his whereabouts or fate;
   ii. specify whether the beneficiary was brought before a competent court to review his detention if he has been charged with a crime;
   iii. expressly indicate the court that reportedly hears his criminal case, if any, or the reasons why he has not been released to date;
   iv. allow the beneficiary to communicate with his family and trusted legal representatives, giving them full access to his criminal file, if any;
   v. report whether the beneficiary has been provided with access to a translator or interpreter in order to gain accurate knowledge of his situation and exercise his rights; and
   vi. allow the beneficiary to communicate with his countries of nationality; and

b. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged facts that gave rise to this precautionary measure, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 31/25 (GRANTED)
PM 304-25 - Fernando Loaiza Chacón, Venezuela

On March 31, 2025, the IACHR granted precautionary measures in favor of Fernando Loaiza Chacon. It was reported that on March 14, 2025, the beneficiary, political activist of the Acción Democrática party and current mayor of the Catatumbo municipality, in the state of Zulia, was detained by the Strategic Operations Group (GOES). Since that date, his whereabouts and current health situation are unknown. When evaluating the decision, the Commission took into consideration the fact that the beneficiary's whereabouts are unknown, that his next of kin do not have the possibility to request protection measures at the domestic level or to receive the medical attention he might require for the various pathologies he suffers. After analyzing the available information, the IACHR, in accordance with Article 25 of its Rules of Procedure, requested that Venezuela:

a. adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life and personal integrity of Fernando Loaiza Chacón. In particular, provide official information on whether he is in the custody of the State and the circumstances of his detention, or on the measures taken to determine his whereabouts or fate;
b. implement sufficient measures to ensure that the conditions of detention of the beneficiary are compatible with applicable international standards. In particular the following:

   i. facilitate contact with his relatives, representatives and trusted lawyers;
   ii. inform officially about the legal situation of the beneficiary in the framework of the criminal proceedings in which he is allegedly involved, such as the reasons for which he has not been released to date, and whether he has been presented to a court for review of his detention; and
   iii. immediately carry out a medical assessment of his health situation and guarantee access to the necessary medical care and treatment;

c. implement the necessary measures so that the beneficiary can carry out his activities as mayor and opposition political leader without being subjected to threats, harassment, intimidation, or acts of violence;
d. consult and agree upon the measures to be implemented with the beneficiary and his representatives; and
e. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged facts that gave rise to this precautionary measure, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 32/25 (GRANTED)
PM 334-25 - Yevhenii Petrovich Trush, Venezuela

On April 5, 2025, the IACHR granted precautionary measures to Yevhenii Petrovich Trush, after considering that he is in a serious and urgent situation of risk of irreparable harm to his rights in Venezuela. It was alleged that the beneficiary is a student of Ukrainian citizenship, identified as neurodivergent. On October 20, 2024, State agents detained the beneficiary without explanation. The Commission found that the State did not provide information and that the whereabouts of the beneficiary are unknown. In addition, the authorities have not clarified the beneficiary's legal situation, nor have actions been taken to guarantee communication between the beneficiary and the country of which he is a national and his next of kin. Likewise, the IACHR considered it transcendental that the beneficiary is a neurodivergent person, which requires reasonable adjustments to guarantee his access and exercise of his rights under conditions of equality. In accordance with Article 25 of its Rules of Procedure, the Commission requested that Venezuela:

a. adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life, personal integrity, and health of the beneficiary. In particular,

   i. inform whether the beneficiary is in the custody of the State and if so, indicate the reason for his detention and his current circumstances, or provide information on the measures aimed at determining his whereabouts or fate;
   ii. specify whether the beneficiary was brought before a court of competent jurisdiction to review his detention if he was charged with a crime, or indicate the reason why not, if he has not been brought before a court;
   iii. expressly indicate the court that reportedly hears his criminal case, if any, or the reasons why he has not been released to date;
   iv. allow the beneficiary to communicate with his family and trusted legal representatives, giving them full access to his criminal file, if any;
   v. report whether the beneficiary has been provided with access to a translator or interpreter in order to gain accurate knowledge of his situation and exercise his rights;
   vi. immediately carry out a medical assessment of his health and guarantee access to necessary medical care;
   vii. report whether reasonable adjustments and specific support have been made for the exercise of his rights, including any adjustments that may be required due to the neurodivergence that the requesting party indicated that the beneficiary has;
   viii. allow the beneficiary to communicate with his country of nationality; and

b. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged events that led to the adoption of this precautionary measure, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 35/25 (EXTENSION)
PM 1426-24 - Sairam Gabriela Rivas Moreno, Venezuela

On April 24, 2025, the IACHR extended precautionary measures in favor of Sairam Gabriela Rivas Moreno, in Venezuela. Through Resolution 105/2024 of December 31, 2024, the IACHR granted precautionary measures in favor of her partner Jesús Alexander Armas Monasterios. On this occasion, it was reported that she was subject to harassment and threats as a result of her work as a human rights defender and the search for him. The State did not respond to the IACHR.

The Commission requested that Venezuela:

a. adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life and personal integrity of Sairam Gabriela Rivas Moreno;
b. implement the corresponding measures to guarantee that the beneficiary can continue to carry out her human rights defense activities without being subject to threats, harassment or acts of violence in the exercise thereof. In particular, the State must ensure that state actors respect the beneficiary's rights and personal integrity in accordance with the standards established by international human rights law, and in relation to acts of risk attributable to third parties;

c. report on the existing criminal investigations involving her; present any judicial arrest warrants, if applicable; and provide adequate security guarantees during the course of any investigations;
d. consult and agree upon the measures to be adopted with the beneficiary and her representation; and
e. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged facts that led to this extension of the precautionary measure, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 38/25 (GRANTED)
PM 320-25 - Aurora Carolina Silva Uzcátegui and her two daughters, Venezuela

On May 4, 2025, the IACHR granted precautionary measures to Aurora Carolina Silva Uzcátegui and her two daughters, after considering that they are in a serious and urgent situation, given that their rights to life and personal integrity are at risk of irreparable harm in Venezuela. According to the request, the beneficiary is allegedly being subjected to threats, harassment, and surveillance by State agents, as a consequence of the public denunciations made in defense of the rights of her husband, Freddy Francisco Superlano Salinas, who is deprived of his liberty. For its part, the State did not provide information to the IACHR. Under these circumstances, based on Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure, the Commission requested that Venezuela:

a. adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life and personal integrity of Aurora Carolina Silva Uzcátegui, A.I.S.S., and A.S.S.; b. implement the corresponding measures to guarantee that Aurora Carolina Silva Uzcátegui can continue to carry out her activities in defense of human rights without being subjected to threats, harassment, or acts of violence in the exercise thereof. In particular, the State must ensure that state actors respect the beneficiaries' rights and personal integrity in accordance with the standards established by international human rights law, and in relation to acts of risk attributable to third parties;
c. consult and agree upon the measures to be adopted with the beneficiary and her representation; and
d. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged events that led to this resolution, so as to prevent them from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 39/25 (GRANTED)
PM 492-25 - Jonathan Guillermo Torres Duque, Venezuela

On May 5, 2025, the IACHR granted precautionary measures to Jonathan Guillermo Torres Duque, after considering that he is in a serious and urgent situation presenting a risk of irreparable harm to his rights in Venezuela. It was alleged that the beneficiary, of Venezuelan nationality, was detained on October 27, 2024, by agents of the Bolivarian National Guard (GNB) at the Peracal checkpoint in San Antonio, Táchira state, when he attempted to enter Venezuela after living in the United States for 10 years. Since that time, his fate or whereabouts or the reasons for his detention have been unknown. The Commission found that the State did not provide information and that approximately six months after the detention, and after the internal judicial and search actions carried out, the legal situation and whereabouts of the proposed beneficiary are unknown, despite the efforts made by his next of kin. In addition, the IACHR took into consideration that it is not known whether he has been evaluated or received medical attention to establish his health condition. In accordance with Article 25 of its Rules of Procedure, the Commission requests that Venezuela:

a. adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life, personal integrity, and health of the beneficiary. In particular,

    i. report whether the beneficiary is in the custody of the State and, if so, indicate the reason and circumstances of his detention; or the measures taken to determine his whereabouts or fate;
    ii. specify whether he has been brought before a competent court to review his detention if he has been charged with a crime, or clarify the reason why he has not done so, if he has not appeared before a court;

iii. expressly indicate the court that would know his criminal case, if any, or the reasons why he has not been released to date;
iv. allow the beneficiary to communicate with his family and trusted legal representatives, giving them full access to his criminal file, if any; and
v. immediately carry out a medical assessment of his health and guarantee access to necessary medical care; and

b. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged events that led to the adoption of this precautionary measure, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 40/25 (GRANTED)
PM 469-25 - Luis Roberto Somaza Castellano, Venezuela

On May 5, 2025, the IACHR granted precautionary measures in favor of Luis Roberto Somaza Castellano, after considering that he is in a serious and urgent situation presenting a risk of irreparable harm to his rights in Venezuela. It was alleged that the beneficiary is a leader of the political opposition in Venezuela. On February 12, 2025, he was detained by State authorities during an operation. Since his detention, there has been no official information about his conditions of detention in the Bolivarian National Intelligence Service (SEBIN) or his current state of health. Similarly, the beneficiary is said to have no contact with his family or access to the necessary medical attention despite his ailments. The Commission also found that the State did not provide any information regarding the measures adopted to mitigate the beneficiary's risk. In accordance with Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure, the Commission requested that Venezuela:

a. adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life, personal integrity, and health of Luis Roberto Somaza Castellano;
b. implement sufficient measures to ensure that the beneficiary's detention conditions are compatible with applicable international standards. In particular, the following:

i. immediately carry out a medical assessment of his health and guarantee access to medical care and necessary treatments;
ii. guarantee regular contact with his family members and trusted attorneys, facilitating access to the criminal file that is being processed against the beneficiary;
iii. inform the representation of the reasons why the beneficiary continues to be deprived of his liberty and the judicial decisions regarding his legal situation;

c. consult and agree upon the measures to be adopted with the beneficiary and his representatives; and
d. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged facts that gave rise to this resolution, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 44/25 (GRANTED)
PM 440-25 - Andreina Baduel, Venezuela

On June 12, 2025, the IACHR granted precautionary measures in favor of Andreina Baduel, after considering that she is in a serious and urgent situation presenting a risk of irreparable harm to her rights in Venezuela. It was alleged that the beneficiary is a human rights defender and director of the Committee for the Freedom of Political Prisoners (CLIPPVE) in Venezuela. She is allegedly being subjected to threats, harassment, intimidation and surveillance by state agents. The Commission also found that the State did not provide any information regarding the measures adopted to mitigate the beneficiary's risk. In accordance with Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure, the Commission requests that Venezuela:

a. adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life and personal integrity of Andreina Baduel;
b. implement the corresponding measures to guarantee that Andreina Baduel can continue to carry out her activities in defense of human rights without being subjected to threats, harassment, or acts of violence in the exercise of these activities. In particular, the State must ensure that state agents respect the beneficiary's rights and personal integrity in accordance with the standards established by international human rights law, and in relation to acts of risk attributable to third parties;

c. consult and agree upon the measures to be adopted with the beneficiary and her representation; and
d. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged events that led to this resolution, so as to prevent them from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 47/25 (GRANTED)
PM 752-25 - Noel Vidal Álvarez Camargo, Venezuela

On July 10, 2025, the IACHR granted precautionary measures in favor of Noel Vidal Álvarez Camargo upon considering that he is in a serious and urgent situation given that his rights to life and personal integrity face a risk of irreparable harm in Venezuela. Agents of the Bolivarian National Intelligence Service (SEBIN) allegedly detained the beneficiary, who is an opposition leader, on January 10, 2025. No information regarding his whereabouts was initially available after being detained and he has subsequently been held incommunicado since March 11, 2025. It was alleged that his health deteriorated progressively and that the authorities failed to respond to the beneficiary's current physical issues and answer whether he is receiving medical attention. For its part, the State did not provide information to the IACHR.

Upon analyzing the available information and pursuant to Article 25 of its Rules of Procedure, the IACHR requested that Venezuela:

a. adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life, personal integrity, and health of Noel Vidal Álvarez Camargo;
b. implement sufficient measures to ensure that the beneficiary's detention conditions are compatible with applicable international standards. In particular, immediately carry out a medical assessment of his health situation and guarantee access to specialized medical care, as well as the necessary treatments; guarantee regular contact with his family and trusted lawyers; and report on the status of the charges brought against him including the reason why he has not been released pending trial;
c. consult and agree upon the measures to be adopted with the beneficiary and his representatives; and
d. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged events that led to the adoption of this precautionary measure, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 51/25 (GRANTED)
PM 897-25 - Henry Alberto Castillo Molero, Venezuela

On July 28, 2025, the IACHR granted precautionary measures to Henry Alberto Castillo Molero. It was reported that Henry Alberto Castillo Molero is a businessman and agricultural producer. He was detained on January 24, 2025, by agents of the General Directorate of Military Counterintelligence (DGCIM) in an operation at his parents' residence in Caracas. Previously, the agents had detained the pregnant wife of his nephew Christian Hernández and, upon failing to find him, decided to detain the beneficiary without a warrant. Since the date of his detention, the beneficiary's whereabouts and state of health are unknown.

When assessing the decision, the Commission took into consideration that six months had elapsed since the arrest and, despite searches carried out by family members in detention centers and internal actions taken, the Venezuelan authorities had not provided official information on the beneficiary's whereabouts. In addition, state agents had arrested him with the aim of forcing his nephew to turn himself in. The Commission highlighted the impossibility faced by the family to demand protection of the beneficiary's rights. In short, the Commission observed that the State's refusal to provide an official response regarding the legal situation and whereabouts of the beneficiary remains despite the efforts made by his relatives. The Commission also found that, within the framework of the precautionary measures and in the current context of the country, relatives of recently detained persons receive warnings that they will be deprived of their liberty, which, in the case of the beneficiary, were allegedly carried out with a view to locating his nephew.

After analyzing the available information, the IACHR, in accordance with Article 25 of its Rules of Procedure, requested that Venezuela:

a. adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life and personal integrity of the beneficiary. In particular,

   i. report whether the beneficiary is in the custody of the State and, if so, indicate the reason and circumstances of his detention; or the measures taken to determine his whereabouts or fate;
   ii. if the beneficiary is in the custody of the State, specify whether he has been charged and brought before a competent court to review his detention, or if he has not been brought before a court, explain why not;
   iii. expressly indicate the court that reportedly knows his criminal case, if any, or the reasons why he has not been released to date;
   iv. allow the beneficiary to communicate with his family and trusted legal representatives, giving them full access to his criminal file, if any;
   v. immediately carry out a medical assessment of his health to obtain more information on his state of health; and

b. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged events that led to the adoption of this precautionary measure, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 53/25 (GRANTED)
PM 939-25 - Ulises Ramón Martínez Silva, Venezuela

On August 5, 2025, the IACHR granted precautionary measures in favor of Ulises Ramón Martínez Silva upon considering that he is in a serious and urgent situation given that his rights to life and personal integrity face a risk of irreparable harm in Venezuela. The requesting party indicated that the beneficiary is an entrepreneur and coordinator of the Vente Venezuela party in the Simón Bolívar municipality of the state of Anzoátegui. He was reportedly detained by officials from the Bolivarian National Intelligence Service (SEBIN) on June 9, 2025. Since then, his whereabouts have been unknown and it has not been possible to contact him, despite the advanced search actions and the judicial remedies filed by his relatives. For its part, the State did not provide information to the IACHR.

Upon analyzing the available information and pursuant to Article 25 of its Rules of Procedure, the IACHR requested that Venezuela:

a. adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life and personal integrity of the beneficiary. In particular,

   i. report whether the beneficiary is in the custody of the State and, if so, indicate the reasons for and circumstances of his detention; or, alternatively, indicate the measures taken to determine his whereabouts or fate;
   ii. if he has been charged with a crime, specify whether he has been brought before a competent court to review his detention, or, if he has not been brought before a court, clarify the reasons why not;
   iii. expressly indicate the court that has oversight of his case, if he has been charged with a crime, and if not, specify the reasons why he has not been released to date;
   iv. allow the beneficiary to communicate with his family and trusted legal representatives, giving them full access to his criminal file, if any; and
   v. immediately carry out a medical assessment of his health and ensure access to necessary medical care; and

b. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged facts that led to this precautionary measure, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 56/25 (GRANTED)
PM 549-25, 688-25 - Pedro Miguel Guanipa Villalobos and Rafael Arturo Ramírez Colina, Venezuela

On August 15, 2025, the IACHR granted precautionary measures on behalf of Pedro Miguel Guanipa Villalobos and Rafael Arturo Ramírez Colina, after considering that they are in a serious and urgent situation, given that their rights to life, personal integrity, and health are at risk of irreparable harm in Venezuela.

The requests alleged that the beneficiaries are members of the opposition political party Primero Justicia and public officials of the municipality of Maracaibo, the latter being the mayor in office at the time of his detention. Both are being held incommunicado and in solitary confinement, with no information about their health or conditions of detention in Venezuela. For its part, the State did not provide information to the IACHR. Under these circumstances, based on Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure, the Commission requests that Venezuela:

a. adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life, personal integrity, and health of the beneficiaries;
b. implement sufficient measures to ensure that their detention conditions are compatible with applicable international standards. In particular, the following:

    i. facilitate contact with their family members, representatives, and trusted attorneys, and grant them full access to the judicial file;
    ii. officially report on the legal situation of the beneficiaries in the framework of the criminal proceedings in which they are allegedly involved; and
    iii. immediately carry out a medical assessment of their health, as well as guarantee access to the necessary medical care and treatment;

c. implement the necessary measures so that the beneficiaries can carry out their activities as opposition political leaders without being subjected to threats, harassment, intimidation or acts of violence;
d. consult and agree upon the measures to be implemented with the beneficiaries and their representatives; and
e. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged facts that gave rise to this resolution, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 57/25 (GRANTED)
PM 1028-25 - Aldo Roso Vargas, Venezuela

On August 16, 2025, the IACHR granted precautionary measures in favor of Aldo Roso Vargas, activist of the Voluntad Popular political party and campaign manager for the El Valle parish, after finding that he is in a serious and urgent situation given that his rights to health, life, and personal integrity face a risk of irreparable harm in Venezuela. The applicant indicated that he was detained on July 4, 2024, on charges of planning sabotage against the 2024 presidential elections. It was alleged that, due to his health condition, he requires surgery ordered by his treating physician, which has not yet been performed and whose delay would put his health at risk. A lack of response to internal requests to protect his rights was added. For its part, the State did not provide information to the IACHR.

After analyzing the available information, the IACHR, in accordance with Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure, requested that Venezuela:

a. adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life, personal integrity, and health of Aldo Roso Vargas;
b. implement the necessary measures to ensure that the beneficiary's detention conditions are compatible with applicable international standards. In particular,

i. immediately carry out a medical assessment of his health, as well as guarantee timely and specialized medical care and treatment, informing his family members and representatives of the results;
ii. allow family members and his trusted attorney to visit the beneficiary without hindrance; and
iii. provide information on the legal situation of the beneficiary and allow his trusted attorney to access his criminal file and present any appeals deemed appropriate on his behalf;

c. consult and agree upon the measures to be implemented with the beneficiary and his representatives; and
d. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged facts that led to the adoption of this resolution, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 59/25 (GRANTED)
PM 680-25 - Sofía María Sahagún Ortiz, Venezuela

On August 18, 2025, the IACHR granted precautionary measures in favor of Sofía María Sahagún Ortiz, after considering that she is in a serious and urgent situation, given that her rights to life and personal integrity are at risk of irreparable harm in Venezuela. The applicant indicated that the beneficiary has Spanish and Venezuelan nationality and was detained in October 2024, and her whereabouts and the reasons for her detention have remained unknown during the following months. It was alleged that she had been held incommunicado since December 2024 and that her possibilities to have an effective defense was restricted. For its part, the State did not provide information to the IACHR.

Upon analyzing the available information, in accordance with Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure, the IACHR requested that Venezuela:

a. adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life and personal integrity of Sofía María Sahagún Ortiz;
b. implement sufficient measures to ensure that the beneficiary's detention conditions are compatible with applicable international standards. In particular, guarantee regular contact with her family, trusted legal representatives, and consular authorities of the country of which she is also a national; grant full access to her criminal file, if any; and report on her legal situation, including the reason why she has not been released pending trial;
c. consult and agree upon the measures to be adopted with the beneficiary and her representatives; and
d. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged events that gave rise to this resolution, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 61/25 (GRANTED)
PM 1084-25 - Albany Milagros Colmenares Mendoza, Venezuela

According to the request, the beneficiary is the political secretary of the Vente Venezuela movement in the state of Carabobo. She was allegedly detained by state agents on July 23, 2025. Since then, she has reportedly been held in isolation, incommunicado, and without official information about her place of detention or the conditions of her detention. For its part, the State did not provide information to the IACHR. Under these circumstances, based on Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure, the Commission requests that Venezuela:

a. take the necessary measures to protect the rights to life and personal integrity of Albany Milagros Colmenares Mendoza.
b. implement sufficient measures to ensure that the beneficiary's conditions of detention are compatible with applicable international standards. In particular, the following:

i. facilitate contact with her family members, representatives, and trusted lawyers, giving them full access to the court file; and
ii. officially report on the beneficiary's place of detention, the legal situation in the criminal proceedings in which she is involved, and whether she has been brought before a court for review of her detention;

c. implement the necessary measures so that the beneficiary can carry out her political activities without being subjected to threats, harassment, intimidation, or acts of violence.
d. agree on the measures to be implemented with the beneficiary and her representatives; and
e. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged events that gave rise to this resolution and thus prevent their recurrence.

Resolution No. 62/25 (GRANTED)
PM 906-25 - Rory Daniel Branker, Venezuela

On August 27, 2025, the IACHR granted precautionary measures in favor of Rory Daniel Branker, after considering that he is in a situation of seriousness and urgency, since his rights to life and personal integrity are at risk of irreparable harm in Venezuela.

According to the request, the beneficiary, a journalist and editor of the web portal La Patilla, was detained on February 20, 2025, by state agents. Since then, his whereabouts have been unknown. For its part, the State did not provide information to the IACHR. Under these circumstances, based on Article 25 of the Rules, the Commission requests Venezuela to:

a. Adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life and personal integrity of Rory Daniel Branker. In particular:

i. inform whether the beneficiary is in state custody and, if so, indicate the reason and circumstances of his detention; or, the measures taken to ascertain his whereabouts or fate;
ii. if the beneficiary is in state custody, indicate whether he has been charged with crimes and whether he has been brought before a competent court to review his detention; if so, explicitly mention the court that would hear his criminal case, or if he has not appeared before a court, clarify the reason why not;
iii. facilitate communication for the beneficiary with his family, representatives, and trusted lawyers, granting them full access to his legal records, if they exist.

b. Implement the necessary measures so that the beneficiary can carry out their journalistic activities without being subject to threats, harassment, intimidation, or acts of violence; and
c. Report on the actions taken in order to investigate the alleged facts that led to this resolution and to prevent their recurrence.

Resolution No. 64/25 (GRANTED)
PM 225-25 - Marbelis Josefina Gibori and Child X.A.M.M., Venezuela

On September 15, 2025, the IACHR granted precautionary measures in favor of Marbelis Josefina Gibori and the child X.A.M.M., after considering that they are in a serious and urgent situation of risk of irreparable harm to their rights in Venezuela. It was alleged that the beneficiaries were being subjected to harassment, harassment, and surveillance by State agents. The alleged acts were supposedly intended to obtain information on the whereabouts of Orlando Moreno Gibori, a relative of the beneficiaries, who is considered a political opponent and is believed to be in hiding. The Commission also noted that the State did not provide any information regarding the measures taken to mitigate the situation that places the beneficiary at risk. In accordance with Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure, the Commission requests that Venezuela:

a. adopt necessary measures to protect the rights to life and personal integrity of Marbelis Josefina Gibori and the child X.A.M.M.;
b. implement the necessary measures to ensure that the beneficiaries are not subjected to harassment, surveillance, siege, or other acts of violence;
c. consult and agree upon the measures to be adopted with the beneficiaries and their representative; and
d. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged events that led to the adoption of this precautionary measure, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 70/25 (GRANTED)
PM 1224-25 - Camilo Castro, Venezuela

On October 2, 2025, the IACHR granted precautionary measures on behalf of Camilo Castro, after considering that he is in a serious and urgent situation, given that his rights to life and personal integrity are at risk of irreparable harm in Venezuela.

According to the request, the beneficiary is a French citizen and yoga teacher who traveled to the border with Venezuela to complete an immigration procedure on June 26, 2025. His whereabouts have been unknown since then. For its part, the State did not provide any information to the IACHR. Under these circumstances, based on Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure, the Commission requests that Venezuela:

a. adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life and personal integrity of Camilo Castro. In particular:

    ii. if the beneficiary is in the custody of the State, clarify whether he has been charged with crimes and whether he has been brought before a competent court to review his detention, and if so, expressly mention the court that hears his criminal case, or if he has not appeared before a court, the reason why he has not done so;
    iii. facilitate the beneficiary's communication with his family, representatives, trusted attorneys and consular authorities of the country he is a national, and give them full access to his judicial file, if any;
    iv. report whether the beneficiary has been provided access to a translator or interpreter in order to take accurate knowledge of his situation and exercise his rights;
    v. enable him to have communication with the country of which he is a national; and

Resolution No. 72/25 (GRANTED)
PM 1282-25 - Alireza Akbari, Venezuela

On October 8, 2025, the IACHR granted precautionary measures in favor of Alireza Akbari, after considering that he is in a serious and urgent situation, given that his rights to life and personal integrity face a risk of irreparable harm in Venezuela. The requesting party indicated that the beneficiary is an engineer and Irish citizen. He traveled to Venezuela on June 24, 2025, and his family had not heard from him since June 27. It was alleged that there were no details about the time, manner, place, or identity of possible actors involved in his disappearance; however, it was presumed that he was detained by state security forces based on information from third parties. His legal status and place of detention remain unknown, and he has not been allowed to file domestic appeals or receive consular protection. For its part, the State did not provide information to the IACHR.

After analyzing the available information, the IACHR, in accordance with Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure, requested that Venezuela:

a. adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life and personal integrity of Alireza Akbari. In particular:

   i. report whether the beneficiary is in the custody of the State and, if so, indicate the reason and circumstances of his detention; or, the measures taken to determine his whereabouts or fate;
   ii. if the beneficiary is in the custody of the State, specify whether he has been charged with crimes and whether he has been brought before a competent court to review his detention, if so, expressly mention the court that would hear his criminal case, or if he has not appeared before a court, clarify the reason why he has not done so;
   iii. facilitate the beneficiary's communication with his family, representatives, trusted attorneys and consular authorities of the country he is a national, and give them full access to his judicial file, if any;
   iv. report whether the beneficiary has been provided access to a translator or interpreter in order to take accurate knowledge of his situation and exercise his rights;
   v. enable him to have communication with the country of which he is a national; and
   vi. if he is not in State custody, take the necessary measures to determine the whereabouts of the beneficiary; and

b. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged events that led to the adoption of this precautionary measure, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 79/25 (GRANTED)
PM 1406-25, 1414-25 - Nine foreign persons deprived of their liberty, Venezuela

On November 17, 2025, the IACHR granted precautionary measures to nine foreign nationals deprived of their liberty in Venezuela, after considering that their situation is serious and urgent, given that their rights to life and personal integrity are at risk of irreparable harm in the country.

The requests alleged that the foreign nationals were deprived of liberty in 2025 and are at risk in their current conditions of detention, characterized by a lack of information about their legal situation, incommunicado detention, limitations on their ability to obtain private defense counsel or access consular assistance, and, in general, a lack of official information about their current situation and health. In all cases, it was alleged that, initially, the whereabouts of the individuals were unknown after their detention. To date, only Olmedo Javier Núñez Peñalba remains missing. For its part, the State did not provide information to the IACHR. Under these circumstances, based on Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure, the Commission requests that Venezuela:

a. adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life and personal integrity of the beneficiaries;

b. report whether Olmedo Javier Núñez Peñalba is in the custody of the State and, if so, indicate the place, reason, and circumstances of his detention; or, the measures taken to determine his whereabouts or fate;

c. implement sufficient measures to ensure that the detention conditions of the beneficiaries are compatible with applicable international standards. In particular, the following:

   i. indicate whether they have been charged with crimes and whether they have been brought before a competent court to review their detention, if so, expressly mention the court that would hear their criminal cases, or if they have not appeared before a court, clarify the reason why they have not done so;
   ii. facilitate the communication of the beneficiaries with their family, representatives, trusted lawyers, and consular authorities of the country of which they are nationals, and give them full access to their judicial records, if any;
   iii. carry out a health assessment of the beneficiaries, as appropriate, and provide them with the prescribed medical treatment;

iv. communicate whether the beneficiaries have been provided, as appropriate, access to a translator or interpreter in order to take accurate knowledge of their situation and exercise their rights;
v. enable them to have communication with the country of which they are nationals;

d. reinforce actions in favor of individuals located in a detention centers covered by inter-American protection previously granted;

e. consult and agree upon the measures to be implemented with the beneficiaries and their representatives; and,

f. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged events that gave rise to this resolution, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 83/25 (GRANTED)
PM 1375-25, 1385-25, 1573-25 - Macario Bonifacio González Arias, his family unit, Enrique Octavio Márquez Pérez, Merys Torres de Sequea, and Ana Zoris Gutiérrez Torres, Venezuela

On November 17, 2025, the IACHR granted precautionary measures to Macario Bonifacio González Arias, his immediate family, Enrique Octavio Márquez Pérez, Merys Torres de Sequea, and Ana Zoris Gutiérrez Torres; after considering that they are in a serious and urgent situation, given that their rights to life, personal integrity, and health are at risk of irreparable harm in Venezuela.

According to the requests, the whereabouts of Macario Bonifacio González Arias, Merys Torres de Sequea, and Ana Zoris Gutiérrez Torres are unknown following their detention in September 2025. Enrique Octavio Márquez Pérez remains incommunicado, with no information about his conditions of detention or state of health, following his detention in January 2025. The wife, daughter, and granddaughter of Macario Bonifacio González Arias are reportedly being harassed and monitored by state agents. For its part, the State did not provide information to the IACHR. Under these circumstances, based on Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure, the Commission requests that Venezuela:

a. adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life, personal integrity, and health of the beneficiaries;

b. report whether Macario Bonifacio González Arias, Merys Torres de Sequea, and Ana Zoris Gutiérrez Torres are in the custody of the State and, if so, indicate the place, reason, and circumstances of their detention; or else, the measures taken to determine their whereabouts or fate;

c. implement sufficient measures to ensure that the detention conditions of Enrique Octavio Márquez Pérez, and of Macario Bonifacio González Arias, Merys Torres de Sequea, and Ana Zoris Gutiérrez Torres, if they are in detention, are compatible with applicable international standards. In particular, the following:

i. facilitate communication with their family members, representatives and trusted lawyers, giving them full access to the judicial file, if any;
ii. indicate whether they have been charged with crimes and whether they have been brought before a competent court to review their detention, if so, expressly mention the court that has oversight of their criminal cases, or if they have not appeared before a court, clarify the reason why they have not done so;
iii. immediately carry out a medical assessment on their health situation, and guarantee timely and specialized medical care and treatment, informing their family members and representatives of the results;

d. take the necessary measures to ensure that Anabella Liliana Machado Astudillo, María Verónica González Machado, and M.A.C.G. are not subjected to threats, harassment, intimidation or acts of violence;

e. consult and agree upon the measures to be implemented with the beneficiaries and their representatives; and

f. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged facts that gave rise to this resolution, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 85/25 (LIFTED)
PM 70-19 - Juan Gerardo Guaidó Márquez, his family, and others, Venezuela

The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) decides to lift these precautionary measures in favor of Juan Gerardo Guaidó Márquez, his family, Roberto Marrero, and Sergio Vergara, in the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela. At the time of making the decision, the Commission assessed that the beneficiaries' representation expressly requested the lifting of the precautionary measures, and that Juan Guaidó and Roberto Marrero are outside Venezuelan territory, and that it has no information on Sergio Vergara since 2019. Taking into account the nature of the precautionary measures and in light of the information available, the Commission considers that at this time it is not possible to establish a threatening situation under the terms of Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure, and decides to lift the measures at hand.

Resolution No. 90/25 (GRANTED)
PM 1752-25 - Xiomara del Carmen Ortiz Rivero, Venezuela

On December 11, 2025, the IACHR granted precautionary measures to Xiomara del Carmen Ortiz Rivero, after considering that she is in a serious and urgent situation, given that her rights to life, personal integrity, and health are at risk of irreparable harm in Venezuela.

According to the request, the beneficiary served as parish coordinator for the Vente Venezuela party in Lara state. She was reportedly detained by state agents on October 13, 2025, and currently remains without access to family visits and without information about her current state of health or the conditions of her detention. For its part, the State did not provide information to the IACHR. Under these circumstances, based on Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure, the Commission requests that Venezuela:

a. adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life, personal integrity, and health of Xiomara del Carmen Ortiz Rivero;

b. implement sufficient measures to ensure that the beneficiary's detention conditions are compatible with applicable international standards. In particular, the following:

   i. facilitate contact with her family members, representatives, and trusted attorneys, and give them full access to the judicial file;
   ii. officially report the legal situation in the framework of the criminal process in which she is allegedly involved, and whether she has been presented to a court for review of her detention;
   iii. immediately carry out a medical assessment of her health situation, and guarantee timely and specialized medical care and treatment, making the results known to her family members and representatives;

c. adopt the necessary measures so that the beneficiary can carry out her political activities, without being subjected to threats, harassment, intimidation, or acts of violence;

d. consult and agree upon the measures to be implemented with the beneficiaries and their representatives; and,

e. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged events that led to this resolution, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 91/25 (GRANTED)
PM 1750-25 - Kevin Rafael Pérez Mendoza, Venezuela

On December 11, 2025, the IACHR granted precautionary measures to Kevin Rafael Pérez Mendoza, after considering that he is in a serious and urgent situation, given that his rights to life, personal integrity, and health are at risk of irreparable harm in Venezuela.

According to the request, the beneficiary had been deprived of his liberty since July 30, 2024. He is reportedly not receiving adequate medical care, despite repeated suicide attempts while in state custody. In addition, the request questioned his conditions of detention. For its part, the State did not provide information to the IACHR. Under these circumstances, based on Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure, the Commission requests that Venezuela:

a. adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life, personal integrity, and health of Kevin Rafael Pérez Mendoza;

b. implement the necessary measures to ensure that the beneficiary's detention conditions are compatible with the applicable international standards on the matter, including:

   i. ensure access to adequate and specialized medical care, treatments, and medications, and immediately carry out a comprehensive medical evaluation of his physical and mental health;
   ii. provide immediate access to adequate food and water;
   iii. guarantee that he is not subjected to violence, threats, intimidation, and aggression inside the prison;

c. consult and agree upon the measures to be implemented with the beneficiary and his representatives; and

d. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged facts that led to the adoption of this resolution, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

Resolution No. 96/25 (GRANTED)
PM 1824-25 - Arnaldo Méndez Silva, Venezuela

On December 21, 2025, the IACHR granted precautionary measures on behalf of Arnaldo Méndez Silva, after considering that he is in a serious and urgent situation, given that his rights to life and personal integrity are at risk of irreparable harm in Venezuela.

According to the request, the beneficiary is a labor union advisor and human rights activist. He was reportedly detained on November 26, 2025, by state agents, and his whereabouts have been unknown since then. For its part, the State did not provide any information to the IACHR. Under these circumstances, based on Article 25 of the Rules of Procedure, the Commission requests that Venezuela:

a. adopt the necessary measures to protect the rights to life and personal integrity of Arnaldo Méndez Silva. In particular:

   i. report whether the beneficiary is in the custody of the State and, if so, indicate the reason and circumstances of his detention; or, the measures taken to determine his whereabouts or fate;
   ii. if the beneficiary is in the custody of the State, indicate whether he has been charged with crimes and whether he has been brought before a competent court to review his detention, if so, expressly mention the court that hears his criminal case, if he has not appeared before a court; clarify the reason why he has not done so;

iii. facilitate the beneficiary's communication with his family, representatives, and trusted attorneys, and give them full access to his judicial file, if any;

b. implement the necessary measures so that the beneficiary can carry out his union leadership activities without being subjected to threats, harassment, intimidation, or acts of violence; and

c. report on the actions taken to investigate the alleged events that led to the adoption of this precautionary measure, so as to prevent such events from reoccurring.

5. Provisional measures

888. Provisional measures are provided for in Article 63(2) of the American Convention on Human Rights, which determines that, in situations of extreme gravity and urgency, when necessary to avoid irreparable damage to persons, the Inter-American Court of Human Rights may grant provisional measures. Following the decision of the Inter-American Court to grant a provisional measure, the Court is responsible for monitoring its implementation. Likewise, at the Court's request, the Commission continues to periodically provide observations and relevant information on the implementation of provisional measures.

889. In 2025, the IACHR submitted two new requests for provisional measures regarding Ecuador and Venezuela, and four requests for extension regarding persons deprived of liberty in Nicaragua, all of which were granted by the Inter-American Court:

- Request for extension of provisional measures in favor of Catalino Leo Cárcamo in Nicaragua

On January 2, 2025, the IACHR requested that the Inter-American Court extend the provisional measures in the Matter of Juan Sebastián Chamorro et al. regarding Nicaragua in favor of Catalino Leo Cárcamo Herrera and his family, as he is in a situation of extreme gravity and urgency presenting a risk of irreparable damage to his rights.

The IACHR decided to request the extension of Mr. Chamorro's provisional measures, considering that his whereabouts are unknown after his detention on November 22, 2024. Catalino Leo Cárcamo was detained by state agents in the Department of León. Since his detention, the people associated with the beneficiary have sought to know his location before the authorities, without having obtained official information.

The Commission considered the situation of Mr. Catalino Leo Cárcamo particularly worrying given that his whereabouts are unknown after his detention in November 2024. In addition, the beneficiary is an elderly person and suffers from a series of diseases. This increases his risk in the eventual conditions of detention in prison, similar to that faced by other persons deprived of liberty in Nicaragua who are beneficiaries of provisional measures issued by the Court.

The Court decided to adopt urgent measures on January 6, 2025.[236]

- Request for extension of provisional measures in favor of persons deprived of liberty in Nicaragua

On February 19, 2025, the IACHR requested that the Inter-American Court extend the provisional measures in the Matter of Juan Sebastián Chamorro et al. regarding Nicaragua in favor of six persons deprived of their liberty, who are in a situation of extreme gravity and urgency of irreparable damage to their rights.

The IACHR decided to request the extension of provisional measures for: Eddie Moisés González Valdivia; Steadman Fagot Muller; Eveling Carolina Matus Hernández; Lesbia del Socorro Gutiérrez Poveda; (5) Carmen María Sáenz Martínez; and Víctor Boitano Coleman. All these individuals are beneficiaries of precautionary measures. With regard to Eddie Moisés, the Commission found that his conditions of detention place him at extreme risk. With regard to the other individuals, there is no official information on their whereabouts or their conditions of detention and health following their detention or transfer to a prison.

Despite the Commission's repeated efforts to obtain information from the State of Nicaragua throughout the time the precautionary measures have been in force, it has not received a response indicating that appropriate and effective measures have been taken to mitigate the risk. There is also no information on concertation actions or measures to investigate the threatening events.

The Court extended the provisional measures on March 5, 2025.[237]

- Request for extension of provisional measures in favor of three persons deprived of liberty in Nicaragua

On May 20, 2025, the IACHR requested that the Inter-American Court extend the provisional measures in the Matter of Juan Sebastián Chamorro et al. regarding Nicaragua in order to protect Angélica Patricia Chavarría Altamirano, Julio Antonio Quintana Carvajal, and José Alejandro Hurtado Díaz, who are in a situation of extreme gravity and urgency of irreparable damage to their rights.

The IACHR granted precautionary measures to the three identified persons, upon finding that the requirements of gravity, urgency, and irreparable damage were met. Despite the actions taken to obtain information from the State of Nicaragua, the Commission has not received a response indicating that appropriate and effective measures have been taken to mitigate the risk, nor has it received any information on concerted actions or measures to investigate the events posing a risk.

The beneficiaries were detained between May 2024 and January 2025, in the context of the criminalization of any person identified or perceived as critical of or opposed to the current government and, in general, of various civil society actors who attempt to participate in public, social, political, or religious life in Nicaragua. Several months after the detention of the proposed beneficiaries, their families still have no access to official information about their whereabouts, the reasons for their detention, or their state of health. It was also noted that people close to those identified have suffered reprisals from state authorities for trying to find out their whereabouts or for publishing information about them.

The Commission notes that this request shows an exceptional situation that is based on the extreme, urgent, and irreparable risk to the rights of the three individuals, and that must be assessed in the context of Nicaragua, which has been the subject of ongoing analysis by the Organization of American States, the Commission, and other human rights bodies.

On June 11, 2025, the Court extended the provisional measures.[238]

- Request for provisional measures in favor of Jorge Glas in Ecuador

On July 1, 2025, the IACHR requested provisional measures in favor of Jorge David Glas Espinel in Ecuador, after considering that he is in a situation of extreme gravity and urgency of irreparable damage to his rights to life, personal integrity, and health.

Jorge Glas is a former vice president of Ecuador. He is being held at the Guayas No. 3 Detention Center (CPL) in Guayaquil.

As background, the Commission granted precautionary measures in his favor on December 31, 2019. Subsequently, after considering the information, reports, documentary evidence, and claims of the parties between April 2024 and February 2025, the IACHR issued Follow-up and Extension Resolution No. 13/2025 on February 10, 2025, requiring the State to take immediate measures to safeguard the life, health, and integrity of Jorge Glas. This was based on the medical diagnosis and suicide attempt of April 7, 2024, as well as the impact of the detention and security conditions at CPL Guayas No. 3 on his mental health, as verified by the IACHR during its on-site visit in October 2024, and the available medical documentation.

Among the measures the IACHR requested to the State are the following: that the proposed beneficiary be immediately transferred to a hospital for a complete medical evaluation; his transfer to a new detention center, other than CPL Guayas No. 3, that complies with the standards applicable to his health situation; that the "Technical Table" be resumed with the participation of trusted doctors to resolve medical disputes and provide adequate treatment; that access to the proposed beneficiary's medical information be allowed in a timely manner; and that the corresponding judicial investigations into the events that led to the adoption of the precautionary measures be continued.

The Court granted the provisional measures on October 17, 2025.[239]

- Request for provisional measures in favor of Juan Pablo Guanipa in Venezuela

The IACHR asked the Inter-American Court to grant provisional measures in favor of Juan Pablo Guanipa Villalobos, who is in a situation of extreme gravity and urgency of irreparable damage to his rights, as his whereabouts are unknown after being detained by state agents in Venezuela.

Juan Pablo Guanipa Villalobos is a member of the political opposition in Venezuela and has been the coordinator of the Primero Justicia political party in Zulia state since 2000. In the framework of the presidential elections of July 28, 2024, and in the period following those elections, he was an important ally of opposition leaders María Corina Machado and Edmundo Gonzalez. According to the information provided, both in previous years and during the electoral and post-electoral period, Guanipa has been the target of state persecution in the exercise of his political activities.

As background, the IACHR granted precautionary measures in favor of Juan Pablo Guanipa Villalobos on October 7, 2024, through Resolution 71/2024. Despite repeated actions by the Commission to obtain information from the State of Venezuela, it did not receive any response on the measures adopted to protect the life and integrity of Juan Pablo Guanipa.

As a beneficiary of precautionary measures, Juan Pablo Guanipa was detained by state agents on May 23, 2025, information that has been confirmed in public statements by senior Venezuelan officials. Following his detention and given the lack of information on his whereabouts in state custody, the State continues to fail to respond to the IACHR.

[239] I/A Court H.R., Matter of Glas Espinal regarding Ecuador, Provisional Measures, Order of October 17, 2025 (Available only in Spanish).

The Court granted the provisional measures on October 15, 2025.[240]

- Request for extension of provisional measures in favor of three persons deprived of liberty in Nicaragua

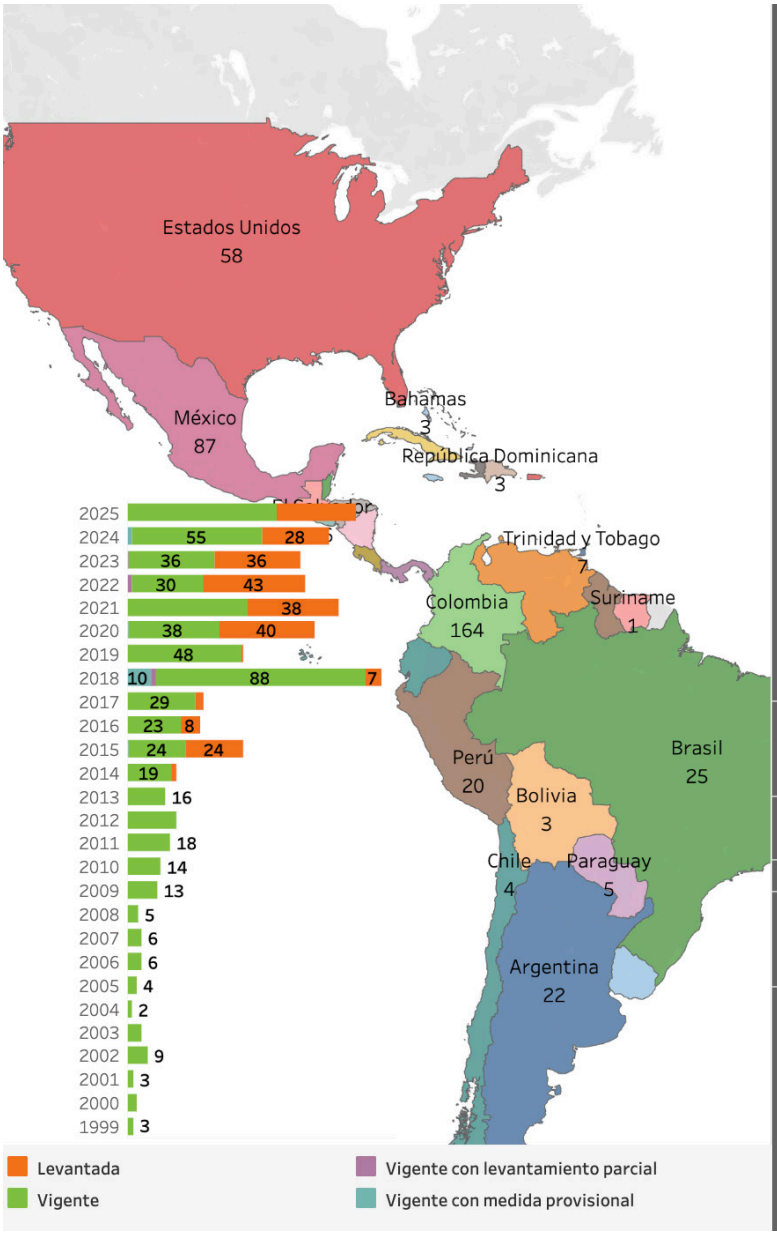
On September 18, 2025, the IACHR requested that the Inter-American Court extend the provisional measures in the Matter of Juan Sebastián Chamorro et al. regarding Nicaragua in order to protect Douglas Gamaliel Pérez Centeno, Aníbal Martín Rivas Reed, and Mario José Rodríguez Serrano, who are in a situation of extreme gravity and urgency of irreparable damage to their rights.

The IACHR granted precautionary measures to the three identified persons, upon finding that the requirements of gravity, urgency, and irreparable damage were met. Despite the actions taken to obtain information from the State of Nicaragua, the Commission has not received a response indicating that appropriate and effective measures have been taken to mitigate the risk, nor has it received any information on concerted actions or measures to investigate the events posing a risk.

Douglas Gamaliel Pérez Centeno, Aníbal Martín Rivas Reed, and Mario José Rodríguez Serrano were detained in 2024 and 2025, in the context of the criminalization of people identified or perceived as critics or opponents of the current government and, in general, of various actors in civil society who attempt to participate in public, social, political, or religious life in Nicaragua.

At the time of submitting this request, Douglas Gamaliel Pérez Centeno and Mario José Rodríguez Serrano remain missing after their detention, and Aníbal Martín Rivas Reed is being held in solitary confinement at La Modelo prison, with restrictions on visits from close family members, after his whereabouts were unknown for more than 30 days and allegations of a lack of adequate medical care for his physical and mental health.

890. The Court extended the provisional measures on October 1, 2025.[241]



891. During 2025, the Commission also submitted 87 legal briefs on provisional measures to the Inter-American Court.

6. Dissemination and transparency

892. Efforts to disseminate information about the precautionary measures mechanism and transparency regarding its operation continued in 2025 with a view to increasing awareness among users of the inter-American system. To that end, the Commission kept the section of its website on precautionary measures up to date, publishing the resolutions adopted in the available translations. In addition, the IACHR updated its interactive map of precautionary measures, which compiles information on the resolutions issued by the Commission in this area, presenting qualitative and quantitative information regarding the precautionary measures granted, subject to follow-up and extension, or lifted.

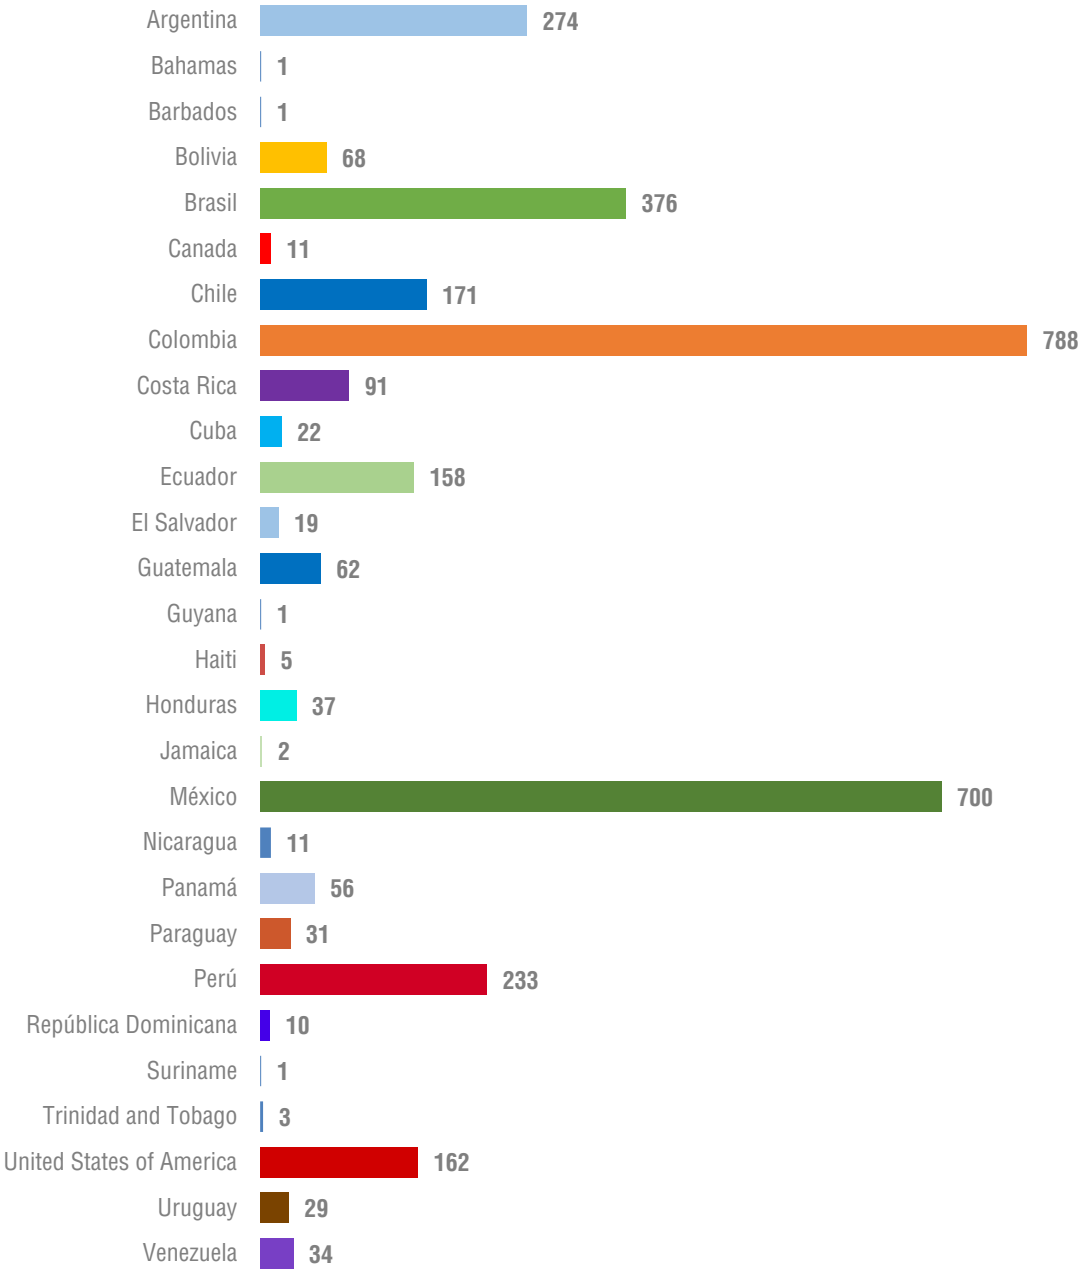
893. The Commission also disseminated information on precautionary measures through the publication of 77 press releases. In these, the IACHR makes public information regarding resolutions to grant, extend, modify, and follow up on precautionary measures (65 press releases), disseminates its work on requests for provisional measures before the Inter-American Court (six press releases), and monitors precautionary measures in force (four press releases), in some cases publishing jointly with the thematic and country rapporteurships.



894. With regard to training on precautionary measures, in 2025 courses were held in Brasilia, Tegucigalpa, Guatemala, Bogotá, and Cali; as well as two virtual courses for students, staff of international organizations, civil society organizations, and government officers. Such training sessions may focus on the process of requesting precautionary measures, on monitoring existing measures, or on both.

CHAPTER III

ACTIVITIES OF THE THEMATIC AND COUNTRY RAPPORTEURSHIPS, AND PROMOTION AND TRAINING ACTIVITIES

I. PART A. ACTIVITIES OF THE THEMATIC AND COUNTRY RAPPORTEURSHIPS

1. The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (the Commission or the IACHR) carries out its functions of observation and monitoring of specific human rights issues through its country rapporteurships and thematic rapporteurships. These functions are performed in the countries of the region in different ways, including through in loco visits, working visits, press releases, requests for information to the States (letters based on Article 41 of the American Convention on Human Rights [1] and Article 18 of the Statute of the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights[2]), among other instruments.

2. Additionally, the Commission carries out training and promotion activities by means of its special work units —and many times in conjunction with the rapporteurships— as part of their dissemination and training efforts to promote the inter-American human rights standards created through the Inter-American Human Rights System (IAHRS) doctrine and jurisprudence. Their purpose is to help civil society, networks of social players and member states to better understand these standards and to apply and incorporate them into national decisions, regulatory frameworks and public policy with a focus on human rights. In the Commission's view, strengthening state institutions is the foundation for the realization of human rights in the countries of the region.

3. As for the rapporteurships, they were appointed by the Inter-American Commission starting in 1990 and are aimed at serving certain individuals, groups and collectives that are particularly exposed to human rights violations due to their vulnerability and the historical discrimination against them. The purpose of having thematic rapporteurships is to strengthen, foster and systematize the work of the Inter-American Commission on specific issues, and to raise awareness of human rights among the peoples of the Americas[3]. The rapporteurships also support the Commission's work in developing legal standards; contribute to the dissemination of the inter-American system mechanisms; and promote access to national and international justice for individuals, groups and collectives related to their thematic focus. The Commission's rapporteurships work in close collaboration with different sectors from their particular fields of expertise, including the rapporteurships of the United Nations and other universal mechanisms, civil society organizations, States, academia, among others.

4. The thematic rapporteurships are governed by Article 15 of the Commission's Rules of Procedure[4], as well as by the practices established by the Commission's Plenary. The Commission approves the reports and work plans of each rapporteurship and oversees the day-to-day execution of their mandates. Since these are specialized thematic offices created by the Commission itself, its Rules of Procedure precisely regulate their creation and the election of thematic rapporteurs. The Rules of Procedure also govern the functions of the Commission in which its rapporteurships participate. These important sets of practices and regulations govern the conduct of rapporteurships and establish rigorous procedures for action.

[3] See: OAS, Statute of the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights, adopted in 1979, Article 18 (a).
[4] See, IACHR, Rules of Procedure of the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights, Article 15.

5. Thematic rapporteurships collaborate in the fulfillment of the Commission's main function of advocating for and defending human rights and serve as a consultative body of the OAS to this end[5]. In this regard, they may request information from the States' governments[6] and produce reports on the human rights measures they adopt[7]. They also issue recommendations for the implementation of progressive measures to promote human rights, in accordance with the mandate of the Commission[8]. The rapporteurs also prepare studies and reports, relevant to their thematic functions[9]. Additionally, as part of their work, the rapporteurs may conduct working visits to the States and participate in in loco visits by the Commission, with the consent of or invitation from the relevant government[10].

6. The Commission currently has eleven thematic rapporteurships:

- Rapporteurship on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples (1990);
- Rapporteurship on the Rights of Women (1994);
- Rapporteurship on Human Mobility (1996);
- Rapporteurship on the Rights of the Child (1998);
- Rapporteurship on Human Rights Defenders and Justice Operators (2011[11]);
- Rapporteurship on the Rights of Persons Deprived of Liberty (2004);
- Rapporteurship on the Rights of Afro-Descendants and against Racial Discrimination (2005);
- Rapporteurship on the Rights of Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual, Trans and Intersex Persons (2014);
- Rapporteurship on Memory, Truth and Justice (2019[12]);
- Rapporteurship on the Rights of Older Persons (2019); and
- Rapporteurship on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities (2019).

7. The Commission also has the authority to create special rapporteurships headed by other persons designated by the Commission itself.[13] It is within this framework that, since 1997, there has been an Office of the Special Rapporteur for Freedom of Expression (SRFOE)[14]. This is a permanent office, with independent operations and functions, working within the legal framework of the Commission.

8. On April 3, 2014, the Commission decided to create an Office of the Special Rapporteur on Economic, Social, Cultural and Environmental Rights (REDESCA), considering the interdependent and indivisible nature of human rights and the importance of the protection and promotion of economic, social and cultural rights in the region. By appointing this new rapporteur, the Commission sought to reinforce and deepen its work in the defense and protection of economic, social and cultural rights in the Americas. This special rapporteurship was created as part of the process of strengthening the inter-American system, since both OAS member states and other parties of the inter-American system had expressed their interest in directing greater attention to the issue of economic, social and cultural rights. This process resulted in the Commission promoting specialized institutional spaces. It was during its 146th regular period of sessions, held from October 29 to November 16, 2012, that the Commission established the Unit on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights (ESCR Unit), which later became the current Office of the Special Rapporteur on Economic, Social, Cultural and Environmental Rights (REDESCA).

9. Regarding the latest changes in the structure of the thematic rapporteurships, it should be noted that the mandate of the Rapporteurship on the Rights of Persons Deprived of Liberty was expanded to include the prevention of and fight against torture, and the mandate of the Rapporteurship on Human Rights Defenders was expanded to include the situation of justice operators. Finally, it should be noted that in 2024 the IACHR decided to change the name of the "Rapporteurship on the Rights of Migrants" to "Rapporteurship on Human Mobility" in order to reinforce the broad scope of its mandate.

10. By virtue of their mandates, rapporteurships have promoted initiatives on priority issues in the region relevant to their focal areas. These regional initiatives have been strengthened by means of participatory information-gathering processes, in which the views of States and the civil society were included; the preparation and presentation of regional reports on pressing issues; outreach activities to disseminate knowledge of the inter-American system standards; questionnaires and consultations with experts; thematic hearings and working visits; press releases; and other mechanisms. As for individual cases, the rapporteurships participate and play a key role in the specialized processing of individual petitions regarding human rights violations received by the Commission. They also take part in the analysis of requests for precautionary measures and provide support in hearings and friendly settlements.

11. As part of their role in monitoring and protecting human rights, the Commission's thematic rapporteurships strive to consistently work in an articulated and strategic manner, taking into consideration intersectionality and the fact that certain individuals, groups and collectives are at an increased risk of human rights violations in the hemisphere. In addition, over the years, the rapporteurships have identified issues that require cross-cutting and joint action by the different thematic specialists, such as those involving indigenous women or migrants deprived of liberty, among others, which has led to initiatives based on the interaction of the different thematic rapporteurships.

12. In light of the foregoing and considering the many different observation, monitoring, promotion and training activities of the Commission's rapporteurships, this chapter has been divided into two sections: the first one addresses human rights observation and monitoring activities carried out by the Commission through in loco and working visits, press releases, requests for information and thematic and country reports (A), and the second one reports on training and promotion activities (B).

A. IACHR observation and monitoring activities in 2025

1. In loco visits

13. During this period, the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights did not conduct in loco visits.

2. Working, promotional and technical cooperation visits

14. During this period, the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights conducted 13 working, promotional and technical cooperation visits.

- Working visit to Panama

15. The Commission conducted a working visit to Panama between February 10 and February 13, 2025, with the main purpose of observing the situation of people in the context of human mobility in transit through Panama, from a regional perspective, as well as to receive information on the measures adopted by the State for the protection of the human rights of this population.

16. The delegation was led by Commissioners Gloria Monique de Mees, Rapporteur for Panama, and Andrea Pochak, Rapporteur for Human Mobility, accompanied by specialists from the Executive Secretariat.

17. During the visit, the Delegation held 12 meetings with high-level authorities and representatives of the Executive Branch, the Attorney General's Office, the Ombudsman's Office, with different civil society organizations, representatives of indigenous communities, human rights defenders, persons in human mobility, and United Nations agencies. The Delegation also visited the Temporary Migrant Reception Stations (ETRM) of Lajas Blancas and San Vicente in the Province of Darién, as well as the Male Administrative Detention Center in Panama City, and interviewed persons in human mobility. Similarly, the delegation visited the transitional shelter for unaccompanied children in human mobility, called La Casita. It also visited the Bajo Chiquito indigenous community, in the Emberá-Wounaan region, where the delegation was able to observe the dynamics of the community and the State's response to the transit of people.

18. The Commission issued the Press release No. 066/25 and its observations on the visit. A fact sheet on the visit is included in the table below.

- Working visit to Colombia

19. The Commission conducted a working visit to Bogotá, Colombia between March 11 and March 13, 2025, with the main purpose of collecting the testimonies of Venezuelan people in mobility and presenting the report: "Venezuela: Serious human rights violations in connection with the elections" before Venezuelan journalists and human rights advocates living in the country. This visit was conducted within the framework of the efforts of the Commission to document human rights violations in connection with the elections and to reinforce the promotion of its findings and recommendations.

20. During the visit, the Delegation participated in high impact encounters, including a round table with eleven exiled Venezuelan journalists. These activities allowed to gather updated information on the situation of freedom of expression in Venezuela, strengthen the role of the IACHR as a key actor in denouncing human rights violations, and socialize the main conclusions of the report with journalists and representatives of the European diplomatic service with presence in Colombia.

3. Press releases

55. As part of its mandate to monitor the situation of human rights in the Americas, during 2025, the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights issued 124 press releases, among the 291 published during the year. Through these, the Commission had the opportunity to take a stand on specific situations regarding human rights violations as well as on emerging and structural crises; to reinforce the promotion of and adherence to inter-American standards; and to recognize States' good practices. This contributed to strengthening the Commission's position in favor of the protection of human rights. Through this mechanism, the Commission addressed the situation of human rights in 23 countries of the region (Argentina, Bahamas, Bolivia, Brazil, Canada, Colombia, Dominica, Ecuador, El Salvador, United States, Guatemala, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Mexico, Nicaragua, Panama, Peru, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Santa Lucia, Trinidad and Tobago and Venezuela).

56. Through press releases and statements on social media, the Commission has addressed all of the issues defined as priorities in its Strategic Plan.

57. In 2025, the Commission paid special attention to the rights of women, through at least six press releases, which addressed substantive equality and the eradication of gender-based violence. Some of these press releases highlight the need to develop a gender-based approach for all women, girls and adolescents; prevent maternal mortality among indigenous women and eradicate violence against women, girls and teenagers with sensory disability. The Commission also emphasized the obligation of the States to adopt comprehensive legal frameworks, cross-sectoral public policies and accessible and non-discriminatory services, as well as to remove the structural barriers that reproduce patterns of inequality and violence.

58. As regards the rights of girls, boys and adolescents, the IACHR issued at least seven press releases, which highlighted the need to consolidate comprehensive protection systems with a community approach, prevent and eradicate child, early and forced marriages and unions, and guarantee violence-free environments in family, educational and institutional spaces. The Commission urged the States to adopt legislative, administrative and budget measures focused on guaranteeing the comprehensive protection of children, including effective mechanisms to prevent, report, investigate and punish violence, as well as age-appropriate psychosocial support and access to justice services.

59. The Commission also paid constant attention to the rights of persons in the context of human mobility, including migrants, refugees, asylum seekers, displaced people and returnees. Through at least seven press releases, the Commission, together with United Nations experts and other regional mechanisms, urged the States to protect the rights of persons in human mobility, guarantee the effective protection of refugees and avoid regulatory and practical setbacks that may worsen the vulnerable situation of these people. The Commission also addressed the need to develop measures and reforms in terms of human mobility in specific countries and reminded the obligation to abide by the principle of non-refoulement, guarantee access to fair and efficient procedures and the prohibition of arbitrary migration-related detentions.

60. Regarding the rights of lesbian, gay, bisexual, trans and intersex persons, the Commission issued at least eight press releases to give visibility to the impacts of violence and structural discrimination and urge the States to adopt comprehensive protection measures. These press releases included calls to guarantee an effective response to violence against trans people; to respect the rights of intersex persons in medical contexts; to guarantee the right to health of trans and diverse gender persons; and to protect the rights of LGBT persons, strengthening their participation and avoiding surveillance or criminalization-based approaches. Through these releases, the Commission reminded of the prohibition of non-consensual medical practices, the standards regarding gender-identity recognition and the need to eradicate prejudices and hate speech from all environments.

61. The Commission monitored the situation of the rights of Afro-descendants and the fight against racial discrimination through at least four press releases highlighting, among other things, the obligation of the States to guarantee climate justice for people of African descent and to adopt measures to ensure equality and freedom of structural discrimination. In these releases, the Commission underscored the interrelation between racism, poverty, socio-economic exclusion and climate impacts, as well as the need for the States to incorporate the ethnic-racial perspective in their public policies, especially in terms of development, environment, citizen security and access to justice.

62. The Commission also focused on the rights of indigenous peoples and issued at least five press releases focused on the protection of their territories, natural resources and lifestyles, as well as on the prevention of violence and cross-sector discrimination. Among other things, the IACHR and the Office of the Special Rapporteur on Economic, Social, Cultural and Environmental Rights (REDESCA) made an urgent call to respect the rights of indigenous peoples in the face of the impacts caused by extractive industries and welcomed state measures that strengthen the right to self-determination of indigenous peoples. In these releases, the Commission reminded the principles of consultation and free, prior and informed consent, and the obligation of the states to prevent and sanction violence and aggressions against indigenous leaders and communities.

63. As regards the situation of people with disabilities, the IACHR issued at least five press releases that addressed the subject of political participation, deinstitutionalization and violence from an intersectional approach. The Commission called on the States to guarantee the equal participation of people with disabilities in political affairs; to adopt measures for their deinstitutionalization and transition to community services and supports; and to put an end to violence against women, girls and adolescents with sensory disability. The IACHR also published a specific report on the rights of people with disabilities, which focused on recommendations on accessibility, supports for making decisions and the need to have suitable physical and social environments.

64. Likewise, the Commission emphasized the rights of older persons through at least five press releases. These releases made a call to guarantee the safety of older people in face of the climate emergency, to eradicate abuse and violence against them and to adopt protection measures in care facilities. The Commission also addressed the compliance by the States of the region with the Inter-American Convention on Protecting the Human Rights of Older Persons, highlighting the importance of consolidating the autonomy, independence and full participation of older persons in all aspects of social, political and community life.

65. With respect to the rights of persons deprived of liberty, the Commission issued at least six press releases to shed light on conditions of detention, situations of torture and abuse, as well as the rights of the people with affective ties to persons deprived of liberty. The Commission adopted a specific resolution on the rights of family members and persons with affective ties of persons deprived of liberty and addressed cases of forced disappearances and serious violations to the integrity of persons in contexts of deprivation of liberty. In these releases, the IACHR reminded the standards on the prevention of torture, due diligence in the course of investigations and the obligation to guarantee detention conditions that respect the value of human dignity.

66. In relation to economic, social, cultural and environmental rights, the Commission, through the REDESCA and other mechanisms, issued at least six press releases which highlighted the interrelationship between social rights and the climate crisis, access to health and other aspects of well-being. These releases made a call to guarantee climate justice for people and communities in a special vulnerable situation, such as indigenous peoples, persons of African descent and older persons, and emphasized the obligation to guarantee the right to health of trans and diverse gender persons. The Commission underscored the obligation of the States to adopt structural measures to face climate emergency, strengthen the health and social protection systems and guarantee equality in access to essential goods and services.

67. The IACHR also made repeated statements on the situation of human rights defenders, through at least four press releases, including the publication of the Third Report on the Situation of Human Rights Defenders in the Americas. Through these statements, the Commission emphasized the need to protect the civic space, guarantee the security of human right defenders and prevent criminalization and attacks against them. In this context, the Commission urged the States to adopt legislative frameworks and comprehensive protection policies, duly investigate attacks against human right defenders and publicly acknowledge the legitimacy of their work.

68. As for memory, truth and justice, the Commission issued at least three press releases, which followed up on the central importance of clarification and accountability processes in connection to serious human right violations. Together with experts of the United Nations, the IACHR called on the States to strengthen their efforts in terms of memory, truth and justice and issued statements on emblematic cases, reminding the obligations of search, investigation, sanction and integral reparation. These press releases highlighted the importance of preventing impunity, guaranteeing the participation of victims and their families and consolidating public policies on memory that incorporate intersectional and gender-based perspectives.

69. In terms of democracy and rule of law, the IACHR issued at least seven press releases warning about electoral reforms, impact of the balance of powers and restrictions of civic space in different countries in the region. Among other things, the Commission raised its concerns on electoral reform processes, undefined presidential reelections and situations that might weaken judicial independence and democratic institutions. The Commission reminded that respect for the separation of powers, legality and political participation, as well as guarantees for the opposition and civil society are essential elements of democracy, and issued specific recommendations to prevent authoritative setbacks and strengthen the rule of law.

70. Likewise, the IACHR addressed the issue of freedom of expression through specific press releases and joint statements with its Office of the Special Rapporteur for Freedom of Expression (SRFOE), which condemned attacks against journalists and means of communication, as well as restrictions to the exercise of the right to social protest. These press releases reminded of the importance of guaranteeing a safe and favorable environment for independent journalism, preventing and sanctioning violence against communicators and journalists and guaranteeing that security or public order policing measures are not used to inhibit the democratic debate or criticism of authorities.

71. Finally, the Commission followed up on human rights crisis situations in specific countries, through press releases in which it raised its concern over serious human rights violations, excessive use of force, deadly violence, violations of judicial independence, prolonged states of exception and consolidation of authoritative patterns. The IACHR published reports on the human rights situation in certain countries, condemned acts of violence and called on the States to adopt urgent measures to prevent new violations, guarantee the protection of the affected population and promote processes of truth, justice and reparation. As a whole, 2025 press releases were a key tool for early action, visibility of risks and articulation of specific recommendations aimed at strengthening the effect of human rights in the Americas.

4. Requests for information

72. In fulfilling its observation and monitoring functions of the human rights situation in the Americas, in 2025 the Commission sent 96 letters requesting information to the States in the region, in accordance with Article 41 of the American Convention on Human Rights and Article 18 of the Statute of the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights. Through this follow-up mechanism, the Commission paid particular attention to specific situations, collected relevant information for the early identification of risks and strengthened its analysis of structural and emerging trends in human rights issues.

73. The requests for information sent over the year addressed several priority topics, in line with those developed through press releases and other monitoring mechanisms of the Commission. Of particular note were requests for information on topics such as the rights of women, girls and adolescents, including access to justice with gender perspective, eradication of gender-based violence, early marriages and unions, obstetric violence and sexual and reproductive rights.

74. Likewise, the Commission requested information on the situation of indigenous peoples, including violations of their territorial rights, reports of restrictions to the exercise of indigenous leadership and the impact of legislative or administrative decisions on their collective rights. In line with the special attention to the rights of persons in human mobility, the IACHR also requested information about migration policies, situations of expulsion and return, as well as the protection of migrants, refugees and asylum seekers.

75. During the course of 2025, the Commission also requested information about the situation of persons deprived of liberty, social reinsertion processes and the situation of trans persons in contexts of deprivation of liberty, as well as scenarios related to citizen security, states of exception and use of force by state agents.

76. As regards the protection of the right of freedom of expression, the Commission, through its Office of the Special Rapporteur for Freedom of Expression, sent requests for information to different States in connection to reports of aggression against journalists, judicial and administrative processes against communicators, legislative projects that could affect the exercise of journalism and guarantees for access to public information. The purpose of these requests was to assess possible impacts on the democratic debate, the civic space and the work of independent press.

77. Additionally, the IACHR sent questionnaires and requests for information of a regional scope to several member States, with the purpose of collecting information for the preparation of studies and thematic reports on different subjects, such as access to justice with gender perspective and social reintegration in Latin America and the Caribbean, which allowed to obtain compared information about the legislative frameworks, public policies and state practices in the region.

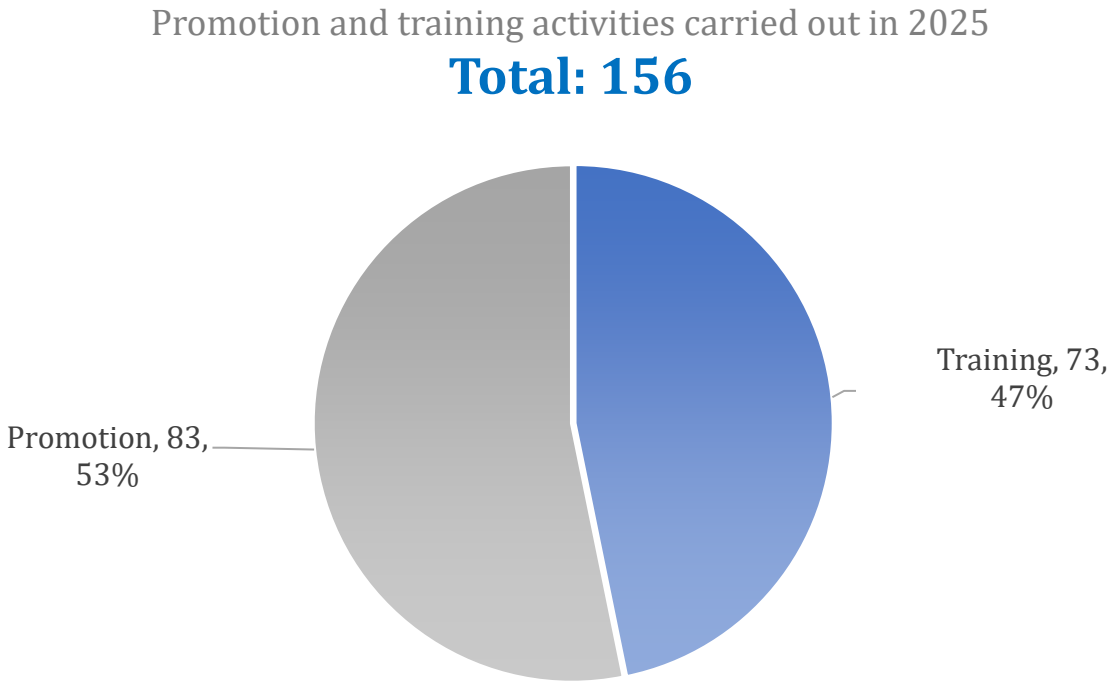
II. PART B. PROMOTION AND TRAINING ACTIVITIES

80. The Inter-American Commission carries out its mandate to promote human rights in the region in keeping with the Charter of the Organization and the American Convention on Human Rights, as well as its Statute and Rules of Procedure. In this regard, it raises public awareness about human rights in the countries of the Americas, and it recommends measures that contribute to their protection to OAS Member States.

81. Within that framework, the Commission conducts its promotion and training activities on its working mechanisms and the inter-American human rights standards that have been established through the doctrine and jurisprudence of the Inter-American Human Rights System. The aim is to further a deeper understanding on the part of civil society, the networks of social actors and the member states about their scope and, as relevant, about their application to and incorporation into decisions, regulatory frameworks and public policies with a human rights perspective.



82. In 2025, with the implementation of the new 2023–2027 Strategic Plan, the Commission established as one of its strategic objectives the strengthening of the capacity of state agents and civil society organizations to promote, respect and guarantee human rights. For that purpose, two programs were created; namely, Programs 20 and 21, focused on the development of an orderly strategy to disseminate information and provide training on inter-American standards and the Commission's protection mechanisms to help promote respect for human rights in the countries of the region.

83. Throughout 2025, the Commission continued to offer promotion and training activities both virtually and in person. The wide range of virtual activities enabled greater reach, dissemination and access for the public, which was able to join the events by registering for them through the Commission's channels on X, Facebook and/or YouTube[15].

84. In 2025, 156 events were held, comprising 73 training activities and 83 promotion activities, which included six webinars or report releases. In addition, the REDESCA organized a total of 47 activities, which comprised 43 promotion activities and 4 training sessions. The Office of the Special Rapporteur for Freedom of Expression (SRFOE) carried out 29 activities. Out of these, 28 were related to promotion and one to training. Out of the total activities, it is reported that 18,224 people benefited from the activities held by the Commission in 2025. Out of these, 5,737 received training and 12,487 participated in the Commission's promotion activities through different means.

85. The data presented in the previous paragraph is displayed in the graphs below:

[15]For the purposes of this report, whenever the total number of people attending promotion and/or training events virtually is mentioned, it will refer to the total that includes broadcasting media such as Zoom, Facebook, Instagram, YouTube and X.

A. Promotion activities

86. The general objective of the promotion activities is to give publicity to the standards developed by the main bodies of the Inter-American Human Rights System, as well as to the specific activities of the Commission and its decisions. These activities seek to contribute to the promotion of a culture based upon respect for and the protection of the human rights of all persons in the Americas.

87. In 2025, 83 events were held to promote and disseminate inter-American standards, reaching 12,487 people who joined them in person or virtually.

88. Examples of these promotion activities:

1. First World Congress on Enforced Disappearances

89. The IACHR participated in the First World Congress on Enforced Disappearances on January 15, 2025, an event organized by the UN Committee on Enforced Disappearances, the UN Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights. Commissioner Andrea Pochak, vice-president of the IACHR, addressed the contributions of the Inter-American Human Rights System on the protection of all the persons against enforced disappearance, as well as the future outlook in terms of enforced disappearance.

2. European Parliament's Subcommittee on Human Rights

90. As part of the activities of the European Parliament's Subcommittee on Human Rights, on April 8, 2025, there was a hearing in Brussels to analyze the situation of human rights and fundamental freedoms in Cuba. The panel had the participation of the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights, represented by its First Vice-president, Andrea Pochak, as well as defenders and international experts, including Rosa María Payá, José Daniel Ferrer and Juan Pappier, of Human Rights Watch. The hearing addressed persistent structural concerns, especially the criminalization of social protest and dissent, the restrictions to freedom of expression, the situation of persons deprived of liberty, the harassment of family members and activists and the worsening of food insecurity. The space allowed to give visibility to systematic patterns of human rights violations and strengthen the importance of scrutiny and action by the international community regarding the situation on the island.

B. Human Rights month

91. On June 5, Commissioner Roberta Clarke participated in Current Challenges and Opportunities in the Inter-American Human Rights System, organized by the American University Washington College of Law. This panel was part of the Human Rights Month, sponsored by the Academy on Human Rights and Humanitarian Law, in parallel with the Program of Advanced Studies on Human Rights and Humanitarian Law. The panel was open to the public.

1. Inter-American Standards on Sexual and Reproductive Rights

92. A panel on inter-American standards on sexual and reproductive rights was held on June 26 in Quito, Ecuador, as part of a comprehensive program funded with Canadian funds. The panel featured a recorded presentation by Roberta Clarke, rapporteur on the rights of women, and the presence of important local panelists who addressed the progress made and the current challenges in terms of sexual and reproductive rights in Ecuador. Some of the panelists were representatives of the Constitutional Court, the Ministry of Public Health and representatives of civil society organizations. The activity was organized with the collaboration of the Universidad San Francisco de Quito. More than 100 people participated in the event.

2. Inter-American Human Rights System Forum – Inter-American Court of Human Rights/Inter-American Commission on Human Rights

93. The Inter-American Human Rights Forum is a joint initiative carried out since 2017 by the IACHR and the I/A Court HR to share and promote inter-American standards on relevant subject matters for the organs of the system. This promotional activity is carried out by sharing knowledge with the different players that are part of the Inter-American Human Rights System (IAHRS) and is aimed at the general public.

94. On July 10, the seventh edition of the forum was held online, under the name Democracy in the Spotlight of Human Rights (hereinafter called, the Forum): the role of political participation, freedom of expression and independence of the judiciary, and featured welcome and closing remarks, as well as three panels of discussion with international experts. The Forum reached 8,791 persons (Zoom: 400, YouTube 895, Facebook: 7496)

95. Opening panel: Democracy in the Spotlight of Human Rights: the role of political participation, freedom of expression and independence of the judiciary. The welcome remarks presented a general vision on the three pillars of the Forum, highlighting how arbitrary expulsions, political violence and smear campaigns have affected democratic participation. It also addressed current threats to freedom of expression, such as indirect censorship and misinformation, and highlighted the importance of an independent judicial power in the face of attempts of political instrumentalization.

96. First panel: Participating in democratic life since and beyond elections. Political participation and human rights. The first panel highlighted the need to guarantee political participation, critical expression and access free of discrimination. It addressed the progress made in the jurisprudence of the Inter-American Human Rights System in terms of electoral integrity and the growing political violence and reflected on its impact on representativity and democratic quality, including the recent advisory opinion to the I/A Court H.R made by Guatemala.

97. Second panel: Democracy in Balance: The role of free speech. The panel looked into the deterioration of freedom of expression in the region, marked by legal restrictions, government surveillance and attacks on journalists and defenders. The panel also addressed the new risks associated with artificial intelligence, such as manipulation of information and polarization, highlighting the need for public policies that strengthen free and safe political spaces.

98. Third panel: Democratic Guarantees: A critical dialogue on judicial independence, and closure. This panel addressed the growing threats to judicial independence, including arbitrary dismissals, political pressures and instrumental use of the legal system. The panel emphasized how these practices affect public confidence and democratic balance and reviewed the inter-American standards that demand transparent processes and guarantees for judges and prosecutors.

99. The Forum evidenced the need to strengthen democracy in the region from a comprehensive human rights perspective. These three panels showed that political participation, freedom of expression and judicial independence are inseparable pillars whose violation endangers democratic legitimacy. The discussions allowed to identify setbacks, worrying practices and emerging challenges — such as political violence, manipulation of information and instrumentalization of justice. They also reaffirmed the commitment of the Inter-American System organs and participating actors to advance the standards, support the States and promote stronger, more transparent and inclusive institutions. This way, the Forum consolidated a space of dialogue and cooperation that makes a direct contribution to the strengthening of the democratic Rule of Law in the Americas.

3. The Delegation to the Euro-Latin American Parliamentary Assembly

100. On December 3, Commissioner Roberta Clarke spoke at the event called Human Rights Dimension of EU – Latin America Relations, organized by The Delegation to the Euro-Latin American Parliamentary Assembly, as a follow up to the EU-27 and CELAC-33 Summit of Leaders. The presentation focused on the trends and good practices that represent progress for Caribbean states in terms of human rights.

4. Cycle of dialogue with the Supreme Court of Justice of Mexico

101. Within the framework of the cooperation agreement in force between the Supreme Court of Justice of Mexico (SCJN) and the IACHR, a thematic dialogue was held on December 11 to exchange experiences, strengthen institutional dialog and promote learning and awareness spaces for the general public and justices, strengthening the understanding of the operation, the effects and importance of human rights in the subject matters addressed by the Judicial Power.

102. A virtual session was proposed for this year, with the participation of an officer of the Executive Secretariat for the Petition and Case System of the IACHR, a representative of the civil society and the head of the General Unit of Scientific Knowledge and Human Rights of the SCJN. The General Secretary of the Presidency of the SCJN opened the session, which was moderated by a representative of the SCJN. The selected theme was the comprehensive reparation of the damage, with emphasis on the coordination between public policies and the efficacy of the reparation, the inter-American standards on comprehensive reparation and its impact on collective rights, as well as the challenges and opportunities to incorporate collective reparation in Mexican jurisprudence. The event was published on the social media platforms of the IACHR and the SCJN.

103. The activity was broadcast on the social media platforms of the IACHR and the SCJN and reached a total of 484 people.

5. Webinars and report releases of the IACHR

104. There were eight webinars or report releases in 2025 – both virtual and in person –. The table below provides further information:

C. Training activities

105. The purpose of the training activities is to give to the civil society, social actors and States of the Americas a deeper understanding of the scope of the Inter-American Human Rights System, the use of its mechanisms and the application of inter-American decisions and jurisprudence, as well as their incorporation into domestic regulations, policies and practices. Likewise, through capacity building, training activities seek to contribute to the adoption of public policies and the development of a culture under a human rights-based approach.

106. The Commission continued to consolidate its catalog of free virtual, hybrid and in-person training activities during 2025, having developed a total of 73 trainings that included 11 MOOC/virtual classrooms. In 2025, the Commission trained a total of 5,737 people.

107. The Commission also offered three paid courses. The purpose of the program of paid courses is twofold: on the one hand, it aims to open courses that are already developed but cannot be implemented due to lack of funds; on the other hand, it aims to fund the reopening and review of contents of existing free courses, as well as the development of new courses. The people who attended the courses represented a diverse group: some were linked to state agencies, others were connected to civil society organizations, whereas others were students, members of academia and private individuals.

108. On the other hand, it is worth mentioning that at the end of 2025, the IACHR opened its own virtual campus, where interested persons will find all courses offered by the Commission.

109. The following is a summary of the courses that were available to the public or to specific groups and whose main purpose was to increase knowledge of the decisions, jurisprudence and mechanisms of the Inter-American Human Rights System.

1. Massive open online courses (MOOC)[16]

110. MOOC courses are designed for mass audiences, allowing people to access the platform and navigate the proposed contents as well as the suggested activities with complete autonomy, so that each participant can learn in their own time based on their availability. Such flexibility makes it possible for a greater number of people to access training activities and provides an alternative for those who have limited availability and cannot adapt to more structured courses. Participants are offered the possibility of simply exploring the content of the course or of obtaining a certification after completing a series of assessments of the topic. During 2025, 2,648 people took the five MOOCs offered, and, out of these, 725 participants opted to obtain certificates.

111. With regard to gender, it is worth noting that more women than men enrolled in the MOOCs open in 2025, reaching a total of 1,449 women and 823 men, one non-binary person and one who decided not to provide their gender identity.

a. MOOC – Inter-American Human Rights System – Fifth Edition

112. During 2025, the fifth edition of this course was open to all countries in the hemisphere. The MOOC on the Inter-American Human Rights System is a self-directed short course that allows participants to discover the inter-American system and learn about its bodies, functions and mechanisms. It was developed using simple language, thus making it accessible to anyone who wants to learn about the system. In addition, it includes additional material so that interested participants can study the system in greater depth.

113. Between January 1 and December 31, 1,050 people enrolled in the course. Out of these, 290 downloaded their certificate of completion. Out of the total number of people who enrolled in the course, 58% were women. The country with the highest enrollment rates was Mexico, with 180 (19%) of participants, followed by Peru, with 135 participants (14%) and the United States, with 96 participants (10%). Colombia came in fourth place, with 87 participants (9%).

114. The knowledge survey was responded to by 511 people. Out of these, 147 were linked to state agencies, 130 to academia, 96 to civil society organizations and 82 to the private sector. 23 people worked in national human rights institutions.

115. On the other hand, the satisfaction survey was completed by 290 people. Out of these, 95% rated the course as extremely or very useful. Finally, 203 participants indicated that what they had learned on the course would be extremely or very applicable in their work; and 203 considered that they had acquired new knowledge.

116. The course on the Inter-American Human Rights System is perceived as a highly useful and high quality educational tool, which fulfills and exceeds the participants' expectations in the acquisition of fundamental knowledge about the inter-American system and its applicability in diverse professional and personal contexts. The main strengths of the course are the clarity of contents, the teaching methodology and the easy use of the platform.

117. During the course, the participants constantly highlighted the clarity, organization and relevance of the contents, as well as the diversity of the teaching tools used. In particular, the participants pointed out that the material was accessible, understandable and updated, allowing them to enrich their knowledge in a practical and significant manner. The self-directed modality, the time flexibility, the variety of resources — videos, iconographies, summaries, interactive activities — and the quality of the explanations and the facilitating team were mentioned as the core strengths of the course. Likewise, participants valued the usefulness of the course to get a better understanding of the inter-American system, promote changes in public policies, strengthen the capacities for the defense of human rights and promote access to reliable information. For many people, the learning experience was motivational, didactic and deeply formative.

[16] Hereinafter, "MOOC". The acronym MOOC stands for "massive open online course." MOOCs are online courses that allow participants to learn at their own time and pace, according to their needs and circumstances. Since the courses do not provide support by tutors, they can reach a mass audience.

b. MOOC – Inter–American Human Rights System – Third Edition in English

118. This MOOC is the first to be offered in English and is based on the Spanish-language MOOC on the IAHRS but adapted to the legal system of English-speaking countries. The course seeks to bring the Inter-American Human Rights System closer to States, the civil society and academia in English-speaking countries, by means of simple tools and by using accessible language as well as digital resources such as videos, audios, readings and practice activities that help participants to understand the concepts and their application.

119. The total course load of the second edition is 25 hours, to be completed in about five weeks. It is entirely self-directed, which allows participants to complete the activities at their own pace, on the days and at the times that best suit their personal and professional situation.

120. In 2025, 723 people enrolled in the course. Out of these, 176 downloaded their certificate of completion. Out of the total number of people who enrolled in the course, 484 (67%) were women. The country with the highest enrollment rates was Peru, with 117 participants (16%), followed by Mexico, with 96 participants (13%), and Colombia, with 77 participants (11%). Ecuador came in fourth place, with 61 participants (8%). It should be mentioned that the satisfaction survey was responded to by 166 people. Out of these, 165 rated the course as extremely or very useful. In turn, 80 participants indicated that what they had learned on the course would be extremely or very applicable in their work; and 130 considered that they had acquired new knowledge.

c. MOOC – Inter-American standards on Human Mobility

121. During 2025, the second free edition and the third paid edition of the MOOC – Inter-American standards on Human Mobility were open, with 602 people enrolled (418 women, 182 men, 1 non-binary and 1 who chose not to state their gender identity). Out of the total enrolled people, 259 downloaded their certificates of completion.

122. The second edition of this MOOC took place from April 17 to June 17 and was free of charge. The objective was to conceptualize the rights of persons in human mobility, know the obligations of the States towards persons in human mobility and know the regional and international protection mechanisms. The course was thought to be completed in around 30 hours. A total of 540 persons enrolled in the course, 226 of which decided to download their certificate of completion. In general terms, the people who took the course mentioned that it was useful, that the objectives were clear and that they had acquired new knowledge. The countries with the highest registered participation were Peru, with 87 participants (16%); Colombia, with 68 participants (13%); Mexico, with 57 participants (11%); Guatemala, with 53 participants (10%); and Ecuador with 46 participants (9%). Out of the total number of participants (540, 100%), women participation rate was almost twice that of men: 378 (70%) as compared to 162 (30%), respectively.

123. The third edition of this MOOC took place from September 16 to November 18 and was a paid course. The objective was to conceptualize the rights of persons in human mobility, know the obligations of the States towards persons in human mobility and know the regional and international protection mechanisms. The course was thought to be completed in around 30 hours. A total of 62 persons enrolled in the course, 45 of which decided to download their certificate of completion. During this course, there was a synchronous class with the participation of Commissioner and Rapporteur for Human Mobility, Andrea Pochak, accompanied by members of staff of IACHR's Executive Secretariat. A total of 45 people responded the final survey. In general terms, the people who took the course mentioned that it was useful, that the objectives were clear and 60% mentioned that they had acquired new knowledge. The country with the highest enrollment rates was Mexico, with 12 participants (19%), followed by Peru, with 7 participants (11%), Women participation rate (65%, 40) was almost twice that of men (32%, 20). This edition raised special interest among people working in civil society organizations, 14 participants (23%); and in academia, 12 participants (19%). Those participants linked to state agencies, human rights institutions or law-enforcement represented 19% (14) of the participation rate.

d. MOOC - Inter-American standards to fight violence and discrimination against women, girls and adolescents 124. Within the framework of the celebration of 16 days of activism for the International Day for the Elimination of Violence Against Women, on December 10, the second edition of this self-directed course was offered for 100 people of the general public, presenting an overview in simple language of the inter-American standards on violence and discrimination against women, girls and teenagers, complemented with follow-up material for people who are already familiarized with the system. This course allows people to understand the concepts of violence against women, girls and adolescents, know the standards on the right of women to be free of discrimination, as well as the specific standards applied to girls and adolescents. The course also offers an opportunity to get familiarized with the existing stereotypes in this area and their effect on women, girls and adolescents, as well as the obligations of the State. There were 273 people enrolled in this edition. Women accounted for the highest enrollment rates, with 89% (243 participants). Men accounted for 10% (28 participants) and non-binary persons accounted for 0.7% (2 participants) of the enrollment rate. The countries with the highest enrollment rates were Argentina (20%, 55 participants), Mexico (26%, 45) and Peru (10%, 29). Registration for this MOOC opened on December 10 and closed on December 12 due to the high demand. For this occasion, the IACHR facilitated 100 places and the Educational Portal 173. There are not available data yet regarding the people who obtained their certificates of completion.

2. Virtual classrooms and short courses

125. During 2025, two virtual classrooms and two short courses were developed. The virtual classrooms are asynchronous courses that are combined with live sessions (synchronous) and are supported by an academic tutor (a subject-matter expert from the Commission) as well as a technical tutor. During 2025, 921 people participated in these four virtual classrooms, including the short courses. Out of the total number of enrolled people, 385 downloaded their certificates of completion.

a. Short course on how to document human rights violations

126. The short course on how to document human rights violations took place from April 16 to May 30. The course was free of charge. The objective of the course was for participants to strengthen their capacities to document human rights violations, as well as to acquire practical skills in gathering testimonies from victims and family members. The course was thought to be completed in around 10 hours. A total of 219 persons enrolled in the course (128 women and 91 men), 116 of which decided to download their certificate of completion. The countries with the highest enrollment rates were Colombia and Mexico, with 34 participants (16%) and 33 participants (15%), respectively; followed by Peru, with 23 participants (11%) and Guatemala, with 21 participants (10%). In general terms, the people who took the course mentioned that it was useful, that the objectives were clear and that they had acquired new knowledge.

b. Two short courses on how to file a precautionary measure

127. During 2025, three editions –two free and one paid – of the short course on how to file a precautionary measure were open, with 534 people enrolled (301 women, 233 men). Out of the total number of enrolled people, 226 downloaded their certificates of completion.

128. The objective of the course is for participants to acquire practical skills in requesting a precautionary measure to the Commission and in following up on the processing and resolution of the request. It is developed using simple language and with a focus on practice, so that participants can learn about the mechanism and are able to use it properly. Its estimated duration is 10 hours.

129. The first edition of this short course was conducted free of charge from August 11 to September 11, 2025, using the remaining funds from the 2024 pilot paid course. A total of 400 persons enrolled in the course, 191 of which decided to download their certificate of completion. Women accounted for more than half of the people attending the course, with an enrollment rate of 55% (F, 220), as compared to men, with an enrollment rate of 45% (M, 180). The country with the highest enrollment rate was Mexico, 20% (81 participants), followed by Ecuador (18%, 70), Peru (11%, 40) and Bolivia and Colombia (9%, 36 and 35, respectively). Academia (44%, 21) and the State (30%, 63) were the sectors with the highest enrollment rates. A total of 212 people responded to the satisfaction survey. Out of these, 67% mentioned that the course was "extremely useful", whereas 27% said it was "very useful". 188 people mentioned that they had acquired new knowledge.

130. The second edition of this short course was a paid course, at the request of the UNHCR. A total of 30 people enrolled in this course. Out of these people, women accounted for 56.67% (17) and men accounted for 43.33% (13). As of December 31, 2025, 23% (9) of the participants had received their certificate of completion. The country with the highest participation was Ecuador, with 6 participants (20%), followed by Panama, with 4 participants (13%) and Brazil, with 3 participants (10%).

131. During this edition, there were two synchronous sessions, one with a specialist from the IACHR, which clarified some technical concepts. Based on the results of the evaluation activities, participants enhanced their knowledge of the subject: in the final test, all of them could state the difference between a petition and a precautionary measure, and they could also confirm that the identity of the person requesting precautionary measures can be kept confidential and not revealed to the State.

132. In turn, for the third edition of the course, there were 104 persons enrolled, 62% (64) of which were women and 38% (40) were men. Up to this date, 26 people (25%) have obtained their certificate of completion. The country with the highest participation rate is still Mexico, which accounts for 25% of enrollment (28 participants), followed by Argentina, with 17% enrollment (18 participants). This edition of the course is expected to end on January 30, 2026.

c. Standards by the Judiciary

133. Between June and August, the Commission ran a paid virtual Workshop on the Inter-American Standards by the Judiciary with the objective of strengthening the knowledge about the Inter-American system, with a special focus on its standards related to the duties of the State in general and of the Judiciary in particular, in terms of human rights in the context of democracy and the rule of law. The course was comprised of four modules and ran over approximately eight (8) weeks, for a total of 30 hours. A total of 111 enrolled in the paid course: 57,5% women, 41,2% men and 1,3% not identified. Out of these, 106 participated in the virtual workshop and 80 opted to download the certificate of completion.

134. The course was targeted at justice operators, including judges, prosecutors and public defenders who want to improve their knowledge of the Inter-American system, especially in terms of the inter-American standards on due diligence, conventionality control and sentence analysis.

135. The virtual workshop deepened in the concept and scope of conventionality control. The course focused on promoting the application of human rights principles; therefore, each module included a practical activity. One of the most important goals of the course was to create a sense of community among the participants through a series of activities that promote interchange. The course also tried to facilitate access to the highest number of specialists and members of the Commission, so as to enrich knowledge and experiences, including videos and synchronous meetings. A total of 80 people responded to the final survey. Out of these, 77 rated the course as extremely or very useful and 78 mentioned that they had acquired new knowledge.

d. Interamerican standards on memory, truth and justice in contexts of transitional justice

136. From November 12, 2025, to January 31, 2026, the Commission ran the paid virtual workshop on memory, truth and justice in contexts of transitional justice. A total of 54 persons enrolled in the course (32 women and 22 men), 33 (61%) of which decided to download their certificate of completion. Colombia accounts for 22 % (13) of the people enrolled, almost one quarter of the participants, followed by Mexico and Peru, with an enrollment rate of 13% (7) and 11% (6), respectively. At the end of the course, 32 people (59%) chose to download their certificate of completion.

137. A total of 32 persons responded to the survey. Out of these, 27 mentioned they had enhanced their knowledge of the subject, whereas 28 persons mentioned that they could apply the content of the training to perform their functions.

138. The course was complemented with the synchronous class taught by Commissioner Andrea Pochak, Rapporteur for Memory.

3. Hybrid and in person courses

a. National School of Formation and Improvement of Labor Magistrates (ENAMAT)

139. On February 17 and 18, in coordination with the National School of Formation and Improvement of Labor Magistrates (ENAMAT), the Commission held a training activity in Brasilia, entitled Access to Labor Justice and Human Rights: reflections based on inter-American standards. The goal of the course was to provide professionals working in the Brazilian labor justice system with information of inter-American standards on human rights relevant for access to justice, with a special focus on: 1. raising awareness on the relevance of the inter-American system in the Brazilian context and strengthening the capacities of magistrates and public officers who work in Labor Justice; 2. presenting the major developments in terms of access to justice for groups in vulnerable situation and the element of comprehensive reparation in the IAHRS, with case studies on the main inter-American Labor Justice standards on these subjects. A total of 90 officers participated in this training.

b. Richmond University

140. On April 11, the Commission held a training session in the IACHR headquarters for students of the Law School of Richmond University, USA, on the Inter-American Human Rights System and its mechanisms. This training session exposed the students to the basic concepts of the Inter-American Human Rights System, including a glimpse into the system of petitions and cases, precautionary measures and the portal system. A total of seven people participated in the training, five of which were women. The session also represented an opportunity to promote other aspects of the training and advocacy efforts of the IACHR, including the MOOC.

c. San Diego University

141. On April 30, there was a training session targeted at civil society members, organized by the Washington Brazil Office and Behner Stiefel Center for Brazilian Studies at San Diego University. The training focused on sharing knowledge on the Inter-American Human Rights System and its mechanisms. There were 25 participants in this course.

d. William J. Perry Center for Hemispheric Defense Studies

142. On June 10, 2025, the Commission held an on-site training workshop at the premises of William J. Perry Center for Hemispheric Defense Studies. The workshop focused on several elements of the IAHRS, including the structure and composition of the IACHR; differences between the mandates of the IACHR and the Inter-American Court; technical cooperation and technological tools for the use of the system (Portal). The students were mostly military or police officers from various countries in the region, including Argentina, Belize, Brazil, Colombia, Costa Rica, Ecuador, Guatemala, Panama, Mexico and Peru. The event was of crucial importance to raise awareness on key aspects of the Inter-American Human Rights System and provide tools to state agents on how to increase access and use of the system. Fifty persons were trained, 16 of whom were women.

e. Superior School of the Public Ministry of the Union, Brazil

143. Between August 12 and 15, the IACHR and the Superior School of the Public Ministry of the Union jointly organized a course on "Inter-American standards applied to the criminal justice system" to train agents of the Brazilian legal system on the inter-American standards related to deprivation and restriction of freedom, preventive imprisonment, judicial guarantees and protection of accused people, victims and their families. The course yielded significant results by promoting a plural space for dialogue between more than 60 justice operators. Group discussions and work allowed to identify structural challenges in the Brazilian criminal system, as well as the need to strengthen the central role of victims, face lethal use of force by police, improve detention conditions and guarantee differentiated approaches for groups in vulnerable situation. The course also promoted a collective learning of the practical application of inter-American jurisprudence, which translated into specific proposals for public policies, control mechanisms and legal reforms, which represented a valuable input for the work of the IACHR in Brazil.

f. Miami University

144. On September 4, the Commission held a virtual training session, mainly targeted at students of the Law School of Miami University. This session focused on the subjects of hearings and precautionary measures. Many students were expected to attend the 194th period of sessions on November (in Miami) and, therefore, they would want to get an idea of how the IACHR handles hearings and precautionary measures in the context of a period of sessions. Some students and professors at the University of Southern California also participated in the session. In total, this session had 45 participants, including 29 women.

g. "Héctor Fix Zamudio" Diploma Program on the Inter-American Human Rights System

145. Between September 8 and 9, the 13th edition of the "Héctor Fix Zamudio" Diploma Program on the Inter-American Human Rights System was delivered in a hybrid format. This activity is run within the framework of a cooperation agreement with the National Autonomous University of Mexico (UNAM). The program was organized by the Institute for Legal Research and the Office of the General Counsel of the UNAM, the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights, the Inter-American Court of Human Rights, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights in Mexico, the International Committee of the Red Cross and the Electoral Judicial School attached to the Electoral Tribunal of Mexico's Federal Judiciary.

146. The purpose of the training was for participants to learn about the general characteristics (origin, legal sources, bodies, mandate, mechanisms) of each of the bodies that make up the Inter-American Human Rights System, as well as about the standards and jurisprudence that have been developed with respect to some human rights. A total of 49 students —34 of which were women— attended the course. Forty-four (44) of the students enrolled in the 2025 edition of this training were Mexican. The remaining 5 participants were Argentinean, Bolivian, Brazilian, Ecuadorian and Peruvian.

147. This training initiative comprised nine sessions and a total load of 22 class-hours, with compulsory modules on international human rights law, the Inter-American Human Rights System, relevant inter-American jurisprudence and the protection of persons in vulnerable situations. Upon reaching the end of the core modules, students were able to choose between three optional modules on different topics: international standards on the right of women to a life free of violence; the link between the inter-American and universal systems of human rights and other regional systems, as well as other instances of International Human Rights Law or political rights: conventionality control in connection to democracy and electoral processes. During the course, Commissioners Andrea Pochak, José Luis Caballero, Arif Bulkan and Stuardo Ralón Orellana, together with specialists from the IACHR participated as lecturers in seven classes, which covered topics such as independence of the judiciary and the rule of law; human rights and democracy; the human right to care; the protection of human rights in groups in vulnerable situation; compliance with the decisions of the inter-American system, as well as sessions addressing the contributions, difficulties and current challenges for the Inter-American Human Rights System.

h. Toronto Metropolitan University

148. On September 18, the IACHR, in collaboration with Toronto Metropolitan University, held an online dialogue with Canadian academics on diverse topics, such as freedom of expression; economic, cultural, social and environmental rights, and the basic mechanisms of the Inter-American Human Rights System. This session had the participation of Commissioner Arif Bulkan. This dialogue enabled Canadian academics to discuss these diverse topics, with the aim of increasing their use of the IAHRS. In total, there were seven participants, including three women.

i. International Course on Public Policies on Human Rights

149. On September 3, 2025, the call for applications was launched for the eighth edition of the International Course on Public Policies on Human Rights, which is run jointly with the MERCOSUR Institute for Public Policy on Human Rights (IPPDH)[17]. On September 30, 2025, a list was published with 70 individuals selected from a total of 2,157 applications from 21 countries[18]. The International Course on Public Policies on Human Rights is a comprehensive training course targeted at public officials responsible for devising, managing, implementing and assessing public policies, as well as at members of social organizations and movements, and scholars from MERCOSUR and OAS member states.

150. The first part of the course was delivered virtually between October and November and included an optional specialization workshop on the Inter-American Human Rights System, which was held on November 13. The virtual phase was structured around nine synchronous sessions, including thematic modules on organized crime, corruption and human rights, as well as participative experiences in the care policies of the region. Participants also had the opportunity to take the MOOC (massive open online course) on the Inter–American Human Rights System, available during the virtual session. Also, the participants of the course interested in getting an in-depth knowledge of the public hearing mechanism within the inter-American system could opt to attend the hearings, both virtually and in person, within the framework of the 194th period of sessions of the IACHR, held in Miami, United States, from November 17 to November 21, 2025.

151. Subsequently, between December 9 and 12, the closing week of the course took place in person and with mandatory attendance, at the IPPDH headquarters, located in Espacio Memoria y Derechos Humanos ex ESMA, in the city of Buenos Aires, Argentina, with the participation of Commissioner Andrea Pochak, who made a presentation at the end of the course. Fifty participants met the passing criteria and received their certificate. The in-person phase included spaces for exchange that were complemented by theoretical-practical lectures with experts in public policy evaluation, indicator systems, and budget and gender, so as to round off the course face to face; there was also a panel on participation in public policies, which featured activists and representatives of civil society organizations.

4. Specialized attention plan for the Caribbean

a. University of the West Indies

152. On October 22, the Commission held a lecture on the Inter-American Human Rights System for students of the School of Law of Cave Hill, UWI, Barbados. The main objective was to present the students with the key mechanisms of the IAHRS, including cases and petitions, precautionary measures, legal framework of IAHRS and monitoring. There were around 25 participants, including 13 women.

b. Caribbean Ombudsman Association (CAROA)

153. The Commission had two regional meetings (on April 29 and September 11) with the Caribbean Ombudsman Association (CAROA), with the participation of 18 representatives in each of them. Both regional meetings focused respectively on Belize's transition from an Ombudsman Institution to a National Human Rights Institution (NHRI); and on making the Ombudspersons familiarized with the standards and mechanisms of the Convention on the Rights of Older Persons. Commissioner De Mees made a presentation.

c. Caribbean Court of Justice (CCJ)

154. In line with the Joint Work Program with the Caribbean Court of Justice (CCJ), on October 10 the Commission held a virtual webinar with 50 judicial officers and lawyers of the CCJ, the Caribbean Association of Judicial Officers and Lawyers Associations. The webinar highlighted the need for historically discriminated populations, such as people with disabilities and older persons, to be treated equally in terms of dignity and value, as well as the need to advocate for the adoption of good legal practices shared in all the region. Commissioners Caballero, Clarke and De Mees attended the webinar.

155. On November 12, during the 194th period of sessions of the IACHR, there was a high level dialog with the CCJ, aimed at promoting and facilitating technical exchange and strengthening the mandates of both institutions to protect individuals and groups against human right abuses in the Caribbean.

156. The IACHR also called for meetings with civil society organizations (CSO) to promote and protect human rights in the subregion. On October 29, the IACHR held a meeting with the president of the Civil Society of Bahamas (CSB), who addressed the important role of the organization, composed by around 1,500 groups. On May 13, the Commission held a meeting with the Caribbean Association for Youth Development (CAYD), which expressed its concern about the deterioration of democratic institutions in several Caribbean countries. The IACHR shared diverse mechanisms for the protection of human rights with the CAYD.

d. Caribbean Dialogue Network (CDN)

157. On April 29, 2025, the IACHR held a virtual dialogue with a Caribbean CSOs (Caribbean Dialogue Network) on the human rights of older persons. The session included a presentation by Commissioner De Mees (Rapporteur on the Rights of Older Persons). The dialogue provided an opportunity for CSO to present information on the problems and challenges that affect older persons in the Caribbean. It also allowed to share essential information on the inter-American standards for the protection of older persons in the region. In total, this session had 19 participants, including 17 women.

158. On June 25, the IACHR organized an online training session with Caribbean civil society organizations (Caribbean Dialogue Network). The main goal of this training module was to improve the capacity of Caribbean civil society organizations to understand and use the Inter-American Human Rights System. During the session, participants were exposed to several mechanisms, including the petition and case system, hearings and technical cooperation. In total, this session had 14 participants, including eight women.

159. On August 5, the IACHR held a virtual seminar with Caribbean civil society organizations (Caribbean Dialogue Network) to promote dialogue about the right to education and children rights in the Caribbean. This session, organized in collaboration with the Inter-American Children´s Institute (IIN) and the World Organization for Early Childhood Education (OMEP), offered a general view on the sources, the content and the scope of inter-American standards on the right to education. Besides, this activity served to explore good practices and current challenges to guarantee children's right to education in the Caribbean. In total, this session had 21 participants, including 16 women.

160. On September 16, the IACHR held a virtual seminar with Caribbean civil society organizations (Caribbean Dialogue Network) on the Commission's follow-up mechanisms. This session provided the opportunity to discuss with participants the legal and institutional framework governing follow-up mechanisms. Besides, this activity served to strengthen the participant's capacity to understand and better use these follow-up mechanisms. In total, this session had 22 participants, including 16 women.

161. On October 23, the IACHR held a virtual seminar with Caribbean civil society organizations (Caribbean Dialogue Network) on the Commission's annual report. This event also provided the participants with the opportunity to get involved in the structure, the purpose and the writing process of the annual report. It also allowed to encourage civil society organizations to share information that could be included in the annual report. Commissioners Bulkan, Clarke and De Mees participated in the event. In general, this session had 25 participants, including 19 women.

e. In person trainings on precautionary measures

162. From April 22 to 23 and April 25 to 26, there were two training programs co-organized by the IACHR and the Center for Research and Popular Education (CINEP) targeted at civil society organizations in Bogotá and then in Cali, Colombia, aimed at strengthening the capacities of members of Colombian civil society organizations related to the precautionary and provisional measures mechanisms of the Inter-American Human Rights System. This initiative was organized within the framework of the cooperation project "Increasing the protection of human right violation victims in Latin America, especially of people belonging to historically excluded groups," financed by the Basque Agency for Development Cooperation, under the scheduled workshops "IACHR protection mechanisms: Precautionary measures and their implementation." The trainings featured presentations by José Luis Caballero Ochoa, president of the Commission. In Bogotá 15 people received training, whereas in Cali 24 people received training.

163. From June 5 to June 6, the IACHR and the International Center for Human Rights Research (CIIDH) co-organized a training targeted at civil society organizations in the city of Guatemala, Guatemala, aimed at strengthening the capacities of members of Guatemalan civil society organizations related to the precautionary and provisional measures mechanisms of the Inter-American Human Rights System. This initiative was organized within the framework of the cooperation project "Increasing the protection of human right violation victims in Latin America, especially of people belonging to historically excluded groups," financed by the Basque Agency for Development Cooperation, under the scheduled workshops "IACHR protection mechanisms: Precautionary measures and their implementation." Twenty people received training.

164. From October 9 to 11 several in person trainings were held in Tegucigalpa, Honduras, targeted at members of civil society organizations and the State. These trainings, organized by the Legal Center for Human Rights (Centro Jurídico por los Derechos Humanos, CJDH, as per the acronym in Spanish) had the participation of Commissioner Andrea Pochak and IACHR's support staff. The activity yielded qualitative results aimed at strengthening the capacities and increasing the practical knowledge of the IACHR's precautionary measure mechanism, with a focus on implementation and follow-up. The workshop attracted human right defenders from different regions and profiles (grassroots organizations, feminists, indigenous peoples, peasants, LGBTI people) and state institutions. Twenty-one people received training.

D. Other promotion and training activities related to thematic rapporteurships, special procedures and follow-up of recommendations

165. Below is a summary of the promotion and training activities of the Commission's thematic rapporteurships and other work carried out throughout the year in relation to its human rights promotion mandate. Many of these activities were organized in cooperation with other actors, thus strengthening collaboration with civil society organizations, academia, regional and international institutions, and States.

166. As for the special rapporteurships, the Office of the Special Rapporteur on Economic, Social, Cultural and Environmental Rights (REDESCA) carried out 47 activities this year. Out of these, 43 were related to promotion and four were related to training. For more information on these activities, please refer to REDESCA's annual report. The Office of the Special Rapporteur for Freedom of Expression (SRFOE) carried out 29 activities. Out of these, 28 were related to promotion and one to training. For more information on these activities, please refer to SRFOE's annual report.

1. Thematic rapporteurships

167. The mandate of the thematic rapporteurships is based on Article 41 of the American Convention on Human Rights and Article 18 of the Statute of the Inter-American Commission, which establish the Commission's specific functions in terms of human rights promotion. Below is a brief description of the various promotion and training activities carried out by each of the thematic rapporteurships in 2025.

3. Follow-up on recommendations and SIMORE

168. During 2025, the Follow-up on Recommendations and Impact Section (SRI) carried out a series of promotion and training activities whose purpose was to share and publicize the features of the inter-American SIMORE. Those activities were intended to encourage member states, civil society organizations and autonomous entities to create accounts and publish information on the follow-up of recommendations on the SIMORE platform. Chapter I of this annual report contains more information on the activities undertaken in the context of the inter-American SIMORE, as well as additional activities involving joint roundtables with civil society organizations to optimize follow-up of recommendations.

169. The following is a list of the main training and promotion activities conducted to disseminate and publicize the SIMORE online tool. Some additional activities related to follow-up of recommendations are also listed.

170. During 2025, based on the training strategy for the use of SIMORE, the Commission continued to conduct training sessions for potential users from OAS member states, the civil society, autonomous organizations and academic institutions.

CONCURRING VOTE OF COMMISSIONER ANDREA POCHAK AND COMMISSIONER JOSÉ LUIS CABALLERO OCHOA..... 728

CHAPTER IV.A

SITUATION OF HUMAN RIGHTS IN THE REGION

OVERVIEW OF HUMAN RIGHTS SITUATION BY COUNTRY[1]

METHODOLOGY

1. In accordance with Article 59.2.e.i, the Commission includes in Chapter IV.A of its 2025 Annual Report an overview of the human rights situation in the States of the region. The review focused on the situation of particularly vulnerable groups and the issues prioritized by the IACHR through its Thematic Rapporteurships,[2] as well as on the cross-cutting themes established by the Commission in its 2023-2027 Strategic Plan.[3]

2. In preparing this section, the IACHR took into account the information received regarding the human rights situation in the region during 2025, in the exercise of its monitoring function. The IACHR used input from the different mechanisms through which the IACHR has followed up on the situation in the country, such as public hearings, thematic visits, requests for information under Article 41 of the American Convention and Article 18 of the IACHR Statute, and precautionary measures; as well as information from civil society organizations, journalistic notes, decisions and recommendations from specialized international bodies, among others.

3. In addition, and in accordance with the powers established in Article 41 of the American Convention and Article 18 of the Statute of the IACHR, in August 2025, the Commission requested information from the Member States on the rights, themes and cross-cutting issues prioritized in the Strategic Plan mentioned above. The IACHR received responses from the following Member States before the close of this report: Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, Canada, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, Guatemala, Guyana, Honduras, Mexico, Paraguay, Peru and Uruguay. The IACHR is grateful for and appreciates the information sent, which has been included in this chapter.

4. The Commission is grateful for the information provided by institutions and civil society organizations throughout the year through the different monitoring mechanisms, which was included in this section.

5. Below, as an introduction, we present the most significant regional trends identified during the preparatory work for the country-specific human rights overview.

[1] Chapter not approved by Commissioner Carlos Bernal Pulido, with a partial reasoned vote. The partial reasoned vote is found at the end of this chapter.

[2] The IACHR has the following 11 thematic rapporteurships: Rapporteurship on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples; Rapporteurship on the Rights of Women; Rapporteurship on Human Mobility; Rapporteurship on the Rights of the Child; Rapporteurship on Human Rights Defenders; Rapporteurship on the Rights of Persons Deprived of Liberty; Rapporteurship on the Rights of Persons of African Descent and against Racial Discrimination; Rapporteurship on the Rights of Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual, Trans and Intersex Persons; Rapporteurship on Memory, Truth and Justice; Rapporteurship on Older Persons; Rapporteurship on Persons with Disabilities. There are also two Special Rapporteurships: Special Rapporteurship on Freedom of Expression; and Special Rapporteurship on Economic, Social, Cultural and Environmental Rights.

[3] The IACHR's Strategic Plan 2023–2027 includes the following cross-cutting themes: democratic institutionality; human rights institutionality; gender, intercultural and intersectionality approach; security and violence; access to justice and judicial independence; development and human rights; human rights in the digital environment; promotion of the ratification of inter-American human rights instruments.

TRENDS

6. During 2025, the IACHR observed the persistence of tensions in democratic systems and in the levels of public trust in institutions, in a context characterized by high political polarization, as well as concerns about the progressive deterioration of the checks and balances inherent in the principle of separation of powers and the democratic rule of law. Among the main manifestations are pressure on the system of administration of justice, through acts of harassment, removal and arbitrary transfer of judicial officials, affecting judicial independence. In addition, the Commission identified in some countries processes of concentration of power in other organs of the State, the dissolution of autonomous bodies, and the weakening of human rights institutions.

7. On the other hand, the IACHR warned about the restrictions on civic space derived from the approval and, in some cases, the arbitrary application of regulatory frameworks that limit the registration, operation, and financing of civil society organizations; the increase of control and surveillance mechanisms; as well as the arbitrary use of criminal law and administrative sanctions aimed at deterring civic participation. These measures have generated chilling effects, including the reduction or suspension of activities and, in extreme cases, the exile of defenders. The Commission also observed that these restrictions have had an impact on participation in public and international advocacy spaces, generating a broader deterrent effect on the exercise of fundamental freedoms and democratic debate.

8. The defense of human rights continued to be a high risk activity in the region. Human rights defenders were constantly killed, attacked and threatened. Likewise, criminalization, through the improper use of criminal law, continued to be used as a tool to intimidate, stigmatize and obstruct the work of defense of human rights. These practices were part of contexts of public stigmatization and delegitimizing discourses that increased risks and contributed to a hostile environment for the exercise of human rights defense.

9. In this context, the Commission noted the progress of denialist discourses and cultural battles that seek to relativize, reinterpret, or rewrite the serious violations committed in the past, as well as the reduction or cancellation of resources for the preservation of archives or sites of memory and attacks on them, or the dismantling of the institutions dedicated to memory, truth and justice.

10. Another regional trend is the deterioration of citizen security in a context of the expansion of organized crime and serious acts of violence, accompanied by the growing use of "iron fist" discourses and policies. These include high-lethality police operations, harsh penalties, excessive use of pretrial detention, overcrowding and deplorable conditions of detention, as well as militarization and the extensive use of states of emergency. The Commission emphasizes that these approaches are neither effective nor sustainable, as they do not ensure lasting territorial control or dismantle the economic, financial, and corrupt structures that sustain organized crime, and also reproduce cycles of violence, impunity, and institutional weakening.

11. Violence affecting populations in situations of exclusion, in territories with weak institutions or no state presence, is related, among other factors, to the flow and expansion of illegal economies, such as drug trafficking, human trafficking, arms trafficking and extortion, as well as to disputes for control of these economies between organized criminal groups, whether, they are cartels, maras or gangs. These dynamics have generated systematic practices of forced recruitment of children and adolescents, territorial control and exploitation, as well as different forms of violence and coercion that directly affect the life, integrity and freedom of people. In some cases, these groups have infiltrated state institutions, also reflecting high levels of corruption. The co-optation of state institutions by corruption not only weakens the state's capacities to prevent, investigate and punish human rights violations, but also generates direct impacts on access to and protection of human rights.

12. In addition, agrarian conflict continued to be one of the main factors generating violence and social tension. Disputes related to land tenure, possession or ownership have generated high levels of social conflict, impacting indigenous and Afro-descendant communities in a differentiated way, and affecting, among other rights, collective property and the right to prior consultation. The Commission observes that the lack of effective mechanisms for conflict resolution, as well as deficiencies in constructive dialogue, consultation, and protection, have contributed to the persistence and escalation of these situations.

13. The IACHR also observed with special concern the persistence and worsening of gender-based violence against women, girls, and adolescents, including alarming and increasing levels of femicides in different countries of the region. These facts reflect structural failures in the prevention, protection and response of the State, as well as patterns of impunity, discrimination and social tolerance in the face of gender-based violence. The IACHR reiterates that the eradication of this violence requires a coherent legislative framework and comprehensive policies, with a gender responsive approach, education, enhanced due diligence, and effective access to justice.

14. Finally, the IACHR is concerned about the increase in the adoption of restrictive migration policies and border management that have expanded the grounds for expulsion, detention, and border control. In practice, these measures restrict rights such as access to asylum, due process, and the principle of non-refoulement. In addition, the weakening of judicial controls, the excessive use of force, including lethal force, and arbitrary detentions affect the rule of law. In addition to the above, manifestations of racism and xenophobia persist in the region and their impact on migration policies. In this regard, the Commission observes with concern the discriminatory treatment, as well as the speeches of authorities and political leaders, and content in the media, social networks, and other digital platforms that promote biased, stigmatizing, and exclusionary narratives that affect migrants, asylum seekers, and refugees.

I. ANTIGUA AND BARBUDA

- General considerations

15. As it relates to progress, the Commission highlights efforts by the State to combat youth, domestic and gender-based violence. Additionally, the IACHR takes note of the proposal to expunge criminal records for persons deprived of liberty for certain offences. Moreover, the Commission welcomes actions undertaken by the State to address discrimination against women.

16. As it relates to challenges, the IACHR notes with concern that the Office of the Ombudsman remains without a substantive office holder. In addition, the Commission notes that the juvenile curfew remains in effect in the State without any defined end-term. Furthermore, the IACHR is also concerned about disputes over land governance and consultation in Barbuda.

17. The State did not respond to the request for information to draft this chapter.

- Specific issues

18. In relation to human rights institutions, the State has an 1Office of the Ombudsman, which is a member of the Caribbean Ombudsman Association, the Commonwealth Forum of National Human Rights Institutions, and the International Ombudsman Institute.[4] The functions of the Ombudsman include investigating administrative complaints against government departments and statutory bodies. However, the Office's jurisdiction is limited to administrative violations and does not extend to investigation of human rights violations.[5] Presently, there has been no substantive Ombudsman since December 2024, as the mandate of the most recent Ombudsman ended. According to public information, the government is searching for a suitable candidate to assume the Office.[6] Moreover, the State has yet to establish a National Human Rights Institution in accordance with the Paris Principles.

19. Regarding citizen security, for the period April 7 to 30, the State implemented a gun amnesty aimed at addressing gun violence and improving public safety. According to public information, seven firearms and seven rounds of ammunition were surrendered during the amnesty.[7] In addition, in July, the State acceded to the Caribbean Community (CARICOM) Arrest Warrant Treaty, which provides for the cooperation of States in the arrest and surrender of requested persons for the conduct of criminal prosecutions in the jurisdictions of States Parties to the treaty.[8]

20. Moreover, according to public information, for the period January to October, there were approximately 11 homicides in the State.[9] This represents a homicide rate of 11.7 per 100,000 inhabitants as of October 2025.[10] Regarding general crime trends, it was reported that a total of 2,720 offences were recorded between January and October, compared to 3,034 offences in the same period of 2024. This represents a 10.3% decrease.[11]

21. In relation to access to justice, the Commission notes that the Parliament of Antigua and Barbuda passed an amendment to the Magistrate's Code of Procedure Act, allowing magistrates to conduct remand hearings remotely "on any virtual platform or electronic communication facility available to the court". According to the State, this amendment reflects a step towards modernizing the judicial system through the use of digital technology as well as enhance security by removing the need for physical appearances.[12]

22. Concerning the rights of children, as reported by the Commission in its 2024 Annual Report, the State introduced a juvenile curfew in October 2024. In this regard, in July 2025, the State announced the maintenance of this curfew for children and adolescents.[13] The Commission notes that this measure remains without a specified end-term.

23. Additionally, the IACHR highlights the efforts by the State to combat violence. In partnership with the United Nations Population Fund and the University of the West Indies, the State organized a Capacity Building Workshop on the Caribbean Model for Behavioral and Cultural Change. This workshop brought together stakeholders to address youth, domestic and gender-based violence and identified strategies to address violence in Antigua and Barbuda, namely legislative review and reform, capital investment, media engagement, among other areas.[14]

24. Regarding women´s human rights, particular attention is drawn to the pending trial before the High Court on the constitutionality of the Offences Against the Person Act. This 163-year-old law permits abortion only when the mother's life is at risk and imposes penalties of up to ten years in prison for women who undergo abortions and up to two years for those who assist them.[15] Although the Attorney General's Chambers filed a motion to strike out the constitutional challenge, the High Court ruled that, given its substantial public interest implications, the question of repeal requires further evidence and careful interpretation through a full judicial process in the form of a trial.[16] In February 2025, the Court of Appeal confirmed this ruling;[17] therefore, the constitutional challenge is expected to proceed to trial in the High Court.

25. On the other hand, efforts have been undertaken to address violence and discrimination against women. According to the State, the Directorate of Gender Affairs (DOGA) is currently leading the development of a National Gender and Social Inclusion Policy and recently finalized a Gender Based Violence Action Plan.[18] In addition, in March 2025 a capacity building workshop on the Caribbean Model for Behavioral and Cultural Change was held, aimed at addressing youth violence, domestic violence, and gender-based violence, bringing together key national and regional stakeholders.[19] However, civil society organizations reported a significant increase in domestic violence cases this year, with 99% of the cases involving female victims.[20]

26. Regarding trafficking in persons, the Commission observes that in January, the State incorporated the Trafficking in Persons Prevention Committee (TIPPC) and the Trafficking in Persons Prevention Unit (TIPPU) in its budget for calendar year 2025.[21] The TIPPU follows the principle of "prevention is better than cure" and aims at raising public awareness about human trafficking by using conventional media, a development of a website, the presence of social media to engage younger audiences, and by investing in billboards for counter-trafficking messaging. In addition, the IACHR takes note that in July, the State formalized its participation in the CARICOM Arrest Warrant Treaty, a landmark initiative aimed at facilitating swift and efficient cooperation in the surrender of individuals who are wanted for prosecution or to serve a sentence in another member state for different types of offences including trafficking in persons.[22]

27. Regarding advances on the situation of Afro-descendant persons and the fight against racial discrimination, the Antigua and Barbuda Reparations Support Commission (ABRSC) led Emancipation-191 commemorations, highlighting memory and reparatory justice.[23] The State also announced a Cabinet committee to recommend street renaming to honor Afro-Antillean leaders[24] and promoted cultural activities that strengthened Afro-Caribbean heritage and youth participation.[25]

28. At the same time, the Commission notes with concern disputes over land governance and consultation in Barbuda, which affect Afro-descendant communities' cultural rights and tenure security. Media reported government plans to relocate the Barbuda Dock near sand-mining zones to accommodate luxury real-estate development, amid questions about community consultation.[26] Likewise, broader infrastructure proposals for Louis Hill were likewise criticized for limited engagement with the Barbuda Council.[27]

29. In addition, the IACHR takes note that in August, a teenager was fatally shot by police in Bolans which resulted in protests outside Police Headquarters demanding accountability. According to press reports, the Acting Commissioner of Police pledged a "thorough, transparent, and comprehensive" investigation.[28]

30. Moreover, there were demands from civil society for greater protection of the population's human rights in the face of the challenges of escalating climate disasters, global financial instability, and entrenched inequalities that threaten the lives and livelihoods of Afro-descendant communities.[29] In that sense, the Antigua and Barbuda Meteorological Service issued short-term drought warnings and projected drier-than-normal conditions, signaling risks for water access that may disproportionately affect low-income Afro-descendant communities.[30]

31. Regarding the rights of LGBTI persons, on January 25, a human rights advocate, Orden David, who successfully challenged the country's anti-sodomy laws in a 2022, was reported missing. Mr. David was last seen leaving an establishment in the country's capital city, St. John's. As of the end of November, he had not been located despite extensive police searches using drones and K-9 units.[31] Additionally, in June an anti-LGBTQ+ ad campaign was displayed at V.C. Bird International Airport during the OAS General Assembly, which drew criticism for undermining the OAS's commitment to equality and inclusion.[32]

32. Regarding the situation of persons with disabilities, civil society has welcomed the decision to drop charges against an elderly man with disabilities, whose controversial arrest had raised public concern about the treatment of persons with disabilities by law enforcement authorities.[33] Nevertheless, recent research has highlighted that the population with disabilities in Antigua and Barbuda continues to face disproportionate levels of poverty and social exclusion, which hinder the full exercise and enjoyment of their human rights, particularly with respect to access to healthcare, where challenges exist with accessing therapies, medications, and specialized medical professionals.[34]

33. As for persons deprived of liberty, the Commission values the policy announced in 2025 aimed at the release of persons convicted for possession of small amounts of drugs and for health infractions committed during the COVID-19 pandemic. The measure includes the expungement of criminal records and the possibility of reintegration into the labor market through formal employment programs, such as the "HAPPI Programme," in cases where genuine rehabilitation has been demonstrated.[35]

34. In relation to the death penalty, the IACHR notes that the State continues to retain the death penalty punishment, even though no executions have been carried out since 1991, no one is currently under this penalty, and nobody has been sentenced to death since 1991.[36]

II. ARGENTINA

- General considerations

35. In 2025, the Argentine Republic (hereinafter, "Argentina") achieved progress on the protection of data in the public administration, reduced poverty rates and enhanced strategies against human trafficking. The Commission also noted the prosecution of cases involving violence against LGBTI persons, as well as the steps taken to advance the appointment of the National Ombudsperson and the head of the Office of the Ombudsperson for the Rights of Children and Adolescents.

36. However, the Commission identified significant challenges with regard to judicial independence and the sustainability of human rights institutions amid the closure or restructuring of programs focused on gender, diversity, historical memory and indigenous peoples, alongside legal initiatives that could further deteriorate the human rights situation of historically vulnerable groups. The Commission also noted setbacks in social security protections for older adults, persons with disabilities, retirees and pensioners, as well as reports of repression during peaceful protests. Furthermore, legislative reforms and initiatives relating to citizen security and human mobility, among other issues, were introduced, raising concerns about their potential impact on human rights.

37. On October 6, 2025, the State submitted its response to the Commission's request for information to prepare this chapter.[37]

- Specific issues

38. With regard to democratic institutionality, Argentina created the Personal Data Protection Program within the National Public Administration,[38] aimed at enhancing the safe management of information across public institutions. Official data reported a decline in poverty from 53 percent to 38 percent in the first half of the year,[39] while UNICEF underscored a reduction in child monetary poverty, despite the persistence of marked inequalities.[40] The State also moved forward with a new selection process for the National Ombudsperson, following 16 years of vacancy, and the shortlist for the Office of the Ombudsperson for the Rights of Children and Adolescents was approved.

39. Challenges to citizen participation, a core component of democratic life, were reported. In this regard, the Commission issued a press release expressing concern over the violence that took place during the retirees' protest march in Buenos Aires on March 12, 2025. Said march was part of a series of peaceful demonstrations held weekly since 2024 in opposition to the economic austerity measures implemented by the State and their impact on the rights of pensioners.[41] On that date, the State responded to the protest with a security operation that involved the use of tear gas, rubber bullets and water cannons. The operation left 20 people injured, including an 87-year-old retiree who suffered a head injury. Additionally, 114 people were detained, including a 12-year-old boy and a 14-year-old teenager, who were later released by the judiciary. Direct attacks against journalists were also documented, including the case of a photojournalist who was critically injured by a tear gas canister, as well as several other journalists who were threatened, physically assaulted and prevented from carrying out their professional duties.[42]

40. As for human rights institutions, Argentina moved forward with a new process to select the National Ombudsperson, following 16 years of vacancy.[43] Likewise, the Congress approved a shortlist for the appointment of the new Ombudsperson for the Rights of Children and Adolescents.[44]

41. The State undertook actions that resulted in the dismantling or weakening of human rights public policies and institutions at the national level and across provinces and municipalities. Said actions included the restructuring, merger or shutting down of entities that are key to human rights public policy, such as the dissolution of the Secretariat for Territorial Development, Habitat and Housing, and the proposal to merge the Ministry of Justice and the Ministry of Security.[45] In particular, at least 30 programs and institutions related to gender and diversity, historical memory, assistance to victims of human trafficking and matters concerning children, adolescents and families were closed or restructured.[46] These measures were adopted as part of a broader policy of fiscal tightening, reductions in public spending and State reorganization pursued by the executive branch.[47]

42. In terms of citizen security, the Commission noted the renovation of the Federal Police under the new Federal Police statute, which aligns with standards of the United States Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) for the investigation of federal and complex crimes. The State described these measures as part of an institutional response to organized and complex crime, underscoring the need for technological modernization and inter-institutional coordination in criminal investigations and the prevention of high-complexity offenses.[48]

43. However, this reform reportedly empowers the Federal Police to engage in cyber patrolling and other digital surveillance activities, and to conduct warrantless arrests,[49] which, according to civil society organizations, could lead to abuse, population control practices and detention conditions incompatible with human dignity.[50]

44. As regards challenges to access to justice and judicial independence, President Javier Milei made recess appointments of two justices to the Supreme Court of Justice of the Nation by means of Decree No. 137/2025, without prior Senate approval.[51] The Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) warned that such practice could undermine the separation of powers and judicial independence, which are core principles of the Rule of Law.[52] The Senate ultimately rejected both nominations, as neither candidate secured approval from the upper chamber.[53]

45. With regard to memory, truth and justice, developments in 2025 included the identification of the 139th granddaughter and the 140th grandson, as well as two foreign nationals who had been disappeared since 1976, underscoring the ongoing relevance of public policies in this area.[54] Human remains were also discovered at an army site where a clandestine detention center had operated.[55] According to the Office of the Ombudsperson for Crimes Against Humanity, between 2006 and September 18, 2025, courts issued 353 judgments, resulting in 1,202 convictions and 213 acquittals for crimes against humanity.[56] Of these judgments, 17 percent featured convictions for offenses related to sexual violence against victims of state-sponsored terrorism.[57]

46. Notwithstanding progress in the search for and identification of disappeared persons, the Commission voices its concern over the situation of the National Genetic Data Bank following the enactment of a presidential decree that revoked its institutional autonomy.[58] The Commission noted challenges arising from the weakening or closure of sites devoted to the preservation of memory, alongside the dismissal of specialized staff and budgetary constraints. Reported cases include the closure of the Haroldo Conti Cultural Center, the suspension of funding for the Memory Site at the Former ESMA, the merger of the National Memory Archive and the Memory Site Museum at the Former ESMA, and the transfer of its building to the Office of the Public Prosecutor,[59] as well as the removal of plaques commemorating the Military Juntas trials from the Supreme

47. In relation to the rights of women, the Commission observed that existing institutions have been weakened. Fourteen federal programs designed to promote gender equality and to prevent, investigate and address gender-based violence were eliminated. These included, among others, the Urgent Support and Immediate Comprehensive Assistance Program for Cases of Extreme Gender-Based Violence (PAU), the program under which menstrual hygiene products were provided and the National Registry of Social Organizations Working on Gender and Diversity Issues.[63] Moreover, state authorities announced their intention to remove femicide as an offense from the Criminal Code[64] and to criminalize alleged "false complaints" in cases of gender-based violence or sexual violence.[65] If implemented, these measures would represent a serious setback in the protection and guarantee of the right of women to live a life free from violence.

48. Meanwhile, gender-based violence against women remained at alarming levels. The National Office of the Ombudsperson reported 124 femicides between January and June 2025,[66] while civil society organizations recorded 178 femicides and 287 attempted femicides during the same period. Most of these acts were committed by the victims' current or former partners, and 14 were reportedly perpetrated by members of the security forces.[67] Some cases displayed extreme cruelty and were preceded by enforced disappearances, torture and sexual violence.[68] In addition, access to contraceptive methods was severely curtailed following budget cuts to the National Plan for the Prevention of Unintended Pregnancy in Adolescence (ENIA Plan).[69] Access to voluntary and legal termination of pregnancy within the health system also remained restricted due to the lack of information, delays, dissuasive practices, the abusive use of conscientious objections, and understaffing.[70]

49. As for the situation of persons with disabilities, the State reported progress in the reform of the Disability Certification Regulations, together with updates to the National Registry of Professionals and the National Registry on the Situation of Persons with Disabilities. Argentina further informed that programs financed through the National Fund for Social Inclusion (FONADIS) had been implemented to support income-generating activities, strengthen institutions employing persons with disabilities and facilitate access to assistive technology. The State also developed accessibility policies, including the production of materials in Braille and sign language, and carried out training initiatives for national and provincial public officials.[71]

50. Nevertheless, numerous demonstrations led by persons with disabilities and their representative organizations were held in response to austerity measures and reforms that negatively impact their rights.[72] In addition to the presidential veto of the Disability Emergency Law,[73] it was reported that the National Disability Agency (ANDIS) had suspended more than 110,500 non-contributory work-disability pensions.[74] In parallel, the Commission noted an investigation involving the Secretary General of the Presidency, who is also the President's sister, concerning alleged bribes in the procurement of medications for persons with disabilities.[75]

51. With regard to the situation of older persons, the executive branch terminated the free medication policy for retirees, leaving between 2 million and 3 million people without full medication coverage.[76] The government also froze pension bonuses[77] and vetoed the law that raised pensions and reinstated the retirement contribution regularization scheme.[78] These measures triggered protests by older persons and trade unions, as noted in the section on democratic institutionality above.

52. Regarding the rights of indigenous peoples, the State achieved progress on the issuance of identity cards for communities in the provinces of Tucumán,[79] Catamarca[80] and Santa Fe.[81] However, the repeal of Law No. 26,160 (the Territorial Emergency Law) resulted in eviction operations affecting indigenous communities in Chubut, Río Negro, Tucumán, Jujuy, Neuquen, Chaco and San Juan that were seeking recognition of their ancestral land rights. In this context, these communities reported the destruction of homes and arbitrary arrests.[82]

53. Furthermore, the Community Strengthening Program under the National Institute for Indigenous Affairs (INAI), which was designed to fund legal assistance for the defense of indigenous territories, was dismantled.[83] The Limay Kurref, Suyai Leufu and El Sosneado communities were also affected by the revocation of cadastral and legal surveys previously conducted by the State, through which their traditional occupation of lands and territories had been recognized.[84] Members of indigenous communities and land defenders continued to face criminalization; in particular, a member of the Mapuche community of Pillan Mawiza was arrested for allegedly causing fires.[85] In addition, stigmatization of indigenous peoples in official media persisted.[86] It was further reported that the INAI is projected to undergo budget reductions of 15.5 percent in nominal terms and 25 percent in real terms in 2026,[87] and concerns were raised over the lack of prior consultation with indigenous communities in the adoption of Law No. V-202 in Chubut, under which the protocol for free, prior and informed consultation was created.[88]

54. As for the situation of persons in the context of human mobility, Argentina amended Emergency Decree No. 366, which in turn modified Migration Law No. 25,871. The reform seeks to regulate the "uncontrolled" entry of migrants to the country, who are portrayed as a threat to national security and as an excessive burden that could lead to the "collapse" of public services.[89] The decree broadens the grounds for expulsion, abolishes certain appeal mechanisms established under the Migration Law and reduces procedural time limits by half, thus restricting access to justice. The decree also expands the grounds for and increases the duration of detention for the purpose of expulsion, which may extend for up to 30 days even without a final judgment in place.[90]

55. Moreover, the executive branch issued Decree No. 646 to regulate the General Law on the Recognition and Protection of Refugees No. 26,165. Said decree approves the creation of "reception centers" where asylum seekers may be required to remain during the processing of their claims, with departures allowed only for return to their country of origin or onward travel to a third country. The decree also authorizes the rejection of applications deemed "clearly meritless," based on "subjective preferences" or "economic convenience," or considered "incoherent, insufficient or implausible," and provides for the automatic withdrawal of an application, without exception, if the applicant leaves the country while the claim is pending.[91]

56. With respect to human trafficking, the Ministry of Justice advanced the implementation of the National Program for Comprehensive Reparations for Victims of Human Trafficking, which provides for financial restitution and compensation for victims of trafficking and exploitation.[92] The Commission also notes that preventive action was taken and victim identification operations were carried out in contexts of forced labor aboard vessels.[93] In addition, searches and seizures were conducted in Córdoba, Mendoza and the Buenos Aires Metropolitan Area, resulting in the rescue of adolescents subjected to labor exploitation[94] and persons exploited for sexual purposes.[95]

57. In terms of progress regarding the situation of persons deprived of liberty, the State delivered training in agricultural production to improve the prospects for social reintegration of those nearing release from prisons across the country.[96] However, challenges emerged in connection with the enactment of legislation expanding the use of custodial measures. In particular, Law No. 27,785 introduced reforms including the incorporation of the "repeat offending" parameter into decisions on whether to apply alternative measures instead of pretrial detention and the implementation of rules regarding the consecutive serving of sentences.[97] Moreover, Law No. 27,786 authorizes the detention of individuals for up to 48 hours in the investigation of offenses related to organized crime, with the possibility of extending it for up to 15 days in highly complex cases.[98] In addition, in the province of Córdoba, the excessive use of pretrial detention has resulted in increased overcrowding and deplorable detention conditions.[99]

58. Meanwhile, the National Chamber of Criminal Cassation (CFCP) upheld the constitutionality of national legislation barring persons convicted of certain drug-related offenses from accessing custodial benefits, including temporary release.[100] Similarly, measures affecting social reintegration were reported, such as the dismantling of student associations within the Federal Penitentiary Service, which has prevented persons deprived of liberty from remaining in educational institutions or study areas beyond their scheduled class hours.[101]

59. With regard to the situation of Afro-descendants and the fight against racial discrimination, the Commission takes note of the submission of Bill No. 0698-D-2025 to the Chamber of Deputies, aimed at ratifying the Inter-American Convention against Racism, Racial Discrimination and Related Forms of Intolerance (A-68).[102] Nevertheless, civil society organizations reported that the closure of specialized institutions, such as the National Institute Against Discrimination, Xenophobia and Racism (INADI) and the Commission for the Recognition of the Afro-Argentine Community, has hindered access to justice for Afro-descendant persons.[103]

60. Furthermore, the current policy on security and control measures has disproportionately impacted Afro-descendant people and African migrants.[104] In this regard, on February 14, 2025, the City of Buenos Aires Police Force carried out a large-scale operation that evicted more than 5,000 street vendors and conducted dozens of searches and seizures, the majority of those affected being migrants of Senegalese origin.[105]

61. In relation to the rights of LGBTI persons, the Commission notes progress in the prosecution of cases involving violence. In particular, prosecutors sought to bring police officers to trial for the transfemicide of Sofía Fernández, who died while in custody in 2023;[106] the National Court of Appeals ordered the reopening of the investigation into the 2024 triple murder of lesbian women in Barracas, mandating that it be pursued with a gender perspective;[107] and the Court of Criminal Cassation of the Province of Buenos Aires upheld a sentence of life imprisonment for aggravated murder motivated by hatred towards the victim's gender identity in the case of Tehuel de la Torre.[108] In addition, Federal Court No. 2 of Paraná struck down as unconstitutional a government emergency decree prohibiting gender-affirming treatment for persons under 18, a ruling that was later upheld by the Federal Court of Appeals.[109]

62. In terms of challenges, the Commission took note of the prohibition of gender-affirming treatment and surgeries for persons under 18 years of age;[110] the enactment of Decree No. 61/2025, which prevents the relocation of incarcerated trans persons according to their gender identity by requiring placement based on the sex recorded at the time of the offense;[111] and the removal of comprehensive sex education (ESI) content from official websites.[112] The Commission also noted that crimes motivated by prejudice increased by 70 percent compared with 2024, with 102 such crimes recorded in the first half of 2025, including four murders.[113] Moreover, the Commission learned of reports concerning the systematic torture of trans women in Buenos Aires Province prisons, particularly in Sierra Chica,[114] as well as attacks on the home of trans rights defender Claudia Vásquez Haro.[115]

63. As for progress regarding the rights of children and adolescents, the State deposited in September its instrument of ratification of the Hague Convention on Jurisdiction, Applicable Law, Recognition, Enforcement and Co-operation in respect of Parental Responsibility and Measures for the Protection of Children, which will enter into force in Argentina on January 1, 2026.[116] Additionally, in October, the Chamber of Deputies endorsed the candidates proposed by the Bicameral Committee to lead the Office of the Ombudsperson for the Rights of Children and Adolescents, subject to approval by the Senate.[117]

64. However, the State faced challenges following its decision in March to terminate at least 10 social and cultural programs administered by the Secretariat for Childhood, Adolescence and Family of the Ministry of Human Capital. These measures, formalized through 11 resolutions published in the Official Gazette, resulted in the dismantling of initiatives aimed at the promotion of rights, access to cultural and recreational spaces, and related subsidies.[118]

65. In addition, according to records from the Provincial Commission for Memory of the Province of Buenos Aires, the State has failed to adequately oversee and ensure the rights of children in institutional care in that province, due to inter alia the lack of effective control by the competent provincial authority, thereby enabling practices such as torture, cruel and inhuman treatment, confinement, humiliation, cold showers and instances of sexual abuse in specific facilities. These facilities have also shown gaps in access to healthcare, including interruptions in treatment, increased hospitalizations due to inadequate mental health support and excessive use of medical treatment. In this context, the Commission requested information from the State pursuant to Article 41 of the American Convention, but did not receive a response.[119]

66. The legislative debate on lowering the age of criminal responsibility continued in 2025, consistent with the trend observed in 2024. New initiatives introduced that year proposed setting the age of criminal responsibility between 10 and 13 years, while others included keeping the threshold at 14, but imposing harsher penalties of up to 15 years of imprisonment.[120]

III. BAHAMAS

- General considerations

67. As it relates to progress, the IACHR highlights the establishment of a parliamentary Human Rights Committee and notes efforts to implement the recently enacted Ombudsman Act. In addition, the Commission highlights a decrease in homicides in the State and ongoing efforts to improve the efficiency of its judicial system. Moreover, the State launched a new Domestic Stand-Alone Unit within its Police Force dedicated to providing victims with specialized support when reporting acts of violence. Further, the Commission welcomes the openness of The Bahamas for the conduct of a technical cooperation and working visit to the State on December 3 and 4, 2025.

68. As it relates to challenges, the Commission continued to observe with concern the State's ongoing practice of deporting irregular migrants, notably Haitian nationals, without proper assessment of international protection needs. Furthermore, the IACHR takes note of the inconsistent implementation of disability legislation and lack of accessible infrastructure across all islands.

69. The State did not respond to the request for information to draft this chapter.

- Specific issues

70. With regards to democratic institutionality, in its 2024 Annual Report, the IACHR noted the introduction of the Independent Commission of Investigations Bill which aimed to establish of an independent Commission to conduct investigations into serious allegations of criminal activity by members of the security forces and specified public officials.[121] This legislation was enacted by the Parliament in April 2025, however at the time of writing of this report, it remains unenforced.[122] In this regard, civil society has noted that until the Commission is fully implemented, public confidence in anti-corruption efforts will faulter. They have called for greater transparency in the establishment process of the Commission and have warned against the practices of vague timelines and limited funding to such bodies by the State.[123]

71. In relation to human rights institutions, the IACHR highlights the establishment of a parliamentary Human Rights Committee. In March, the State established the parliamentary Human Rights Committee to advise the government on human rights matters and ensure legislative compliance with international obligations. Additionally, the Committee will be tasked with monitoring and evaluating human rights conditions across The Bahamas and overseeing the implementation of human rights legislation and policies.[124]

72. Moreover, as previously reported by the Commission in its 2024 Annual Report, the State passed legislation to establish the Office of Ombudsman.[125] However, at the time of writing of this report, the Office remains unestablished. Despite this, the State has indicated ongoing efforts to operationalize the Act, including the drafting of procedural manuals, staffing plans, and training initiatives. The selection process for the Ombudsman has reportedly advanced, with plans to appoint the Ombudsman selection committee. The State emphasized that these actions represent a significant step towards establishing an independent mechanism tasked with investigating and addressing complaints against public administration, as part of its broader efforts to enhance governance, accountability, and oversight.[126]

73. Further, in December the IACHR conducted a technical cooperation and promotional visit to The Bahamas. This visit focused on promoting the Inter-American System of Human Rights in order to strengthen the Commission's relations with the country and promoting technical cooperation mechanisms in human rights matters. In this context, the visit sought to better understand the needs and challenges faced by the State, civil society, and other non-state actors regarding the promotion and protection of human rights. Additionally, the IACHR monitored the precautionary measure in force regarding persons in immigration detention at Carmichael Road Detention Center.[127]

74. Regarding citizen security, according to publicly available information, there were 64 homicides reported as of September 2025 which represented 28% decrease from the 89 homicides recorded over the same period in 2024.[128] This represents a homicide rate of 15.9 per 100,000 inhabitants as of September.[129]

75. Moreover, as previously reported by the Commission, the State enacted new Anti-Gang legislation in April 2024.[130] However, according to public reports, there have been no prosecutions under the new legislation since its passage. In this regard, the IACHR notes that the State intends to amend the legislation in order to extend witness anonymity protections to encompass gang related activity in order to protect witnesses who decide to offer information.[131]

76. With regards to access to justice, the Commission notes the State's ongoing efforts to improve the efficiency of its judicial system. In this regard, it was noted that the Office of the Director of Public Prosecutions successfully concluded 47% of its criminal matters between July 2024 and June 2025 through either convictions or plea agreements. Of the 163 matters disposed of during the period, 12 resulted in convictions, and 66 were resolved through plea deals.[132]

77. Regarding the human rights of women, the State launched a new Domestic Stand-Alone Unit within the Royal Bahamas Police Force. This dedicated Unit, staffed by specialized officers, provides victims with counseling, immediate care, information, and emotional support when reporting acts of violence.[133] On the other hand, the Protection Against Violence Commission has not yet been established, despite the enactment of the Protection Against Violence Bill in 2023, which mandated its creation. This Commission will be responsible for coordinating various ministries to deliver comprehensive support to victims, including access to adequate shelters, as well as technical assistance to strengthen the national response to violence.[134]

78. Lastly, according to publicly available information, the Government does not intend to advance the proposed amendment to the Sexual Offences Act that would criminalize marital rape.[135] This amendment, drafted by the Office of the Attorney General in 2022, remains unaddressed despite the seriousness of the situation and the repeated calls from civil society organizations to sanction all forms of sexual violence.[136]

79. With respect to the rights persons in the context of human mobility, the Commission continued to observe with concern the State's ongoing practice of deporting irregular migrants, notably Haitian nationals, without proper assessment of international protection needs.[137] Information disseminated on social media indicates that a total of 13,000 deportations may have taken place in less than four years under the current Bahamian administration.[138] However, the Commission does not have information regarding the manner in which these deportations have been carried out.

80. As per civil society organizations, Bahamian authorities appear to disproportionately target specific nationalities in the enforcement of migration control measures, particularly persons of Haitian nationality, who would face frequent detention and arrest. The organizations also indicated that discriminatory practices in documentation may exist, which expose persons of Haitian descent born in The Bahamas to detention and deportation. Although these individuals are not treated as foreigners, they are also not treated as citizens, as they face barriers in obtaining identity documents to confirm their legal status, leaving them under constant threat of arrest and deportation.[139]

81. In addition, organizations reported on the detention conditions of migrants, refugees, and asylum seekers. According to these organizations, overcrowding, lack of sanitation and nutrition, and restrictions on communication with family members persist at the Carmichael Road Detention Center. They also reported having documented cases of abuse, including one incident of sexual assault, and expressed concern over the lack of access for independent bodies to monitor detention centers and investigate such allegations. Similar conditions have reportedly been documented at Fox Hill Prison, where individuals convicted of migration-related offenses are held.[140]

82. With respect to trafficking in persons, the IACHR welcomes the participation of immigration officers in training initiatives hosted by the IOM focused on human trafficking trends, legal frameworks, and the tools to better protect borders and communities.[141]

83. On the rights of persons with disabilities, it is highlighted that the National Commission for Persons with Disabilities (NCPD) received a significant budget increase to expand programs such as life-skills training, independent living initiatives, and free accessible transportation.[142] The government also launched new grants to support entrepreneurs with disabilities, [143] and actively participated in international forums like the 18th Conference of States Parties to the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities, reaffirming its commitment to equality and inclusion.[144] However, challenges remain in ensuring consistent implementation of disability legislation,[145] expanding accessible infrastructure across all islands,[146] and addressing persistent stigma, particularly around mental health.[147]

84. As for persons deprived of liberty, the Commission takes note of the initiation of construction of a new high and medium security correctional facility alongside a judicial complex, with the stated objective of strengthening security and expanding opportunities for rehabilitation.[148] Reports indicate that the new facilities will include mental health cells, a medical unit, clinic, library, and chapel, representing an effort to integrate basic services into the context of deprivation of liberty.[149]

85. In relation to the death penalty, the IACHR observes that The Bahamas has a de facto moratorium in place. According to the World Coalition Against Capital Punishment, no executions have taken place since 2000, no one has been sentenced to death since this time, and nobody is currently on death row.[150]

IV. BARBADOS

- General considerations

86. As it relates to progress, the IACHR notes the State's advancement in achieving parliamentary reform, and the State's efforts to ameliorate the backlog of cases faced by its judiciary. Moreover, the Commission notes the landmark passage of the Rights of Persons with Disabilities Act, which strengthens legal protections for persons with disabilities. The Commission also highlights a reduction in homicides and further efforts by the State to reduce crime and the introduction statutory paternity leave for the first time.

87. With regards to challenges, the Commission notes with concern increased reports of abuse and neglect against children. Furthermore, the IACHR highlights that discriminatory provisions restricting women's ability to transfer nationality to their children remained in force.

88. The State did not respond to the request for information to draft this chapter.

- Specific issues

89. With regards to democratic institutionality, the IACHR notes the State's advancement in achieving parliamentary reform. As previously reported by the Commission in its 2024 Annual Report,[151] the Parliamentary Reform Commission (PRC) submitted its final Report in July. In this regard, in June 2025, the Parliament of Barbados formally took note of the Report of the PRC. The PRC report makes several recommendations on matters that range from the Office of the President to a code of conduct for Parliamentarians, the calling of elections, and the retention and role of the Senate. The government will now determine which Report recommendations would be referred to a Joint Select Committee for further discussion and consideration.[152]

90. In relation to human rights institutions, the State has an Office of the Ombudsman,[153] which is a member of the Caribbean Ombudsman Association, the Commonwealth Forum of National Human Rights Institutions,[154] and the International Ombudsman Institute.[155] According to publicly available information, the Office of the Ombudsman submitted its 2023 Annual Report in May 2025. In this regard, the Office noted that it had received complaints to investigate concerns against several government agencies, including the Ministry of Health and Wellness, the Barbados Police Service and the Ministry of Education. These complaints ranged from protracted wait times to access healthcare services, police conduct, delays in application for pension, among other areas.[156] Additionally, the Commission notes the appointment of the first Human Rights Commissioner in December. According to official information, the Human Rights Commission will act as an independent body dedicated to promoting, protecting, and defending human rights in Barbados. This Commission will be empowered to investigate human rights complaints, develop educational campaigns to raise awareness of human rights, and monitor Barbados' compliance with international human rights treaties and national legislation.[157]

91. Regarding citizen security, the IACHR notes the State's efforts to reduce crime with the passage of two Acts in Parliament namely the Interception of Communications Act and the Criminal Proceedings (Witness Anonymity) Act. The Interception of Communications Act empowers a Judge to authorize the controlled interception of certain communications as well as the acquisition and disclosure of data regarding such communications, by way of a warrant. These interceptions will be confined to the communications of individuals who are deemed to be involved in criminal activities.[158] Moreover, the State passed the Criminal Proceedings (Witness Anonymity) Act gives Courts new powers to shield the identity of witnesses in criminal trials. These include allowing evidence to be given remotely, using screens or voice distortion, and omitting personal details from witness statements.[159]

92. According to public information, there was a 7% decrease in homicides during the period January 1 and October 22, 2025. A total of 38 homicides were reported up to October 22, compared to 41

homicides reported for the same period in 2024.[160] This indicates that the State's homicide rate is 10.62 per 100,000 inhabitants up to that date.[161]

93. With regards to access to justice, the Commission notes the appointment of three new Supreme Court judges in January to assist in rectifying the backlog of cases faced by the State's judiciary.[162] According to public information, there was a record backlog of 1,606 criminal cases in the High Court in January. In this context, the Attorney General warned of increased constitutional claims and damages against the State due to inordinate court delays.[163]

94. Concerning the rights of children, the Commission observes concerns raised by the State's Child Care Board relating to reports of child abuse and neglect. According to official information, the Board reported increased reports of neglect, where young children are being seen at the Hospital for ingestion of hazardous substances, burns to the body; and other injuries. Regarding child abuse, the statistics provided showed that for the last four years, the Board recorded over 400 reported cases each year; with 677 cases reported for the period 2023-2024. In order to combat this scourge, the Board has undertaken several sensitizations with various stakeholders to raise awareness about child abuse and neglect, including the Police Service, the media and faith-based institutions. [164]

95. Regarding women's human rights, the IACHR highlights the passage the Family Leave Bill in August in the House of Assembly, which introduced statutory paternity leave for the first time. Aimed at promoting full and equal parental participation in child-rearing, the Bill grants three weeks of paid paternity leave, establishes workplace protections for fathers, replaces the "maternity grant" with a gender-neutral "child grant," and extends statutory maternity leave from 12 to 14 weeks.[165] However, publicly available information indicates that women continue to perform two to three times more unpaid care work than men, earn only 86 to 87 percent of men's wages, and that up to half of women with partners experience intimate partner violence.[166]

96. Regarding persons in the context of human mobility, the Commission observes that the proposal for a new Immigration Bill[167] is currently under second reading before Parliament.[168] Furthermore, it takes note of the government's decision to disseminate this draft law to facilitate its review and receive input from interested parties and the public.[169] As of the date of this report, IACHR had no further information regarding the progress of the consultations carried out by the government.

97. With regards to statelessness, the Commission takes note of the government's decision to disseminate the draft of the Citizenship Law in order to facilitate its review and receive input from interested parties and the public.[170] However, as of the date of this report, laws containing discriminatory provisions regarding the ability of women to transfer nationality to their children remained in force.[171]

98. In relation to trafficking in persons, the IACHR takes note that in June, the Department of Immigration with the support from the IOM participated in a Border and Migration Management Assessment initiative (BMMA). Through this initiative, experts will work alongside IOM specialists to build capacity on the BMMA methodology, conduct data analysis, and enhance national capacities for detecting irregular movements and combating among others, trafficking in persons.[172]

99. Regarding the situation of Afro-descendant persons and the fight against racial discrimination, the State and regional bodies reported the formal launch of the Season of Emancipation with an explicit reparation focus, preservation commitments for the Newton Enslaved Burial Ground,[173] and CARICOM's welcome of the UN Second International Decade for People of African Descent.[174] In March, Afreximbank and national authorities announced a major Africa–Caribbean trade hub in Bridgetown with an accompanying Urban Transformation Fund aimed at neighborhood upgrades.[175] The period also included high-level regional diplomacy on reparatory justice during the Bridgetown CARICOM summit[176] and commemorations of the Day of National Significance linking the 1937 uprising to contemporary inclusion.[177]

100. At the same time, there are challenges requiring ongoing safeguards and community engagement. Publicly available reports included concerns and calls for rigorous impact-mitigation and inclusive consultation around works at the Newton Enslaved Burial Ground, requiring additional protective measures and dialogue.[178] There were social demands that cultural expression should be coupled with broader social and climate-justice agendas to confront structural legacies.[179] Civil society also mobilized to protest the high cost of living, affecting particularly low-income Afro-descendent families.[180] Furthermore, there were multiple marches in Bridgetown calling for solutions to rising crime and organizations protested a proposed wiretap legislation citing risks to privacy and potential racial profiling.[181]

101. Regarding the rights of LGBTI persons, Equals Barbados with PAHO's support launched PRIDE Month 2025 in Barbados under the theme "More Than an Existence, A Life!". The celebration showcased LGBTQ+ rights, culture, and resilience.[182] Additionally, a two-day PAHO consultation was held in July to discuss ways to improve LGBTQ+ health and well-being.[183]

102. Regarding the situation of persons with disabilities, several landmark measures have been introduced, including the passage of the Rights of Persons with Disabilities Act, which addresses education, employment, healthcare, and transportation, while strengthening legal protections for persons with disabilities.[184] The government has also taken steps to make all short-term rental accommodations universally accessible through the Tourist Accommodation Bill.[185] Additionally, mental health reforms have been expanded, incorporating community consultations, increased funding, and a shift toward community-based, stigma-reducing models.[186]

103. Despite those advancements, the new legislation does not establish mandatory employment quotas, despite high unemployment among persons with disabilities. The implementation of accessibility standards, particularly in educational institutions, tourist accommodations, and public infrastructure, requires stronger enforcement, and societal stigma, along with resource constraints, continues to hinder full inclusion.[187]

104. With respect to the rights of persons deprived of liberty, the Commission welcomes the measures adopted by the State to expand access to higher education in the national prison system. Particularly, in May, authorities announced a program at Dodds Prison to provide university and master's level courses for inmates, with the stated aim of fostering rehabilitation and supporting reintegration into society.[188] According to official information, the initiative also extends to correctional officers and is complemented by training in agricultural production in cooperation with the University of the West Indies Cave Hill Campus.[189]

105. In relation to the death penalty, the Commission once again notes that there has been no progress in the removal of the death penalty from the statute book, although no executions have been carried out since 1984.[190] According to the most updated information, as of May 2023, there were six individuals under sentence of death.[191] The IACHR once again calls on the State to abolish capital punishment.

V. BELIZE

- General considerations

106. As it relates to progress, the Commission highlights a reduction in homicides in the State and the introduction of the first Sentencing Guidelines to promote consistency and transparency in sentencing practices in the criminal justice system. The IACHR also notes the extension of the amnesty program and the commencement of the implementation of the Border Presence Project of the Refugees Department. Moreover, the Commission also welcomes the coming into force of the Disabilities Act.

107. As it relates to challenges, the IACHR notes with concern reported high rates of child marriage and early unions despite the enactment of legislation to prevent such practices. In addition, the Commission takes note of several incidents of violence against persons with disabilities and older persons living in homes and care centers. Furthermore, the Commission notes the continued use of SOEs as a crime suppression mechanism.

108. The State did not respond to the request for information to draft this chapter.

- Specific issues

109. With regards to democratic institutionality, the IACHR notes the holding of general elections on March 12, 2025 to elect the 31 members of the House of Representatives. According to the official results of the Elections and Boundaries Commission, the incumbent government under the People's United Party won a second term in office winning 26 of the 31 seats, with the United Democratic Party securing 5 seats.[192] The Commission highlights the OAS Electoral Observation Mission Preliminary Report which noted that the election process was conducted peacefully. In addition, the Report recommended urgently advancing the redrawing of electoral boundaries in order to better reflect the distribution of voters across Belize, providing targeted financial support to promote the political participation of women and strengthening the autonomy of electoral management bodies, which includes ensuring appropriate oversight.[193]

110. Regarding human rights institutions, the Commission notes that in March, the State relocated the office of the Ombudsman from Belize City to Belmopan, the capital city. According to the State, this new office location will enhance accessibility, efficiency, and service delivery for all Belizeans seeking the assistance of the Ombudsman.[194]

111. Moreover, in September, the Ombudsman submitted its 2024 Annual Report to the National Assembly. The Report details major issues such as delays in service delivery, abuse of authority and it also highlights significant matters, including concerns about oversight during States of Emergency (SOEs) and the importance of the establishment of a National Human Rights Institution (NHRI). Regarding SOEs, the Ombudsman noted prolonged pre-trial detentions and deficiencies in the implementation of the SOE regulations which led to derogation of constitutional protections including the rights to due process and to humane treatment. In this regard, the Ombudsman recommended increasing consultation with a wider range of stakeholders including civil society and legal experts and human rights organizations and strengthening oversight mechanisms to ensure detainees' rights are upheld.[195]

112. In relation to the establishment of an NHRI, the Ombudsman noted the intention of the State to integrate the NHRI into the office of the Ombudsman. As such, the Ombudsman recommended urgent action to finalize the legislative framework for the integration of the functions of an NHRI and the enhancement of institutional capacity of Ombudsman's Office to manage these new responsibilities.[196]

113. Regarding citizen security, according to the Belize Crime Observatory, there were 41 homicides reported for the period January to June 2025, which represented an approximately 29% decrease as compared to the 58 homicides reported for the same period in 2024.[197] This represents a homicide rate of 9.8 per 100,000 inhabitants as of June 2024.[198]

114. On the other hand, the IACHR notes the State's continued use of SOEs as a crime suppression mechanism. On May 7, the Government declared an SOE covering areas of Belize City, the Belize District, and the Cayo District, which lasted for one month and expired on June 9, 2025, with approximately 48 detainees released from prison at its conclusion. During such SOEs, information available indicates that authorities were granted enhanced powers, including the ability to conduct warrantless searches and arrest or detain individuals without prior judicial authorization.[199]

115. Moreover, the IACHR takes note of important legal developments regarding SOEs in the State. In May, the Supreme Court ruled that the SOE declared in July 2020 and its extensions were unconstitutional. The Court found that the prolonged detention of 16 individuals without charge or prompt judicial review violated basic rights to liberty and due process and determined that the State had not demonstrated that the public safety situation at the time warranted such extraordinary measures or that regular policing was insufficient.[200]

116. Additionally, the Commission notes the introduction of the Belize Constitution (Thirteenth Amendment) Bill introduced into the House of Representatives in May. According to official information, this Bill seeks i) to empower the Governor General, advised by the National Security Council, to declare any part of Belize a "special area," where rights such as freedom of movement and protection from warrantless searches may be suspended; ii) to create a new Gun and Gang Court with powers of both the Magistrate and High Courts in order to expedite gang-related cases; and iii) retroactively to validate past SOEs and regulations, including those ruled unlawful by the Court.[201] The Bill, currently under public consultation,[202] has been criticized by civil society as containing vague language which directly impacts the rights of freedom of movement, expression and privacy. Civil society further alleges that the Bill seeks to criminalize citizens retroactively, silence dissent, and weaken the judicial system.[203]

117. With regards to access to justice, in January, the Senior Courts of Belize issued its first Sentencing Guidelines to promote consistency, transparency, and fairness in sentencing practices across the criminal justice system. According to official information, the Guidelines underscore the Senior Courts of Belize's dedication to providing clear and structured guidance to sentencing to judicial officers, magistrates, and attorneys-at-law aimed at reducing disparities and enhancing the administration of criminal justice.[204]

118. Concerning the rights of children, in May, the State introduced the Families Bill, 2025 which provides for key rights and procedures concerning guardianship, custody, and child maintenance. It is noted that for the first time, this legislation formally recognizes a child's right to receive counseling. At the time of the writing of this report, the Bill was under public consultation.[205]

119. Regarding the human rights of women, rates of child marriage and early unions remain high,[206] despite the legislation enacted last year to prevent such practices.[207] Likewise, according to the CEDAW Committee, the legislation on sexual harassment - praised by the IACHR last year[208]- still lacks comprehensive implementation.[209] In relation to gender-based violence, data from the Belize Police Department indicate that as of August, a total of 1,453 cases of domestic violence had been reported, 74.5% of which were filed by women.[210] Trafficking for purposes of sexual exploitation also persists, affecting both national and foreign women, girls and adolescents.[211]

120. Likewise, persistent challenges to gender equality include gender disparities in secondary and tertiary education, labor force participation, and wages – with women earning only 68% of men's income on average –, as well as limited access to sexual and reproductive healthcare services, including contraceptives and safe abortion. In this regard, the delay in the approval of the Equal Opportunities Bill is noteworthy.[212] This Bill aims to provide protections from discrimination in public life, promote equal opportunities, and address inequality.[213]

121. Regarding persons in the context of human mobility, the IACHR takes note of the signing of an agreement between the General Secretariat of the OAS and the Ministry of Immigration of Belize for the implementation of the Border Presence Project of the Refugees Department. This project seeks to strengthen the presence of the Refugees Department at key border points, which would allow for the early identification and assistance of those in need of international protection.[214]

122. In addition, the Commission continued to monitor the amnesty program implemented in Belize.[215] On May 20, the government approved an extension of the eligibility criteria to apply for this program, moving the residency deadline from 2016 to December 31, 2019, thereby expanding access to permanent residency for those who meet the program's criteria. According to information available to the Commission, from January to June 2025, Belize processed 6,104 amnesty applications, of which 5,843 resulted in positive decisions. Since its implementation to date, 9,537 individuals and their dependents have benefited from the program, a figure that represents 85% of the total number of applicants.[216] According to data from the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR), more than 700 asylum seekers have applied for amnesty.[217]

123. In relation to trafficking in persons, the Commission takes note that in February, the Ministry of Human Development, Families and Indigenous People's Affairs signed a memorandum of understanding with the organization Agape International Mission Belize. This collaborative effort will provide essential support services for survivors of human trafficking and will strengthen actions to improve lives of affected individuals.[218]

124. Regarding the rights of indigenous peoples, Belize presented the Maya Land Tenure Bill in implementation of the 2015 Consent Order. However, indigenous organizations expressed their objections regarding the lack of consultation and meaningful participation, as well as the Bill's restrictive scope in recognizing territorial rights in accordance with ancestral occupation.[219]

125. Regarding the situation of Afro-descendant persons and the fight against racial discrimination, the State reported commemorations highlighting Afro-Belizean history and culture.[220] Authorities and community media also publicized the launch of the free "Belize Kriol Dictionary" app for schools and the public,[221] and plans to issue land titles in Dangriga—a Garifuna-majority area—framed as social inclusion.[222]

126. The Commission also took note of organizational and educational initiatives with potential to advance equality. The National Garifuna Council (NGC) presented to the Ministry of Indigenous Affairs a revised memorandum of understanding to secure, through public policy and legislation, Indigenous rights for the Garifuna people—including language preservation and non-discrimination guarantees—and carried out a membership-building caravan and branch meetings.[223] In parallel, national outlets amplified early-season meteorological warnings and emergency-management authorities launched an online shelter-locator tool.[224]

127. Nevertheless, there were reports of racial discrimination in sport and the need to strengthen prevention and redress mechanisms.[225] Furthermore, organizations and press reported that four Garifuna women workers denounced discriminatory dismissals at a dairy company, while the company denied racism and alleged "business reasons", igniting questions on labor inspections with an anti-discrimination approach.[226] The Commission has also taken note of several episodes of political violence against Afro-descendant persons, and organizations warned that expanding police powers in "special areas" could foster racial profiling, arbitrary detentions, and rights violations.[227]

128. In regard to persons with disabilities, 2025 marked the entry into force of the new Disabilities Act, a landmark piece of legislation aimed at ensuring equality, accessibility, and protection against discrimination for this population.[228]

129. However, several incidents of violence against persons with disabilities were reported, including the murders of an elderly woman and her disabled son,[229] as well as the killing of another man with a disability.[230] Although these crimes may fall within the scope of citizen security, civil society organizations have denounced the absence of adequate protection mechanisms for persons with disabilities.[231]

130. In relation to the rights of older persons, towards the end of 2024, the IACHR welcomed Belize's accession to the Inter-American Convention on the Rights of Older Persons.[232] On the other hand, based on public information, the IACHR has received information on cases of mistreatment, neglect, and abandonment of older persons in homes and care centers, as well as difficulties in accessing health and care services. Concerns have been reported regarding the lack of adequate supervision and control of these spaces, which increases the risks of physical, psychological, and economic abuse.[233]

131. With respect to the rights of persons deprived of liberty, the Commission highlights the successful completion of programs focused on drug rehabilitation, trauma recovery, and gang intervention by 75 inmates at the Belize Central Prison in July.[234] However, the IACHR notes with concern the findings of the United Nations Subcommittee on Prevention of Torture (SPT), which reported that, as of December 31, 2024, Belize was among the 15 States parties not in compliance with Article 17 of the Optional Protocol to the Convention against Torture (OPCAT). It also highlights the SPT's observation that Belize has shown limited or no progress in fulfilling its obligations, with non-compliance extending for more than a decade.[235]

132. Regarding the death penalty, the IACHR notes that there has been no progress with removing this punishment from the statute books, even though no execution has occurred since 1985, and nobody is currently under sentence of death.[236]

VI. BOLIVIA

- General considerations

133. The Plurinational State of Bolivia (hereinafter, "Bolivia") recorded progress through interinstitutional and social efforts that enabled the successful conduct of general elections in a context of political polarization. The State also took the first steps towards an urgently needed judicial reform and the strengthening of access to justice, including the establishment of the First Interinstitutional Dialogue on Judicial Reform. Additionally, Bolivia enacted legislation to protect children and adolescents from forced unions, in line with recommendations issued by the Commission.

134. At the same time, challenges persisted in relation to the lack of judicial independence, the situation of persons deprived of liberty, the persistence of gender-based violence and the risks faced by human rights defenders. Notably, recurring episodes of social conflict and prison violence were reported, together with the excessive use of pretrial detention and overcrowding in detention centers across the country.

135. On October 10, 2025, the State submitted information for the preparation of this chapter.[237]

- Specific issues

136. With regard to democratic institutionality, Bolivia held general elections for the offices of President and Vice President, as well as for members of the Plurinational Legislative Assembly.[238] For the first time, a presidential runoff was conducted to elect the authorities of the executive branch.[239] The electoral process was carried out successfully, albeit in a context of political polarization that, according to the Electoral Observation Mission of the Organization of American States (OAS), included attempts to disrupt the process.[240] During the phase of candidate registration and challenges, legal uncertainty prevailed as to which candidates would ultimately be accepted, due to the absence of clear rules and sufficient time frames for the organization of the process.[241]

137. In this context, the Plurinational Electoral Entity (OEP), through the Supreme Electoral Tribunal (TSE), reiterated its concern over the lack of sufficient guarantees to carry out its mandate independently as a state institution. It further warned of systematic attacks by political and social actors seeking to disrupt the normal operation of the OEP.[242] The Office of the Ombudsperson raised concerns over electoral disinformation.[243] Despite these challenges, the civil society and political forces supported the work of the OEP and ensured that the general elections took place as scheduled.[244] Bolivia also moved forward with the process for selecting OEP authorities.[245]

138. With respect to human rights institutions, the government ordered the closure of the Ministry of Justice and Institutional Transparency, and transferred its responsibilities to newly created vice-ministries within other government departments.[246] The Ombudsman and the civil society raised concerns over the elimination of the ministry, which had played a central role in public policy formulation, interinstitutional coordination and the delivery of essential services to vulnerable groups. The Office of the Ombudsperson stressed the need for an orderly transition that safeguards the continuity of state functions and services related to human rights.[247]

139. With respect to access to justice and judicial independence, the Supreme Court of Justice (TSJ), the Council of the Magistracy and the Agro-Environmental Court held the First Interinstitutional Dialogue towards a Judicial Reform, which was an initiative to launch the judicial reform process.[248] This initiative is reportedly in line with recommendations made by the Inter-American Commission in its report Social Cohesion: The Challenge to Consolidate Democracy in Bolivia.[249] The State indicated that it had made progress in implementing the Access to Justice Policy, which included the creation of new single-judge and trial courts to address violence against women and corruption, and it further reported on having drafted a bill to improve the performance of peace justices across the country.[250] The judiciary reported progress in the application of the policy to fill vacant positions within the justice system,[251] as well as initiatives to improve access to justice for vulnerable groups, such as the updating of the Protocol on Prosecution with a Gender Perspective.[252] Additionally, the Plurinational Constitutional Court (TCP) ended the extension of the terms of judicial authorities, which had been monitored by the Inter-American Commission in its 2024 Annual Report. The TCP noted that "in recent years, several political actors have sought to subject the justice system and the Court to personal interests to gain power."[253] The end of term extensions was welcomed by the Office of the Ombudsperson, which pointed out that extensions undermined democratic institutionality and the respect for constitutional rule since they allowed officials to remain in office beyond the established six-year term in positions that are not eligible for reelection.[254]

140. On August 22, the TSJ ordered departmental courts to review compliance with pretrial detention periods in the cases of Jeanine Áñez, Luis Fernando Camacho and Marco Antonio Pumari, who were linked to the political and social crisis of 2019.[255] In addition, the judgment in the case known as "Coup d'État

II" against former President Áñez was overturned.[256] At the same time, El Alto Trial Court No. 4 and Sacaba Court No. 1 declared null the proceedings against police and military officers investigated for serious human rights violations in Senkata and Sacaba in 2019. The United Nations Human Rights Office and the Inter-American Commission issued a joint statement flagging the risk of impunity and warning of revictimization of victims.[257] The Commission convened a hearing on access to justice for the victims of Senkata and Sacaba, where it heard the testimonies of the victims of the massacres and warned that the annulment of the related judicial proceedings constitutes a form of impunity and revictimization, putting at risk victims' rights to memory, justice, truth, and reparation.[258] The IACHR stated that the annulment of the proceedings represents a setback in the pursuit of timely and adequate justice for victims of serious human rights violations. This situation undermines the State's obligation to investigate, prosecute, and provide reparation to victims and entails revictimization of those affected. These judicial decisions also constitute a serious obstacle to the State's duty to implement recommendations issued by national and international human rights bodies. This includes the recommendations of the Interdisciplinary Group of Independent Experts for Bolivia (GIEI-Bolivia), which have been followed up by the IACHR through the Follow-Up Mechanism (MESEG-Bolivia)[259]. IACHR also followed up on the arrest of former President Luis Arce on December 10, 2025 for investigations into alleged acts of corruption during his previous tenure as Minister of Economy. This case involves other former officials of the Indigenous Fund as well.[260]

141. Regarding citizen security, the executive branch launched a strategy to promote the effectiveness of the Bolivian Police called "Operation 200, for our families, Bolivia and our future," which seeks to bring together different government agencies to work towards crime prevention and response.[261] A plan was also submitted to ensure greater state presence in the Cochabamba Tropics, following threats and violence against state agents deployed in the region, which reached a peak on August 12 when agents of the Special Force for the Fight against Drug Trafficking were ambushed.[262] Moreover, the Office of the Ombudsperson recorded 654 conflicts, mainly related to economic and labor demands and political and governance issues. In this regard, the Inter-American Commission monitored the protests that began on June 2 and condemned the escalation of violence against state agents, citizens and journalists covering the demonstrations.

142. The Office of the Ombudsperson verified the deaths of seven people as a result of violent acts, two of whom were civilians involved in the protests, four were police officers and one was a student at the Siglo XX school in Llallagua, Potosí. During the blockade, the Office of the Ombudsperson observed situations of extreme violence, particularly in Cochabamba and Llallagua, where it was documented that 173 people were injured, including protesters, third parties who were not involved in the blockades, residents of the affected areas and police officers. Out of the total number of injured people, 54 were members of the Bolivian Police.[263]

143. With regard to the rights of indigenous and peasant peoples, the State reported on actions taken to address the human rights challenges faced by the San Agustín de Puñaca ayllu in Oruro as a result of pollution, which had been noted by the Inter-American Commission in its 2024 Annual Report. These actions included environmental inspections of mining activities in Oruro.[264] In addition, the Office of the Ombudsperson recorded 30 incidents of racism, discrimination and violence during the electoral process.[265] There were also reports of energy projects moving forward without prior, free and informed consultation and consent of the affected communities, including: i) the electricity project in the Passiflora sanctuary and the Tacana community territory;[266] and ii) the bill discussed at the Santa Cruz Legislative Assembly to incorporate the Roboré–Hito VII section into the departmental road network, which is set to cross the Ñembi Guasú protected area, home to the Ayoreo people, who live in voluntary isolation.[267] Moreover, there were reports of violence linked to the advance of illegal extractive activities, including the murder of Leco indigenous defender Francisco Marupa in the Madidi National Park on February 11.[268] No significant progress has been made in its investigation.[269]

144. The Marupa case reveals the vulnerability of human rights defenders, especially those who defend the environment.[270] In a public hearing before the Commission, civil society organizations reported on attacks against environmental defenders, including acts of violence, harassment, intimidation and stigmatizing statements aimed at discrediting them. The expansion of the extractive industry is allegedly linked to these facts. In particular, at least 20 defenders were charged with crimes against freedom of work, with obstructing or hindering workers' activities, with public incitement to commit a crime, and in the case of the community of Chiquiacá, in the department of Tariquía, they were accused of making threats. These charges were filed after the defenders resisted the launching of gas exploration activities and prevented workers from Yacimientos Petrolíferos Fiscales Bolivianos (YPFB) and Petrobras from entering the area.[271]

145. In relation to the human rights of women, the State adopted key legislative measures to protect the rights of girls and adolescents against violence. Notably, it passed a law prohibiting, without exception, marriage and unions of people under the age of 18,[272] as well as a law to protect the sexual integrity of children and adolescents in digital environments.[273] Progress was also made in the legislative process to amend the Criminal Code, which is set to repeal the crime of statutory rape and strengthen the protection of girls and adolescents against sex crimes.[274] The Ministry of Justice and Institutional Transparency, by way of the Deputy Ministry of Equal Opportunities (VIO), adopted the Protocol on How to Respond to Cases of Harassment and/or Political Violence against Women, which seeks to ensure timely response and effective protection of women's political rights, along with a pilot plan for the implementation of a technological tool designed to address political violence against women.[275] The Commission notes that the 2025 general elections resulted in a high number of women elected to the Plurinational Legislative Assembly, where women now hold 52.4 percent of the seats.[276] The State also reported that it created the Cordillera Network in Santa Cruz, which is made up of six municipalities and two indigenous and peasant autonomous governments, with the aim of combating violence against women, children and adolescents.[277]

146. Nevertheless, gender-based violence in the country continues to be alarming. Between January and September, the Office of the Public Prosecutor recorded 62 femicides,[278] 127 attempted femicides and 34,412 cases of gender-based violence. Of the latter, 25,716 were classified as domestic violence, 2,423 as sexual assault, 2,240 as sexual abuse, 1,721 as rape of infants, children or adolescents and 1,366 as statutory rape.[279] Furthermore, according to public information, in the context of the general elections, some women candidates reportedly faced violence, threats and harassment, both in physical environments and on digital platforms.[280] There were also reports of physical assault against journalists, including cases of sexual violence.[281] Despite the progress achieved in reducing the number of teenage pregnancies in recent years, 80 percent out of the total 339 municipalities still report high rates thereof.[282] In this regard, there are still barriers to access a voluntary termination of pregnancy, such as the lack of internal guidelines for its implementation, conscientious objection, insufficient medication and the lack of trained personnel.[283]

147. With respect to LGBTI persons, in May the Office of the Ombudsperson drafted the 2025–2030 political agenda for sexually and gender-diverse populations (LGBTIQ+) in Bolivia, with contributions from over 400 representatives and activists from the country's nine departments. advance the rights of the aforementioned populations and to devise effective public policies.[284] Nonetheless, the civil society is calling for the implementation of policies aimed at protecting the rights of LGBTI persons deprived of liberty and is denouncing the lack of official data disaggregated by sexual orientation or gender identity.[285]

148. Regarding the rights of persons with disabilities, the State reported it issued Supreme Decree No. 5,305 on January 2, 2025, which established a six-year validity period for the disability card issued for this population.[286] The National Committee for Persons with Disabilities (CONALPEDIS) and the Bolivian Police's National Directorate of Human Rights trained over 706 police officers,[287] while the Chamber of Deputies moved forward with a bill that seeks to acknowledge and include persons with Autism Spectrum Disorder (ASD) in the General Law on Persons with Disabilities.[288]

149. However, civil society organizations noted that persons with disabilities lacked institutional visibility, which is reflected in the reported failure to register their births and collect sufficient data on said population.[289] The civil society also underscored that these people face obstacles to access justice, including the shortage of Braille signage, tactile paving and accessible formats. According to one report, 70 percent of respondents indicated that they might forego access to justice due to the difficulties they face.[290]

150. Concerning the situation of persons in the context of human mobility, in June 2025, the General Directorate of Migration ordered the mandatory departure from the country of a Brazilian lawyer, on the grounds that he had violated migration regulations by speaking out against decisions made by Bolivian authorities regarding former President Evo Morales.[291] Furthermore, on August 8, 2025, a group of 17 Cuban nationals was detained at Viru Viru airport in Santa Cruz de la Sierra after presenting allegedly fraudulent documents to enter the country. According to available information, the detainees were denied the right to request international protection. Finally, on August 14, a judge reportedly approved a release order in favor of 12 individuals, thus guaranteeing their stay and allowing them to request political asylum.[292] The Inter-American Commission has no information on what happened to the remaining five detainees.

151. In terms of human trafficking, the State created the First Expanded Council of Authorities against Human Trafficking and Smuggling, whose purpose is to coordinate work between the Plurinational Council against Human Trafficking and Smuggling, provincial governments and departmental councils to combat this crime.[293] The State reported on the first regular session of the Plurinational Council against Human Trafficking and Smuggling, at which the 2025 Annual Activity Plan was approved, which includes 88 strategic actions focused on prevention, criminal prosecution, institutional management and national and international coordination. In addition, the Bolivian Police held the National Meeting of Trafficking and Smuggling Divisions and several meetings were scheduled with the Office of the Ombudsperson, the Ministry of Health and the civil society to strengthen specialized divisions and train health personnel in victim detection, among other activities, so as to prevent human trafficking.[294]

152. Moreover, on April 25, 2025, Bolivia and Peru signed the 2025–2026 Binational Roadmap with the aim of reinforcing bilateral cooperation against human trafficking in both countries. This roadmap includes, among other actions, the creation of a binational rapid response team, the design of an early warning mechanism at the borders and the empowerment of working groups made up of police officers, prosecutors and migration authorities.[295]

153. With regard to the situation of Afro-descendants and the fight against racial discrimination, the State reported that the National Committee on the Fight against Racism and All Forms of Discrimination held 21 training sessions on Law No. 45, which were attended by 2,295 participants. These training sessions were aimed at raising awareness on the aforementioned law and promoting a culture of respect, with a special focus on eradicating racial discrimination, especially towards the Afro-Bolivian people.[296]

154. The State reported to the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination on the consolidation of its regulatory and institutional framework by means of the following: the National Committee against Racism and related subnational committees; the Multisectoral Plan for Comprehensive Development on Living Well and against Racism and All Forms of Discrimination (2021–2025); the General Directorate on the Fight against Racism and All Forms of Discrimination; and other communication and educational actions.[297] The Office of the Ombudsperson created the Ombudsperson's Observatory on Racism and Discrimination and coordinated —along with the Supreme Electoral Tribunal and the National Committee on the Fight against Racism and All Forms of Discrimination— measures to prevent racism and hate speech in the 2025 electoral process.[298] Activities promoting the Afro-Bolivian culture and aimed at preventing racism were also carried out in cultural spaces.[299]

155. Regarding the rights of older persons, the State reported that it had conducted a virtual course in four languages (Spanish, Aymara, Quechua and Guarani) to develop the knowledge and skills of professionals and public officials in caring for older persons. It further reported on having held a National Congress of Organizations of Older Persons in the city of Cochabamba and the passing of the Plurinational Public Policy on Aging and Old Age.[300]

156. The Commission was informed of protests in the city of La Paz of older persons demanding an increase in the pension known as Renta Dignidad (Dignity Pension), as they argued that such income is insufficient in view of the rising cost of living.[301] Additionally, the media reported that payment of this pension was suspended for retirees who continue to work, a measure that has caused unrest and concern among this population group.[302] Furthermore, information in the public domain indicates that a significant number of older persons are deprived of liberty in Bolivia, particularly in the departments of Santa Cruz and La Paz, where the figure accounts for over 56 percent of all older persons incarcerated in the country.[303] In this outlook, the Ministry of Health reported that 74 older persons held at the San Pedro prison were registered in the Unified Health System (SUS), which indicates progress in access to medical services in penitentiaries.[304]

157. With respect to persons deprived of liberty, Presidential Decree No. 5,460 came into force in 2025, which granted pardons to persons convicted of minor offenses.[305] The State reported on the implementation of productive occupational activities under the Centros Penitenciarios Productivos (Productive Penitentiary Centers) program addressed to women deprived of liberty, among other initiatives to guarantee the rights of persons deprived of liberty. In addition, the Office of the Ombudsperson promoted actions to combat torture —in particular, training sessions on human rights and the prevention of torture offered to approximately 3,900 police officers in July. Furthermore, in March, the Office of the Ombudsperson signed a cooperation agreement with the General Directorate of the Prison System to offer a free and mandatory course on said subject to prison personnel.[306] Moreover, in July, a store was opened to sell products manufactured by persons deprived of liberty and inmates released in the department of Cochabamba.[307]

158. However, according to the Office of the Ombudsperson, the situation of persons deprived of liberty continues to be marked by overcrowding —which has reached 105 percent—, extended use of pretrial detention —55.9 percent—, limited access to drinking water in 25 percent of facilities, insufficient healthcare and deficient education, work and post-prison programs. Among people aged 18 to 28, who account for 30 percent of the prison population, pretrial detention reaches 75 percent, which entails greater exposure to violence and limited access to penitentiary benefits.[308] The Commission notes reports indicating that the

On January 30, the murder of an inmate in the Chonchocoro prison was reported.[310] According to official data, as of March 24, there had been nine violent deaths.[311] In August and September, riots broke out in connection with demands for equal treatment following the Supreme Court of Justice's decision to review the duration of pretrial detention in high-profile cases.[312] As of September, at least four conflicts had been documented, which had been triggered by the State's failure to pay the sums of money required by inmates to access food.[313]

160. Concerning the rights of children and adolescents, the State reported on the approval of the Strategy to Combat Violence in Educational Spaces; the creation of a draft protocol to respond to cases of sexual violence against children and adolescents; and a bill to introduce incestuous sexual abuse as a crime, remove statutory rape and establish the lack of consent as a constituent element of the crime of rape in the legal system so as to guarantee access to justice.[314] The Commission notes with concern that, in June, the Ministry of Justice and Institutional Transparency submitted a draft bill to amend Article 268 of the Code on Children and

- General considerations

161. In 2025, the Federative Republic of Brazil (hereinafter, "Brazil") made progress in adopting non-repetition measures in view of the attacks on its democratic institutionality that took place on January 8, 2023, and it moved forward in strengthening the transparency and accountability of its justice system and in guaranteeing the rights of children and adolescents in digital environments. Moreover, it reinforced policies and programs to promote gender equality and protect the rights of women, Afro-descendants, indigenous peoples and LGBTI persons by way of coordinated actions between branches of government and oversight bodies, which were aimed at addressing persistent structural discrimination.

162. Nevertheless, serious challenges remained in terms of public security, police violence and access to justice for victims and their families. High rates of police lethality persisted, as did racial profiling practices against Afro-descendants and people living in the favelas and peripheral areas, as well as hurdles to independent investigations and effective sanctions.

163. On September 4, 2025, the State submitted its response to the Commission's request for information to prepare this chapter.[316]

- Specific issues

164. As it relates to progress on issues pertaining to democratic institutionality, the National Council of Justice (CNJ) implemented measures seeking to improve transparency, social participation and accountability in the justice system. The CNJ also set up the Judicial Policies Panel, which systematizes and issues the Council's actions; it further implemented the Justicia Plural (Plural Justice) program to promote diversity and inclusion in the judicial system and it offered the seminar "Democratic Constitutions and Democratization of the Judiciary" to enhance public knowledge on rights.[317] In connection to the attacks of January 8, 2023 in Brasilia, the Federal Supreme Court (STF) sentenced former President Jair Bolsonaro to 27 years in prison for attempting to violently abolish the democratic Rule of Law and attempting a coup d'état.[318] Former high-ranking officials Walter Braga Netto, Anderson Torres, Almir Garnier, Augusto Heleno, Paulo Sérgio Nogueira and Alexandre Ramagem were also convicted of crimes related to this event.[319]

165. Notwithstanding the foregoing, challenges remain, given that Bill No. 2858/2022 was introduced with the purpose of granting amnesty to individuals who were materially and intellectually responsible for said attacks on democratic institutions.[320]

166. Regarding human rights institutions, the State reported on various initiatives by the CNJ aimed at bolstering them. These include the National Pact of the Judiciary on Racial Equity, protocols on prosecution with a racial- and gender-based perspective and an affirmative action program to promote diversity in the magistracy. Judicial policies were also implemented to assist homeless people and a specific protocol was adopted for homeless women.[321] In addition, the State updated the Rogéria form for transgender persons and strengthened the Ação para Meninas e Mulheres do Marajó (Action for Girls and Women of Marajó) program, which strives to prevent sexual violence and protect children and adolescents by means of actions with an ethnic-racial and gender focus.[322] Furthermore, Brazil adopted measures to promote social equity, such as the recent tax reform that was unanimously approved by Congress and which redistributes the tax burden according to income levels.[323]

167. With respect to progress in access to justice, the State reported on the launch of the Jus.br website, which centralizes judicial services on a single digital platform, thus simplifying access and increasing transparency. It also highlighted the Justiça Itinerante Cooperativa na Amazônia Legal (Cooperative Itinerant Justice in the Legal Amazon) program, which made judicial services available for people living in remote regions and ancestral territories.[324]

168. Moreover, the Supreme Court of Justice (STJ) rejected the concept of "reverse racism," indicating that insults targeted at non-Afro-descendants "on the basis of color" do not constitute the crime of racial slurs, which therefore reinforces the specific legal protection of this classification.[325] The CNJ also made progress in implementing the Judicial Policy for Racial Equity, holding various meetings with traditional communities to discuss territorial justice, disseminating the Protocol on Prosecution with a Racial Perspective and publishing Ordinance No. 100/2025, which establishes the Indicator of Performance in the Promotion of Racial Equity (IPER) and the Racial Equity Award.[326] The National Council of the Office of the Public Prosecutor (CNMP) issued a guideline on "proceedings by the Office of the Public Prosecutor to prevent and combat racism in police activity."[327] The State also reported on technical cooperation agreements with mobility platforms to carry out anti-racism campaigns and develop reporting protocols.[328]

169. In terms of citizen security, the State reported on the implementation of body cameras on police uniforms and underscored their role in creating transparency, reducing lethality and building social trust. The Commission on Citizenship and Public Security drafted a proposal on the institutionalization of municipal civil guards (GCMs), emphasizing the need for external monitoring by the Office of the Public Prosecutor, in line with recent decisions by the STF that recognize GCMs as part of the Unified Public Security System and as bodies subject to oversight.[329]

170. Furthermore, in the context of the Action regarding the Violation of Fundamental Precept (ADPF) No. 635 on high police lethality in the communities and favelas in the state of Rio de Janeiro, the STF acknowledged a serious structural violation of human rights and decided on the partial homologation of a plan to reduce police lethality. This decision sets forth the obligation to respect the principle of proportional use of force, to adopt complementary measures related to accountability and to have the Office of the Public Prosecutor monitor operations. In addition, the STF ordered the creation of a working group led by the CNMP to oversee the plan's implementation, which reaffirmed the State's responsibility to ensure public security while protecting fundamental rights.[330]

171. Moreover, to strengthen prevention and community security, the National Course on Applied Community Policing was held and progress was made on the National Protocol for Public Security Care for Vulnerable Individuals and Groups, which establishes guidelines for assisting women, children, adolescents, Afro-descendants, indigenous people, LGBTQIAP+ persons, migrants and other vulnerable groups. The State also promoted the construction of 30 community centers for life (CONVIVE) to prevent violence and to foster social inclusion, as well as actions to address violence against children and adolescents, including meetings with state authorities to improve prevention in schools.[331]

172. In addition, the Office of the Federal Prosecutor for Citizen Rights (PFDC) outlined basic parameters for police involvement in agrarian conflicts, emphasizing that the resolution of land disputes is the exclusive responsibility of the judiciary and that police operations must comply with due process of law.[332] It also set forth clear limits on the use of force, prioritizing the regularization of land ownership to reduce violence and protect the rights of rural workers and social movements. Meanwhile, the CNJ made progress on citizen security policies by means of the Fazendo Justiça (Doing Justice) program, the Pena Justa (Fair Sentencing) plan, the upgrading of the National Prison Monitoring Bank (BNMP 3.0) and the updating of regulations for real estate registries, thus promoting transparency and human rights.[333]

173. Nevertheless, Brazil faces a structural challenge in terms of police violence. According to official information published in 2025, in the previous year, the police were responsible for 6,134 homicides,[334] which account for 14.1 percent of all violent deaths recorded in the country,[335] out of which 59.8 percent occurred in Bahia, São Paulo, Rio de Janeiro and Pará.[336] The profile of the victims showed a consistent pattern: 97 percent were men, 82 percent were of African descent and most were aged 12 to 29.[337] Between 2011 and 2023, the police forces of São Paulo and Rio de Janeiro committed 7,920 and 12,789 homicides, respectively.[338]

174. On October 28, Operation Containment was carried out in the Penha Complex and surrounding areas, which resulted in 122 deaths (117 civilians and 5 police officers),[339] making it the deadliest police operation ever recorded in Brazil. The action was part of a judicial investigation against an organization linked to the Comando Vermelho.[340] Its objective was to execute 100 arrest warrants and 145 search warrants, all of which had been authorized by Criminal Court No. 42 of the capital city.[341] The operation was coordinated by the Civil Police, the Military Police and the Office of the Public Prosecutor.[342] Approximately 650 agents participated. In consequence, 99 people were arrested or detained, including 10 adolescents, and authorities seized 122 firearms, over 5,600 rounds of ammunition, 12 explosive devices, 15 vehicles and large quantities of drugs. Authorities reported intense armed confrontations and difficulties in preserving the crime scenes for security and medical reasons.[343] Between December 2 and 6, the Inter-American Commission conducted a working visit to observe the situation of human rights in the context of the aforementioned operation.[344]

175. During the visit, the Commission also received information about the recent discussion at the Legislative Assembly of Rio de Janeiro on a bill that sought to grant economic rewards to police officers involved in the "neutralization of criminals" by means of the lethal use of force.[345] Following the recommendation against the bill issued by the Office of the Federal Prosecutor for Citizen Rights and several human rights organizations, the Governor vetoed the bill on budgetary grounds.[346]

176. With regard to the rights of indigenous peoples, the Commission notes that significant operational, sanitary and territorial protection measures were taken in the indigenous territories of the Yanomami and Munduruku peoples, which included the construction of ethno-environmental protection bases, systematic monitoring of malaria, and operations to remove intruders (garimpeiros). The State also adopted crisis-specific coordination mechanisms for the Guaraní-Kaiowá and Pataxó and Pataxó Hã-Hã-Hãe peoples, protection measures for defenders and institutional training sessions for the Avá-Guaraní people.[347] Likewise, the State established a 30 percent quota in the exams required to fill federal administration jobs and other kinds of jobs with the aim of benefiting indigenous and the Afro-descendant population.[348]

177. In addition, the Commission voices its concern over the legal uncertainty and territorial conflicts derived from the settlement committee, which was convened by the STF regarding the timeframe thesis upon the enactment of Law No. 14.701/2023.[349] This committee was introduced as a mechanism to foster institutional dialogue. However, the involvement of private stakeholders and landowners triggered the withdrawal of organizations representing indigenous peoples from the committee,[350] which was terminated in August without concrete results. This led to legal uncertainty with regard to territories which were already titled and ongoing demarcation processes,[351] reopened the debate on vested rights and favored those stakeholders with an interest in retaking or invading indigenous lands.[352]

178. This process coincided with an increase in violence in regions where the expansion of the agricultural and extractive frontier overlaps with indigenous territories. In Mato Grosso do Sul, Guaraní-Kaiowá communities faced new episodes of violence during the retaking of ancestral lands,[353] a violent situation which repeated itself in Bahia with impacts on the Pataxó people,[354] in a context of extreme poverty, isolation and lack of access to basic services.[355] In addition, new harassment structures against indigenous communities emerged, such as the Invasão Zero group, made up of landowners and farmers who operate in coordination with local authorities.[356] These networks conducted linked actions of eviction, judicial persecution and physical violence, with the support of the regional security forces.[357] Cultural and religious conflicts were also recorded, especially in vulnerable communities, where evangelical groups connected to social and spiritual assistance networks have expanded their influence; these groups have been accused of burning indigenous prayer houses and attacking indigenous traditional practices.[358]

179. In the Amazon, the Yanomami and Munduruku peoples continued to be exposed to the expansion of garimpeiros (illegal gold miners) in the logging and mining frontier, despite operations led by the federal government. These peoples also suffer serious health impacts from mercury contamination, malaria outbreaks and malnutrition, in a context in which public services have been dismantled and illegal activities controlled by criminal networks persist.[359]

180. The State promoted actions to strengthen the rights of Afro-descendants and the fight against racial discrimination. Courses were implemented to promote the participation of Afro-descendant and Quilombola students in decision-making spaces.[360] The 2025 Action Plan of the Anti-Racism Strategy in Healthcare was adopted, which establishes measures to reduce ethnic-racial inequalities,[361] incorporates the mandatory reporting of sickle cell anemia[362] and creates technical support bodies.[363] In terms of employment, more than 800 companies were inspected to verify compliance with Law No. 14.611/2023 on equal pay.[364] Additionally, progress was made on the Communication Plan for Racial Equality, aimed at strengthening Afro-descendant and independent media.[365]

181. With the participation of Quilombola organizations, the State established the Managing Committee of the 2025–2027 National Policy on Territorial and Environmental Management for Quilombola Communities (PNGTAQ),[366] and created the Intersectoral Program for Quilombola Women, aimed at protecting their rights, strengthening their economic autonomy and guaranteeing their territorial rights.[367] Additionally, the State advanced on the development of sectoral climate adaptation plans aimed at traditional communities and granted benefits to promote environmental conservation in riverine, extractivist, indigenous and Quilombola communities.[368]

182. The Afro-descendant population continues to face significant inequalities in the fight against racial discrimination and access to economic, social, cultural and environmental rights. Although 22 years have gone by since the passing of Law No. 10.639/2003, less than 40 percent of municipalities have institutionalized the teaching of Afro-Brazilian history and culture.[369] Healthcare gaps persist, such as restrictions on access to oncological treatments[370] and a maternal mortality rate 2.3 times higher than that of other women.[371] In 2025, unemployment was 7 percent among the Afro-descendant population, against the 4.8 percent rate among non-Afro-descendants,[372] and their income accounted for 58.3 percent of that earned by the latter[373]. Afro-descendant women account for 70 percent of the domestic and care labor force,[374] characterized by informality and low wages.[375] In addition, recent studies show higher levels of housing precariousness and lower access to water and sanitation among this population.[376]

183. Episodes of police violence, which disproportionately affect Afro-descendant and peripheral communities, were also recorded. According to public information, on May 10, 2025, in Bahia, Victor Cerqueira was killed during a police operation, with allegations of possible acts of torture and evidence tampering;[377] on April 30, 2025, in Engenho da Rainha, Rio de Janeiro, teenager Gabriel dos Santos Vieira died after receiving shots in his back during a shootout between military police and alleged criminals while on his way to work;[378] on July 4, 2025, in São Paulo, Guilherme Dias Santos Ferreira was murdered with a shot to the head while he was returning from work by an off-duty military police officer.[379] Young Afro-descendants were overrepresented when it came to deaths from external causes in 2025.[380] In addition, deaths of children and adolescents due to police interventions in the state of São Paulo increased 120 percent between 2022 and 2024.[381]

184. The State also recorded cases of racism in the context of cultural manifestations,[382] soccer matches,[383] against Afro-descendant women journalists[384] and practitioners of religions of African origin, including aggressions and attacks on places of worship.[385] Civil society organizations reported that the persecution of Candomblé and Umbanda responds to structural racism, with a previous history of criminalization and current patterns of discrimination and invasions of sacred spaces, highlighting the case of Mãe Hilda.[386] Racism manifests early among the Afro-descendant population, with 19 percent of Afro-descendant children up to 6 years of age already having suffered some episode of racial discrimination, with impacts on their development.[387]

185. The State reported on the National Policy for Terreiro Peoples and Communities and African-Based Religions, with an estimated investment of 115 million Brazilian reais and a national mapping, as well as actions by the CNJ and the executive branch in response to complaints and hate speech. Despite some progress in the investigations of abusive police interventions in Afro-Brazilian places of worship, the State itself acknowledges the challenges in the representation of these religions in the context of assistance within the prison system.[388]

186. As for the human rights of women, the legal and institutional framework for the protection of their rights against violence and gender discrimination was strengthened. In this regard, the crime of sexual harassment was incorporated into the Military Criminal Code;[389] the Criminal Code was amended to exclude the perpetrator's age as a mitigating factor in cases of sexual violence;[390] the national protocol for investigation and expert examination in femicide cases was updated; the María da Penha patrol program and Specialized Women's Police Stations were standardized nationwide;[391] the Programa Nacional das Salas Lilás (National Lilac Rooms Program was launched), which provides for the creation of spaces to assist victims in the Unified

Public Security System (SUSP) and in judicial agencies;[392] and the Protocol on Assistance to Homeless Women and Protection of Motherhood was developed to ensure homeless pregnant women or those in postpartum have access to legal assistance.[393] A decree instituting the National Care Plan was also adopted.[394]

187. For its part, the CNJ issued decisions aimed at strengthening the protocol for judges with a gender perspective. In one of them, it established the obligation of justice operators to intervene in the face of discriminatory and offensive manifestations against women during judicial proceedings.[395] In another, it sanctioned a judge with compulsory retirement in a disciplinary administrative proceeding linked to a case of family violence.[396] In this regard, the Commission is concerned about the legislative proposal seeking to suspend the CNJ resolution that established guidelines for applying the gender perspective in the judiciary.[397]

188. However, the situation of sexual violence against girls and adolescents remains critical,[398] particularly against indigenous girls.[399] In this regard, cases of sexual exploitation of girls in tourist areas and on highways persist, with some girls being taken abroad to sexually exploit them.[400] The dissemination of sexually explicit images of girls generated by artificial intelligence was also reported.[401] In this context, the Superior Court of Justice ruled, contrary to international standards, that those who perpetrate certain types of sexual violence against girls and adolescents could be exempted from criminal responsibility under exceptions related to consent, subsequent marital cohabitation or the birth of a child as a result of sexual violence.[402]

189. With respect to the foregoing, the high incidence of pregnancies among girls and adolescents persists, as do barriers to accessing legal abortion,[403] such as the lack of service availability and poor practices performed by health personnel. In this regard, the civil society reported that only 4 percent of municipalities had registered referral services with the structure and personnel required by law.[404] Inadequate practices that delay abortion procedures also persisted, along with a lack of access to information, the misuse of conscientious objection, dissuasive measures[405] and the imposition of requirements not set forth by law.[406] In that context, a decision by the STF dismissed a precautionary measure which allowed nurses to perform abortions in cases of pregnancies resulting from sexual violence.[407]

190. Likewise, defenders of the right to humanized birth are being persecuted and criminalized.[408] Among several cases, the case of physician Ricardo Herbert Jones and nurse Neusa Berlese Oliveira Jones stands out. They were convicted of reckless homicide following a medical complication during a home birth performed under humanized birth guidelines. According to organizations defending this right, this incident was due to an unforeseeable accident (congenital pneumonia), generating a chilling effect on other defenders. In addition, cases of obstetric violence were observed in states across the country, with particular concerns regarding the Marabá Maternity Hospital, in the federated state of Pará, which recorded 14 deaths in 40 days, with worse outcomes for indigenous and Afro-descendant women.[409]

191. Likewise, from January to July, the Liga 180 (Call 180) hotline recorded 594,118 calls and 86,025 reports of violence against women nationwide, accounting for a 2.9 percent increase compared to the previous year.[410] In the same period, 22,475 women in situations of intrafamily violence received care for cases of physical, psychological, sexual and patrimonial violence at the Specialized Social Assistance Reference Centers (CREAS).[411] Cases of gender-based political violence were also reported, particularly against Afro-descendant women,[412] with five criminal actions for this type of violence brought before the courts between January and August 2025.[413]

192. In matters relating to persons deprived of liberty, in February the Emprega 347 program was launched, whose purpose is to make Brazilian prisons productive.[414] In April, the Federal Supreme Court prohibited degrading intimate searches of visitors in prisons.[415] In June, the State Committee on Criminal

Policies of Bahia was created to implement a state plan focused on humanizing the prison system.[416] In August, the Superior Court of Justice recognized that care provided by mothers to their babies born in prison might be considered work for sentence remission.[417] Additionally, in March, 9,471 people were released as a result of the review of proceedings under the CNJ Mutirão Processual Penal initiative (coordinated judicial review initiatives), aimed at ensuring that proceedings comply with legislation and binding case law.[418]

193. Despite this progress, Brazil is the third country with the largest prison population in the world,[419] with a total population deprived of liberty of 674,016 people as of December 2024 and ranks 14th among countries with the highest incarceration rates.[420] In addition, considering that the official accommodation capacity of the prison system is 494,379 people, the overcrowding rate is 35.6 percent.[421] At the level of the federated states, in December 2024, Pernambuco had an overcrowding rate of 106 percent; Piauí, 93 percent; Mato Grosso do Sul, 85 percent; Paraíba, 64 percent; and Sergipe, 62 percent.[422] In 2025, overcrowding in Rio de Janeiro was at 61 percent,[423] in Minas Gerais at 55 percent and in São Paulo at 54 percent.[424]

194. Additionally, in the state of Pará, there is a lack of healthcare services at penitentiary facilities, which included the lack of mental health services, which is sometimes associated with deaths in custody; ill-treatment; degrading and humiliating procedures; improper application of sanctions; negligence in combating prison violence; and deficient nutrition, especially in the units of the Metropolitan Region of Belém.[425] In the prison system of Minas Gerais, between January and July 2025, 60 deaths were recorded, out of which 18 occurred in the Inspector José Martinho Drumond facility and 15 were homicides.[426] In Rio de Janeiro, less than 10 percent of persons deprived of liberty have access to education and only around 15 percent can work.[427]

The Commission notes several violations of the rights of women deprived of liberty, such as sexual violence and forced hair shaving, as well as the imprisonment of indigenous people without any cultural safeguards.[428]

195. With regard to the rights of human rights defenders, the Ministry of Indigenous Peoples held dialogues in the context of the Program for the Protection of Human Rights Defenders, Communicators and Environmentalists (PPDDH) of the MDHC. The purpose of these dialogues was to strengthen protection measures for indigenous leaders under threat, which included requests for the installation of security cameras and the provision of escorts by the National Public Security Force (FNSP).[429]

196. In relation to the PPDDH, it provides protection to 1,414 people. In addition, there are 553 active cases being supported by the Federal Technical Team (FTT) in areas without state-level protection programs. Indigenous and Quilombola community leaders represent the main groups assisted under the program. In total, 380 indigenous leaders and 190 Quilombola community leaders are being protected. Agreements remain in place with nine states to ensure the decentralized implementation of the PPDDH.[430] Nevertheless, Awá-Guaraní people defenders in Paraná constantly face threats and reprisals for their advocacy activities. Even in areas protected by national security forces, episodes of intimidation and violence persist.[431]

197. With regard to the rights of LGBTI persons, advances were noted, such as partnerships between the São Paulo Mayor's Office and the Zumbi dos Palmares school to fight discrimination in schools,[432] inclusive citizen consultations in Recife,[433] and a remedy issued by the Office of the Federal Public Prosecutor against the bullying of LGBTI persons.[434] Additionally, a guide aimed at public servants was launched to strengthen partnerships to promote LGBTI rights.[435]

198. The State also reported that the composition of the national forum for the promotion of the rights of LGBTQIA+ persons had been modified in April, thus consolidating the institutional structure responsible for implementing protection policies aimed at this group. Additionally, the latest version of the Rogéria form was launched. This form is integrated into the digital platform of the judiciary and facilitates the registration of matters related to the trans population; it also documents its use by agents and victims.[436]

199. Regarding access to justice, authorities dismantled a criminal group targeting LGBTI persons online, which had affected up to 30 people.[437] Judicial progress includes the decision of the STF to extend the scope of the Maria da Penha Law to same-sex couples, trans women and travestis,[438] as well as a ruling of the Superior Court of Justice authorizing the use of neutral gender markers on identity documents.[439] In relation to health, the Office of the Federal Public Prosecutor in Amazonas filed a remedy to guarantee comprehensive care for trans persons, after reporting a lack of specialized services to assist this population.[440]

200. In contrast, the civil society reported that 122 trans persons and travestis were murdered in 2024.[441] To date this year, eight bills which were deemed regressive by the civil society were introduced. Their focus is on establishing biological sex as the sole criterion for access to rights and prohibiting inclusive language in educational settings.[442] Additionally, a federal court in Rio Grande do Sul cancelled university quotas specifically aimed at trans persons, thereby nullifying admissions granted under this policy.[443] In April, the Federal Council of Medicine (CFM) issued a resolution prohibiting the use of hormone blockers for trans persons under 18 years of age. It also raised the minimum age for starting hormone therapy to 18 and for gender-affirming surgeries to 21, maintaining exceptions only for medical cases such as precocious puberty.[444] National medical associations widely criticized the measure. They warned that delaying these treatments without scientific basis can cause emotional and psychiatric harm, while also encouraging unsupervised self-medication and exacerbating health access barriers for young trans persons.[445]

201. With regard to memory, truth and justice, the State rectified the death certificates of victims of the military dictatorship to officially recognize that the victims were violently killed. The rectified certificates were delivered to the victims' families, and ceremonies were held as a way of offering symbolic reparation and ensuring historical memory.[446] Other positive measures were implemented too. These included searches for

202. The Office of the Federal Prosecutor for Citizen Rights (PFDC) of the MPF provided information on institutional efforts in transitional justice, which include the creation of memory sites by transforming former repression centers; a thematic initiative prioritizing impacts on indigenous peoples during the dictatorship; and the holding of a seminar on businesses that promoted human rights violations during the dictatorship.[452] During a public hearing held by the Inter-American Commission in June, organizations emphasized the need to establish a National Indigenous Truth Commission to make historically invisibilized violations visible and provide reparation.[453] In addition, the Inter-American Commission has received petitions regarding initiatives focused on the recognition and reparation of specific violations that affected peasants and LGBTI persons.[454]

203. With regard to the rights of children and adolescents, the Commission notes the reported advances in combating child labor, even as structural challenges persist in its eradication. According to data released by the Ministry of Labor and Employment in June, 6,372 children and adolescents were removed from child labor situations between 2023 and April 2025. Out of these, 86 percent corresponded to the worst forms of child labor. Among the total identified victims, 791 were children up to 13 years of age, while more than 5,500 were adolescents aged 14 to 17, primarily in sectors such as commerce, food services, mechanical workshops, agriculture and livestock raising.[455] In this regard, the State reported that between January and

June 2025, 4,528 inspections were carried out, protecting 1,821 children and adolescents — 83 percent of whom were in the worst forms of child labor.[456]

204. The Commission notes the launch of the publication titled Crianças, Adolescentes e Telas: Guia sobre Uso de Dispositivos Digitais (Children, adolescents and screens: Guidelines on the use of digital devices), issued by the State in March to promote the conscious use of digital devices by children and adolescents.[457] This initiative was followed by the holding of three seminars on the protection and education of children and adolescents in digital spaces with the aim of disseminating the guide's content.[458] In addition, the Commission acknowledges the guide's alignment with Law No. 15.211, which establishes the Digital Statute of Childhood and Adolescence. The law sets rules on the use of digital platforms and data collection, including age verification mechanisms, parental controls, a ban on targeted advertising, and measures to prevent exposure to inappropriate content, all in line with the principle of comprehensive protection.[459]

205. Following the publication of a video denouncing child sexual exploitation on digital platforms, a reporting channel registered 1,651 unique reports of images of child sexual abuses in only six days — an increase of 114 percent compared to the same period last year. In the first half of 2025, 28,344 reports featuring this type of content were filed nationwide.[460] In addition, the Commission observes with concern the risks to children and adolescents in the digital environment, particularly due to the circulation of challenges on social media. In April, a civil society report indicated that at least 56 children and adolescents died in the past year after participating in these challenges, many linked to asphyxiation and self-harm.[461]

206. Finally, the Commission observes with concern the persistent upward trend in relation to various forms of violence against children and adolescents across the country. Data released in May indicate that the number of children and adolescents who were victims of violence rose from 35,000 to more than 115,000 between 2013 and 2025. This surge includes reports of physical, sexual, and psychological violence, as well as hospitalizations and homicides of this population — with a significant overrepresentation of Black children and adolescents among the victims.[462] In addition, physical punishment remains a practice in family settings. A national study presented in August 2025 revealed that 29 percent of caregivers of children up to 6 years of age admit to using slaps, pinches or squeezes as a form of discipline, despite the prohibition under the Menino Bernardo Law (Law No. 13.010), which was enacted in 2014.[463]

207. The Commission notes with concern the processing of Bill No. 1.473/202574, which extends the maximum internment period from three to ten years and proposes harsher socioeducational internment measures.[464] In addition, the Commission takes note of the alert issued by the Office of the Federal Prosecutor for Citizen Rights, which warns that the application of the Hague Convention on the international abduction of minors —except for situations of risk and domestic violence against women— has led to violations of the victims' rights and the rights of children, and thereby legislative reforms are required.[465]

208. Regarding the rights of persons in the context of human mobility, the Commission notes the National Policy on Migration, Refugees, and Statelessness, which highlights the positive contribution of migrants to society and promotes their social inclusion. In addition, it incorporates various international and inter-American standards on the matter and promotes the application of the Global Compact for Safe, Orderly and Regular Migration.[466] Moreover, the Aquí é Brasil (This is Brazil) program provides a comprehensive response to Brazilian persons who were forcibly repatriated and are in vulnerable situations. The program aims at promoting socio-economic integration, access to employment, and family reunification.[467] Additionally, a bill on economic aid for forcibly repatriated persons was registered.[468]

209. However, the State updated regulations governing the issuance of humanitarian visas for Afghan, Haitian and Ukrainian nationals.[469] According to the new regulations, Afghan and Haitian nationals are required to obtain sponsorship from a civil society organization or other entity, whereas Ukrainian nationals do not face this requirement and are allowed to apply for a visa directly with the Federal Police. As of July, approximately 200 Afghan people arrived in the country,[470] and 235 humanitarian reception visas were issued, without specifying the nationality of the visa recipients.[471] Moreover, in August, the arrival of 320 Afghan people was approved,[472] and it is estimated that a total of 2,000 people will arrive in the country during the first half of 2026.[473]

210. In the area of human trafficking, the State highlighted the work of the Special Mobile Inspection Group, which is a benchmark in the rescue of workers who are victims of exploitation,[474] the publication of the Operational Guide for the Assistance of Trafficking Victims; the mapping of services for trafficking survivors returning to Brazil; and the Guide on the Rapid Identification of Human Trafficking at Mercosur and Associated States Borders.[475] Brazil was also recognized as a pioneer in Alliance 8.7 due to its fight against child labor, forced labor, modern slavery, and human trafficking.[476]

211. Regarding the rights of persons with disabilities, the State advanced with the implementation of the Quota Law, under which 618,959 workers with disabilities are now formally employed by businesses in compliance with the aforementioned law. Furthermore, continuous benefit payments (BPC) were granted to 3.7 million persons with disabilities.[477] In the judicial sphere, progress was marked by the creation of a database on persons with disabilities working in the judiciary;[478] the installation of communicational accessibility services for persons with hearing impairments at hearings and during various judicial proceedings;[479] and the presentation of a bill seeking to guarantee comprehensive and free legal assistance to persons with disabilities.[480]

212. Nevertheless, official data reveals challenges in the accessibility and inclusion of persons with disabilities in the judiciary, particularly highlighting the need to strengthen participation channels for this population; awareness and training actions on inclusive design in the area of technology; reasonable communication adjustments; and permanent monitoring.[481]

VIII. CANADA

- General Considerations

213. With respect to progress, the Commission highlights the signing of the Inter-American Convention on the Prevention, Punishment, and Eradication of Violence against Women (Convention of Belém do Pará). It also welcomes the State's First Federal Indigenous Justice Strategy aim at addressing systemic discrimination against indigenous communities. In addition, it values that Bill C-40 became law and will establish a commission to review criminal cases characterized by a potential miscarriage of justice.

214. In relation to challenges, the Commission expresses concern that the "Strong Borders Act" (Bill C-2) and the "Strengthening Canada's Immigration System and Borders Act" (Bill C-12), currently under discussion in Parliament, have the potential to put refugee rights at risk, impose arbitrary retroactive one-year bars, and grant ministers mass immigration status-cancellation powers. It also observes with concern that in provincial detention centers in Quebec, persons will be incarcerated according to their anatomical sex.

215. On October 30, 2025, the State submitted its response to the Commission's request for information to prepare this chapter.[482]

- Specific issues

216. In relation to democratic institutionality, the IACHR observed a number of events that led to the appointment of Canada's 24th Prime Minister. It takes note that in January, Prime Minister Justin Trudeau announced his resignation.[483] Later, on March 9, Mark Carney was elected Leader of the Liberal Party,[484] who, on March 14, was sworn-in Canada's 24th Prime Minister. [485] On March 24, the Prime Minister called for federal elections,[486] which took place on April 28, and resulted in Carney's victory to continue with his term as Prime Minister.[487] In addition, the Commission takes note that during the 2025 electoral process, Canadian security and intelligence offices, such as, Global Affairs Canada (GAC) and The Royal Canadian Mounted Police (RCMP), were at the frontline of Canada's effort to combat interference campaigns against democratic institutions, such as the monitoring of domestic and violent extremism threats directed at elections and electoral security.[488]

217. With respect to human rights institutionality, the Commission acknowledges that in June, the Canadian Human Rights Commission (CHRC) presented its 2025-2026 Plan. In it, the CHRC prioritizes advocacy and engagement efforts to address and combat systemic racism and discrimination, promotes human rights, and represents the public interests by adhering to the "Paris Principles", aim at guiding National Human Rights Institutions in the promotion of independence, transparency, pluralism, and by following strategic participation and meaningful engagement with stakeholders.[489]

218. Regarding citizen security, the Commission takes note that in June, the State introduced the "Strong Borders Act" (Bill C-2) aim at ensuring law enforcement has the right tools to keep the borders secure, combat transnational organized crime, stop the flow of illegal fentanyl, and crack down on money laundering.[490] In September, at the time of writing this report, the status of Bill C-2 was in Parliament undergoing its second reading.[491] Furthermore, and based on information available, the IACHR expresses its concern that if such Bill passes, refugee rights and fairness in immigration processing may be at risk; likewise, people who face persecution, torture or worse in their countries of origin, could be unfairly denied refugee protection by Canada.[492]

219. Concerning access to justice, the State indicated that from January to July 2025, the government continued to provide funding to support access to legal aid in the criminal justice system for immigration and refugee legal aid services.[493]

220. In addition, the Commission welcomes actions to reduce the overrepresentation of black[494] and indigenous[495] peoples in the criminal justice system. These actions set out a vision and priority areas to guide collaborative work with provinces and territories throughout Canada's Black Justice Strategy Implementation Plan, and the Federal Indigenous Justice Strategy, respectively. Likewise, he IACHR acknowledges that on December 17, 2024, Bill C-40, the "David and Joyce Milgaard's Law" known as the Miscarriage of Justice Review Commission Act received royal assent and became law. independent commission to review, investigate, and decide on criminal cases that should be returned to the justice system due to potential miscarriage of justice.[496]

221. Regarding the rights of women, the Commission celebrates that on March 7, 2025, the State signed the Inter-American Convention on the Prevention, Punishment, and Eradication of Violence against Women (Convention of Belém do Pará), reaffirming its commitment to advancing women's rights.[497] It also welcomes the reinstatement of the Minister of Women and Gender Equality, previously removed from the Cabinet earlier this year.[498] However, the Commission observes a budget reduction for this Ministry, as announced in the Government's Departmental Plan.[499]

222. In addition, gender-based violence and impunity, particularly affecting indigenous women, remain a concern. According to the Ottawa Police Service (OPS), cases of intimate partner violence increased by 9% in the first half of the year compared to the same period in 2024, with women representing 80.6% of victims.[500] Indigenous women with disabilities continue to face multiple forms of violence in both family and institutional settings, forced sterilizations,[501] and limited access to shelters and survivor services.[502] Civil society organizations also report limited progress in implementing the "Calls for Justice" from the National Inquiry on Missing and Murdered Indigenous Women and Girls.[503] Furthermore, indigenous, black and racialized women with disabilities remain overrepresented in the criminal justice system and prisons, with higher rates of placement in maximum security facilities.[504]

223. As for the rights of children, the IACHR values the measures adopted in the framework of the National Strategy for the Protection of Children from Sexual Exploitation on the Internet. Particularly, the State reported that it will provide $18.2 million until 2029 to the Canadian Centre for Child Protection (C3P) to operate two projects: i) Cybertip.ca, Canada's national tipline to report child sexual exploitation and abuse; and, ii) Project Arachnid, an innovative set of victim-centric tools used to scan the internet for known child sexual abuse materials (CSAM) and to send removal notices to electronic service providers. [505] In addition, the Commission welcomes the initiative Universal $10-a-day Child Care Program that will ensure that families get the support they need to join the workforce or continue their career while raising their kids.[506]

224. In relation to the situation of human mobility, the IACHR welcomes the end of immigration detention across the 10 provinces in Canada. Publicly available information suggests that as of September 15, there were no people detained in provincial correctional facilities.[507] Civil society organizations also saluted this measure, although they expressed concern over the decision of the Canada Border Services Agency to incarcerate detainees at a "temporary designated immigrant station" at a federal prison in Sainte-Anne-des-Plaines, Quebec.[508] Similarly, in its report to its visit to Canada, the United Nations Group on Arbitrary Detention (UNWGAD) welcomed the ending of the memoranda of understanding for migration detention in provincial prisons; nonetheless, it was concerned to hear indications that the federal Government was considering placing migration detainees in federal penitentiaries instead.[509]

225. The UNWGAD also highlighted that whereas existing policies require that migration detention be a last resort, this does not always occur in practice in Canada, and alternatives to detention are often only considered after arrest at the review hearing, when the damage from being removed from family, community and employment may have already been done.[510] In addition, it expressed concern over the fact that children can be detained, including for family reunification, and detainees often lack legal representation and have limited access to legal aid, with detention decisions sometimes taken on the basis of inaccessible classified material.[511]

226. On the other hand, the Commission notes with concern the presentation of Bill C-12 "Strengthening Canada's Immigration System and Borders Act". This Bill draws on the elements of Bill C-2, presented back in June,[512] to among others, improve the immigration system. According to official information, the proposal is looking to protect the asylum system against sudden increases in claims by introducing new ineligibility rules; improve how asylum claims are received, processed, and decided; strengthen authorities to cancel, suspend or change immigration documents, and to cancel, suspend or stop accepting new applications; and improve how client information is shared within Immigration, Refugees and Citizenship Canada (IRCC) and with federal, provincial and territorial partners.[513]

227. The State considers that many of the laws related to managing borders and immigration systems in Canada need to be updated to continue to address increasing and more complex security challenges.[514] The IACHR does not have information on the current complex security challenges presumably affecting Canada's migration system. As per civil society organizations, Bill C-12 leaves intact the measures to block refugee hearings, impose arbitrary retroactive one-year bars, and grants ministers mass immigration status-cancellation powers, and calls for the withdrawal of both Bill C-2 and Bill C-12.[515]

228. As for trafficking in persons, the State indicated that in relation to the Fighting Against Forced Labor and Child Labor in Supply Chains Act, which calls for entities and government institutions to release annual information on efforts to prevent and reduce risks of forced labor in supply chains, by May 31, 2025, a total of 4,313 reports had been received. the first 2024 annual information cycle, the State developed an optional international reporting template in collaboration with the United Kingdom and Australia to support streamlined reporting across jurisdictions.[516]

229. The IACHR also takes note that as of February of 2025, Immigration, Refugees and Citizenship Canada (IRCC) is improving measures for foreign national victims of human trafficking and family violence. These measures will consider that victims and their dependents in Canada may now receive an initial temporary resident permit (TRP) for at least 12 months and additional fees for subsequent TRP's; and work and study permits and biometrics will now be waived.[517] In addition, the Commission welcomes two initiatives that will bring $39.7 million in federal funding to protect children and youth from online sexual exploitation,[518] and $12.5 million to support the continued operation of the Canadian Human Trafficking Hotline, through 2028, respectively. [519]

230. Regarding the rights of Indigenous Peoples, the State reported that in 2025, under the UN Declaration Act Action Plan, the government moved forward on distinction-base mechanisms to formalize Indigenous Peoples' participation in, among others: implementing Canada's international human rights obligations, monitoring and reporting on treaty commitments, following up on recommendations from international bodies.[520] In addition, it established an Indigenous Advisory Council to collaborate with the Office of Major Federal Projects and allocated $40 million to strengthen the capacity of Indigenous communities to effectively participate in national infrastructure initiatives.[521]

231. Furthermore, Canada developed the First Federal Indigenous Justice Strategy, representing a significant step toward addressing systemic discrimination. The strategy includes measures to expand culturally relevant justice services, strengthens the application of Gladue principles in sentencing, and supports the creation of community-based, Indigenous-run correctional programs and healing lodges to promote restorative justice and reduces recidivism.[522] This initiative responds to the ongoing concern over the overrepresentation of Indigenous persons in the federal penitentiary system, who account for roughly one-third of the total prison population despite representing only about five percent of the country's population.[523]

232. Nevertheless, the Ontario approved Bill 5, which introduces provisions for the creation of special economic zones, accelerates mining and infrastructure projects, and relaxes environmental safeguards.[524] The Commission notes with particular concern that this legislation was adopted without consultation or free, prior, and informed consent (FPIC) from affected Indigenous communities,[525] under the justification of "national interest," allowing authorities to fast-track or bypass existing environmental and consultation procedures.[526]

233. Regarding the situation of Afro-descendant persons and the fight against racial discrimination, the State reported initiatives at the federal and municipal levels; they include: i) progress on the 2024–2028 Canada Anti-Racism Strategy; ii) a review study of the Mental Health Fund for Afro-descendant persons, with recommendations to expand culturally safe access;[527] and, iii) economic measures such as funding for the Black Entrepreneurship Program.[528] At the local level, community and health-service actions were undertaken, such as a hotline for Afro-descendant youth in Montreal,[529] a safe space at the Deer Lodge Centre in Winnipeg,[530] and a plan to combat racism in Ontario's education system.[531]

234. There were advances and challenges in Canada regarding racial profiling. Statistics Canada published a framework for police records systems to avoid the stigmatization of marginalized communities.[532] The Supreme Court agreed to review the constitutionality of random police stops in Québec, while the Court of Appeal kept them suspended and a class action was authorized over stops without cause.[533] The Canadian Civil Liberties Association (CCLA) intervened before the high court in support of rulings linking such stops to profiling.[534] Indeed, the Commission observed the persistence of various episodes of racial profiling in Canada.[535] In addition, the Commission notes with concern delays in the publication of a key report on environmental racism in Nova Scotia.[536]

235. According to statistical and police agencies, hate crimes in Canada reached 4,882 incidents in 2024 (+1% year over year; +169% since 2018), with 2,377 motivated by race/ethnicity (+8%) and an increase in incidents against Afro-descendant persons.[537] At the local level, Toronto reported that discrimination against Afro-descendants was among the three most frequent categories and that charges increased,[538] while Ottawa recorded 467 incidents (−4% year over year).[539] The federal government's September 2025 proposal to strengthen the criminal response is also noted.[540]

236. Regarding persons deprived of liberty, the Commission expresses its concern for the decision made on June 2025 by Quebec's Public Security Minister, which establishes that incarcerated persons in provincial detention centres will be incarcerated according to their anatomical sex. This means that transgender inmates can no longer choose whether to serve their time in women's or men's prisons.[541]

237. Regarding the rights of LGBTI persons, the government made available $1.5 million in federal funding to local and national Pride organizations to pay for increased security at festivals and parades celebrating the 2SLGBTQ+ community.[542] In June 2025, an Alberta judge granted a temporary injunction blocking a transgender health-care bill that bans doctors from providing gender-affirming care to youth.[543] Subsequently, in July 2025, a judge halted the deportation of a non-binary person to the U.S. stating that the risk assessment, which was conducted in the previous year, was flawed and outdated given the deterioration of the state of the rights of trans persons during 2025.[544]

238. With respect to persons with disabilities, Canada took important steps to strengthen their rights, notably through regulations for the Canada Disability Benefit (CDB). This initiative aims to support over 600,000 working-age persons with disabilities through a federal investment over six years.[545]

239. Nevertheless, Canada's immigration detention practices came under scrutiny by UN mechanisms and human rights organizations due to violations of legal capacity rights, solitary confinement for people with psychosocial disabilities, and a lack of community-based alternatives.[546]

IX. CHILE

- General considerations

240. During 2025, the Republic of Chile (hereinafter, "Chile") made progress in the guarantee of women's rights and in the prevention and punishment of gender-based violence, as well as in actions targeted at the Afro-descendant population and persons with disabilities. Progress was also noted in the strengthening of memory, truth and justice programs; the advancement of investigations related to trafficking in persons; and the adoption of laws and programs to improve social security, significantly benefiting older persons.

241. Regarding challenges, situations of risk affecting indigenous leaders and communities in the context of the defense of their territories were observed. At the same time, concerns persist regarding public security operations during peaceful social protests and the deployment of the armed forces in border areas, which could have an impact on persons in situations of human mobility.

242. On September 4, 2025, the State submitted its response to the Commission's request for information to prepare this chapter.

- Specific issues

243. In the area of democratic institutionality, reforms were promoted with a view to the 2026–2030 parliamentary and presidential elections. Among them, progress was made on a bill aimed at strengthening governability and representativeness through the establishment of new rules for political parties and parliamentary committees, including transparency and internal discipline criteria.[547] In parallel, amendments to Law No. 8.700 on popular voting and vote counting were debated, with the aim of adjusting electoral procedures, improving oversight standards and modernizing vote-counting mechanisms.[548]

[548] Ibid.

244. In this regard, note was taken of the presidential and parliamentary elections held on November 16, which were considered to have the highest level of participation (85 percent) since the return to democracy in 1990, considering that mandatory voting was incorporated for the first time. As no candidate obtained an absolute majority of votes, a second electoral round was called[549], which took place on December 14, where candidate José Antonio Kast emerged victorious[550].

245. In the judicial sphere, the Supreme Court established limits on the exercise of freedom of expression on social media when it entails serious harm to the right to honor and it outlined criteria to distinguish legitimate criticism from injurious speech.[551] At the same time, Congress approved Law No. 21.719 on the protection and processing of personal data, which creates an autonomous agency with supervisory, sanctioning and guideline-issuing powers for public and private entities.[552] The law, which will enter into force in December 2026, seeks to strengthen guarantees in digital environments, considering the widespread use of online platforms and the intensive processing of personal information.[553]

246. Despite these regulatory advances, a study titled Caracterización del sistema de integridad pública municipal: Instrumentos y procesos 2025 (Characterization of the Municipal Public Integrity System: Instruments and Processes 2025), prepared by the Association of Municipalities of Chile, revealed significant gaps at the local government level. According to its findings, 81.2 percent of municipalities do not have a formal anti-corruption policy, 69.7 percent lack a public integrity policy, and 68.8 percent do not have an active ethics committee.[554]

247. Regarding the human rights institutions, progress was reported in the implementation of the third version of the National Human Rights Plan (PNDH3) and the third National Action Plan on Businesses and Human Rights (PAN3). Both instruments include measures to mainstream gender, intercultural and social participation approaches. The Feminist Foreign Policy continued to be consolidated; as of September 2025, 27 percent of ambassadors were women. The adoption, within the United Nations Human Rights Council, of the resolution "Women, diplomacy and human rights," promoted by Chile, was also highlighted.[555]

248. In addition, the Presidential Advisory Commission for the Strengthening of the National Human Rights Institute (INDH), convened by the Ministry of Justice and Human Rights, was established.[556] This commission concluded its work with 44 recommendations, which included granting constitutional status to the INDH, ensuring its financial autonomy, clearly separating its governance and management functions, and improving its accountability and citizen participation mechanisms.[557]

249. Moreover, the Presidential Expert Advisory Commission for the Update of Poverty Measurement presented its final recommendations in May 2025. Among them, it proposed establishing two differentiated poverty lines for renter and non-renter households, to better reflect the weight of housing costs.

It also recommended updating the measurement of multidimensional poverty, maintaining five dimensions while revising the internal indicators.[558]

250. In the area of citizen security, the Ministry of Public Security was created and became operational, assuming political leadership over the Carabineros and the Investigative Police, as well as responsibility for coordinating the national security system. In addition, the new Anti-Terrorism Law, Law No. 21.732, was enacted. This law redefines terrorist conduct, updates criminal offenses and repeals Law No. 18.314, with the aim of bringing the legal framework into line with international standards. In parallel, the bill on rules governing the use of force remained under consideration by a Joint Committee, seeking to establish clear parameters for the actions of police and military forces.[559]

251. With regard to the continuation of the constitutional state of exception in the southern macro-zone, in force since May 2022, the State reported a significant reduction in crime in the region. As of March 2025, incidents of rural violence reportedly decreased by 60 percent compared to 2024 and by 78 percent compared to 2021.[560]

252. Notwithstanding the above, public sources reported episodes of excessive use of force in the context of protest policing. A journalist reported having been arbitrarily detained by the Carabineros while covering a student march in March 2025.[561] Likewise, during the commemorations of the 52nd anniversary of the coup d'état, it was reported that the Carabineros detained 57 people, including adolescents, and resorted to the use of tear gas and water cannons.[562]

253. In terms of access to justice, the State promoted legislative initiatives aimed at strengthening institutional access to justice. Noteworthy among these is the bill creating the Access to Justice Service and the Victims' Public Defender's Office, intended to expand the coverage of free legal services, particularly for vulnerable groups, and to establish a specialized entity for the comprehensive assistance of victims of crime. In addition, a constitutional reform bill is under consideration to modify judicial governance and create a Judicial Appointments Council, with the aim of enhancing transparency in judicial appointment processes and strengthening the independence of the judiciary.[563]

254. In this context, the Senate approved a constitutional impeachment against a judge of the Santiago Court of Appeals, ordering his removal from office for notable neglect of duties and irregularities linked to the so-called "caso Audios" (Audios case). This magistrate became the third member of the judiciary to be removed in connection with the case.[564]

255. Regarding the human rights of women, various measures were adopted to advance the effective enjoyment of women's human rights on an equal basis. With respect to the right to health, Decree No. 22 of 2024 of the Ministry of Health entered into force, recognizing voluntary termination of pregnancy under three legally permitted grounds and establishing that access thereto may not be obstructed by the undue exercise of conscientious objection.[565] At the same time, the government submitted to the National Congress the Bill on Voluntary Termination of Pregnancy with Time Limits, which proposes decriminalization up to 14 weeks of gestation and the establishment of mechanisms within the health system to guarantee access.[566] Similarly, progress was made in the construction of the National Support and Care Service through the adoption of the National Policy on Support and Care and the National Support and Care Plan 2025–2026,[567] the processing of a bill recognizing the right to care and creating the National Care System,[568] and the strengthening of existing local and community-based care programs.[569]

256. Furthermore, to address gender gaps in pensions, as of January 2026, within the framework of the new Social Security Insurance, a Compensation for Differences in Life Expectancy will begin to be paid. This mechanism guarantees that women and men who retire at the age of 65, with the same accumulated savings and identical family circumstances, will receive the same monthly pension.[570] In addition, the regulation governing the operation of the Interinstitutional Coordination Commission to Address Gender-Based Violence at the national level was approved.[571] The Ministry of Women and Gender Equity (MMEG) also continued the pilot implementation of the Integrated Information System on Gender-Based Violence, which covered 15 municipalities in 2025,[572] and implemented the "Mujeres en Movilidad" (Women in Mobility) project, aimed at bringing comprehensive care services closer to women in situations of human mobility who experience gender-based violence while staying in temporary shelters.[573]

257. However, public sources reported an increase in cases of disappearance of women in recent years.[574] In this regard, the Committee of Experts of the Follow-up Mechanism to the Belém do Pará Convention (MESECVI) expressed concern about a pattern of femicides which had been preceded by disappearance in the Atacama region, affecting girls and adolescent women, as well as about the lack of progress in investigations and the ongoing risks faced by women and the relatives of the victims.[575]

258. Regarding persons deprived of liberty, progress was made in the area of social reintegration and the use of alternative measures. In particular, noteworthy initiatives include the Training Pathway for Facilitators of Labor Training Processes for Persons Who Have Infringed the Law;[576] the "Becas Laborales"

(Labor Scholarships) program benefiting women serving sentences at the Los Ríos Penitentiary Complex;[577] and the agreement adopted between the municipality of Puerto Montt and the Gendarmerie allowing people convicted of minor offenses to commute their sentences through monthly community work.[578] In addition, judicial decisions by the Supreme Court guaranteed the substitution of a custodial sentence for a woman with multiple chronic diseases with house arrest;[579] and the Santiago Court of Appeals ordered improvements to healthcare and hygienic conditions at the Santiago Sur Pretrial Detention Center.[580] The Commission also values the approval, by the Gendarmerie, of a series of guidelines aimed at guaranteeing the rights of pregnant incarcerated women and of breastfeeding infants.[581]

259. Notwithstanding this progress, detention conditions continue to present significant challenges. According to official data, as of August 2025, there were 61,706 persons deprived of liberty, with an overcrowding rate of 45.5 percent. The level of overpopulation is particularly alarming in certain detention facilities, such as the "Tal Tal" Pretrial Detention Center, operating at 381.3 percent capacity; the "Copiapó" Penitentiary Compliance Center, at 321.9 percent; and the "Parral" Penitentiary Compliance Center, at 302.1 percent.[582] In response to this situation, throughout 2025, the State continued to make progress in the expansion of existing facilities or the construction of new penitentiary facilities.[583] In addition, the Committee for the Prevention of Torture (CPT) reported deficient infrastructure, lack of hygiene, insufficient access to medical care, ill-treatment, including the use of prolonged isolation, particularly in maximum-security units, and inadequate attention to vulnerable groups such as women, adolescents and people with mental health conditions.[584]

260. In relation to human rights defenders, the Protocol for the Protection of Human Rights Defenders came into force. This interinstitutional instrument is designed to coordinate the state response to threats or violations against human rights defenders. In this regard, it was indicated that, as of August 2025, the protocol had been activated 32 times.[585]

261. Notwithstanding the above, since November 8, 2024, the president of the Putreguel Mapuche Community, Julia Chuñil Catricura —an ancestral leader from the Los Ríos region, Wallmapu, and a beneficiary of precautionary measures granted by the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights— has been reported missing. It is alleged that her disappearance may be linked to her leadership role in the defense of the territory, and despite the search and tracing efforts carried out by State authorities, her whereabouts remain unknown to date.[586]

262. Regarding memory, truth and justice, the State advanced efforts aimed at the protection and sustainability of memory sites.[587] In this regard, the most noteworthy measures include the creation of the Unit for Sites of Memory and the Social Program on Sites of Memory, the designation of 15 new sites as historical monuments, the installation of 22 identifying plaques nationwide, and the strengthening of the system for monitoring attacks against sites of memory. In addition, the expropriation of land from the former Colonia Dignidad was approved to consolidate a site of memory. Likewise, the property known as the former "Venda Sexy" was transferred to a victims' association to be converted into a site of memory, and the National Archive of Memory was created.[588]

263. With respect to disappeared persons, progress was recorded within the framework of the National Search Plan, including an increase in investigative measures, which totaled 100 as of June 2025, encompassing excavations and interviews,[589] the development of a georeferenced map of victims' trajectories, the use of specialized technologies, and the delivery of qualification files to relatives, as well as the publication of the first official list of 1,469 victims of enforced disappearance. In addition, the Commission notes the adoption of a bill aimed at creating the Registry of Missing Persons due to Enforced Disappearance since it enables the issuance of death certificates and facilitates civil procedures for relatives.[590]

264. In the area of justice, the Supreme Court held an unprecedented hearing to discuss the application of the statute of limitations in human rights cases involving disappeared detainees and executed political prisoners, in the context of compliance with the Inter-American Court's judgment in the case Vega González v. Chile.[591] In this regard, the Supreme Court also rejected writs of amparo filed by persons convicted of serious human rights violations, finding no qualified circumstances that would warrant an alteration of the sentence enforcement regime.[592] Additionally, the decree that led to the establishment of the "Punta Peuco" prison was amended so as to eliminate the prison status as a special detention facility for persons convicted of crimes against humanity.[593]

265. In relation to the rights of indigenous peoples, the Presidential Commission for Peace and Understanding presented its final report, which presented a diagnosis of the situation of the Mapuche people, highlighting territorial dispossession, structural discrimination and the lack of political recognition. document proposes comprehensive measures of reparation, land restitution and institutional reconciliation.[594] However, it was noted that the scope of these measures is limited to communities with formalized claims and to a constrained budget, which could leave out sectors that have faced historical violations but have been unable to complete the required administrative procedures.[595]

266. In addition, a bill was introduced to amend Law No. 20.249 ("Lafkenche Law") with the aim of facilitating the development of productive projects on coastal lands for which there had been requests to turn them into marine coastal spaces of indigenous peoples (ECMPO).[596]

267. Regarding the situation of Afro-descendants and the fight against racial discrimination, the State made progress in the process of prior consultation on policies with an ethnic-racial approach, led by the Unit for the Coordination of Indigenous and Afro-descendant Affairs (UCAIA) of the Ministry of Social Development and Family.[597] In addition, actions were undertaken in the areas of awareness-raising and anti-racist education,[598] as well as initiatives focused on visibility, memory and the cultural rights of Afro-descendant women. These efforts included a regional meeting organized by the National Cultural Heritage Service and the granting of recognitions to Afro-descendant leaders in Arica and Parinacota.[599]

268. Regarding the rights of LGBTI persons, Chile made progress through the implementation of the first survey aimed at generating statistical data on sexual and gender diversity, conducted by the National Statistics Institute (INE).[600] In addition, noteworthy rulings were issued by the Constitutional Court, including the decision annulling a law that prevented the financing of hormone therapies for trans persons under the age of 18,[601] and the ruling authorizing changes of name and legal sex for trans persons under the age of 14.[602] For its part, the Third Criminal Trial Court of Santiago handed down, for the first time, a conviction for femicide on grounds of gender identity.[603] The State also invested efforts in promoting an inclusive agenda focused on trans and non-binary persons, particularly through labor awareness initiatives promoted by the Observatory on Citizen Participation and Non-Discrimination, and the National Training and Employment Service (SENCE) –

Municipalities Diverse Network Pilot Program, aimed at facilitating the labor insertion of trans persons in municipal care programs under the coordinated efforts of various public institutions.[604]

269. Notwithstanding the above, the Supreme Court reduced the sentence of a person who had been convicted of the murder and dismemberment of Ever Albarrán, a trans man, in 2023.[605] In addition, a 78 percent increase in reports of homophobia and transphobia was recorded compared to the previous year.[606] The Chilean Medical Association (COLMED) also reported harassment and threats against health professionals who provide gender-affirming healthcare services to trans persons.[607]

270. Regarding persons with disabilities, The State made progress in the processing of a bill aimed at granting priority to persons with disabilities and caregivers in access to public services, including both public and private institutions.[608] In addition, the National Disability Service (SENADIS), in collaboration with other external entities, advanced a research initiative that resulted in public policy guidelines to promote the labor inclusion of persons with intellectual disabilities across the country.[609]

271. Regarding the situation of persons in the context human mobility, it is highlighted that a series of DESCA measures were adopted, such as the development of the Technical Guidelines for the 2025 Program of Access to Healthcare for Migrants, the Employment Pathway for Migrants and Refugees; and the implementation of cultural initiatives within the framework of the 2024–2026 National Action Plan on Migration and Foreign Nationals.[610]

272. However, official data indicated that the migrant population accounts for 8.8 percent of the total population of Chile, with a higher proportion of women than men.[611] At the same time, it was observed that throughout the year the deployment of the armed forces and security forces continued, with the stated objective of exercising border control;[612] in particular, a 2023 decree, which authorizes military and security forces to control identity, search, and detain persons in the context of human mobility in the regions of Arica and Parinacota, Tarapacá, and Antofagasta, was extended for the remainder of the year.[613]

273. With regard to human trafficking, the State made progress through the provision of training sessions to public officials on the identification and initial assistance of victims of trafficking in persons.[614] At the same time, collaborative actions were carried out within the framework of the so-called "Operación Rescate" (Rescue Operation), which, following months of investigations, enabled the identification and establishment of trafficking routes, the dismantling of criminal organizations, and the recovery of 2,122 victims of trafficking in persons.[615]

274. With respect to the rights of older persons, progress was made in the area of social security with the entry into force of the new pension reform, adopted in March 2025. Its main objective is to improve the adequacy and equity of the system, including a gradual increase in the Universal Guaranteed Pension (PGU), the creation of Social Security Insurance financed by employers[616] and the establishment of an Autonomous Pension Protection Fund to administer the new Social Security Insurance.[617]

275. Notwithstanding the above, publicly available information indicates that more than 800 older persons are currently awaiting placement in long-term care facilities. More than half of these individuals were judicially referred to external care facilities due to cases of domestic violence.[618]

276. With regard to the situation of children and adolescents, the Commission takes note of the report published by UNICEF in April 2025 containing statistical data on the situation of children in the country, which indicates that Chile has a population of 4,493,995 people between 0 and 19 years of age, and that 39.8 percent of households include at least one child or adolescent.[619] Likewise, the Commission values the progress presented in the 2025 Public Accountability Report of the National Service for Specialized Protection, which highlighted the design of a new residential care model with more personalized attention, the establishment of seven new Foster Care and Adoption Family Units, an increase in adolescents' access to higher education, the strengthening of initiatives aimed at preparation for independent living, and the updating of protocols in response to crimes of sexual exploitation and other critical events related to juvenile criminal responsibility.[620] Improvements in the coverage of the protection system were also reported: as of October 2025, the Service indicated that it was providing care to 117,195 children and adolescents, of whom 92,928 were enrolled in community-based programs, 10,481 were placed with foster families, and 5,163 were in residential alternative care programs, all of which reaffirms the State's emphasis on family-based care over residential care.[621]

[621] National Specialized Protection Service for Children and Adolescents, "El poder de cuidar en cifras: octubre 2025" (The power of caring, in numbers: October 2025), November 5, 2025.

277. In April, data from the National Service indicated that the number of children under 24 months of age in residential alternative care programs increased by 72 percent between 2021 and 2025.[622] In August, the National Service reported that over 700 children under the age of 4 were in residential care programs. This information served as the basis for the launch of a national campaign titled "Cambiemos su historia," (Let's Change Their Story) presented by the Ministry of Social Development and Family and the National Service for Specialized Protection, with the aim of increasing the number of foster families and ensuring children's right to live in a family environment.[623]

278. Nevertheless, the Commission observes with concern the persistent challenges identified in the 2025 Diagnostic Report of the Office of the Ombudsperson for Children. During 2024, a total of 57 children and adolescents between 10 and 17 years of age died as a result of self-inflicted injuries, while 51 died as a result of firearm use. In addition, five further deaths from this cause were recorded during the first half of March 2025. These figures reflect a sustained increase in firearm-related lethality since 2000, reaching a cumulative increase of 122 percent. The Diagnostic Report also notes a decrease in police-reported cases of sexual abuse and rape against children between 2023 and 2024, but it warns of the persistence of a significant focus on sexual exploitation, particularly in digital environments. Data provided by the Office of the Public Prosecutor shows a 45.12 percent increase in online sexual exploitation crimes between 2022 and 2024, with a particularly critical rise of 62 percent in the acquisition and storage of child sexual abuse material.[624]

X. COLOMBIA

- General considerations

279. In 2025, the Republic of Colombia (hereinafter, "Colombia") made significant progress in the regulatory and judicial recognition of the rights of ethnic communities, together with the consolidation of gender and disability inclusive approaches across various public policies. The solidarity pillar of the retirement reform was also defined, aimed at expanding social protection for older persons without a contributory pension. In the transitional justice sphere, the Special Jurisdiction for Peace (JEP) issued its first restorative sanctions, marking a milestone in the implementation of the Final Agreement.

280. At the same time, structural challenges persist in relation to violence, including political violence, as evidenced by the assassination of presidential pre-candidate Miguel Uribe, as well as delays in the implementation of comprehensive solutions provided for under the Peace Agreement. This context continues to affect institutional consolidation, the guarantee of rights, and the conditions necessary to ensure full democratic participation. The persistence of non-state armed actors and illicit economies hamper the State's presence and limit access to essential services. Furthermore, the institutional capacity to implement territorially-based and differentiated policies faces significant obstacles. All this has differentiated impacts on vulnerable populations and undermines the consolidation of effective guarantees.

281. On September 19, 2025, the State submitted an extensive and detailed response to the Commission's request for information to prepare this chapter.[625]

- Specific issues

282. With regard to democratic institutionality, the State reported a range of actions aimed at organizing the 2026 electoral process, including the launch of the pre-electoral cycle; the delivery of training activities with differentiated approaches; the issuance of a decree to regulate the Comprehensive Protection Plan, intended to ensure protection for the exercise of political activity in the country's current security context; measures providing guarantees to the political party that emerged from the Revolutionary Armed Forces of Colombia, People's Army (FARC-EP),[626] and the implementation of the Interinstitutional Technical Roundtable for the Participation of Women in the Special Transitional Peace Electoral Districts (CITREP).[627] The Office of the Ombudsperson developed prevention strategies based on risk analysis initiatives, monitoring actions, and the activation of protection mechanisms for candidates at risk.[628] Likewise, together with the Electoral Observation Mission and international organizations, it promoted the "commitment to a free and peaceful electoral process," aimed at countering stigmatizing discourse and fostering secure spaces.[629]

283. Nevertheless, homicides of social and community leaders and human rights defenders were recorded, as well as the assassination of presidential pre-candidate Miguel Uribe Turbay as a result of an attack carried out against him during a campaign event on June 25. This highlights the persistence of political violence and the risks to democratic institutions. Civil society organizations reported that non-state groups exercised territorial control, which affects the political rights and the participation of several communities in various regions.[630] Looking ahead to the 2026 electoral process, challenges have been identified to ensure peaceful, inclusive, and violence-free elections, within a context of political polarization and confrontation that calls for coordinated efforts to strengthen protection and democratic dialogue.[631]

284. As for human rights institutions and the implementation of the Peace Agreement, the State highlighted that progress was made, stemming from the Final Agreement, including consolidated institutional reforms, an update of the Framework Implementation Plan, and the strengthening of the National Human Rights Action Plan as a key mechanism for governmental coordination on human rights. Furthermore, the State reported progress in the implementation of the Ethnic Chapter, the Comprehensive Rural Reform, cross-cutting differentiated approaches, and reparation processes. It also highlighted the purchase of 74,725 hectares (ha) for indigenous peoples and 8,013 ha for Afro-descendant communities, together with the formalization of 923,926 ha and 47,258 ha, respectively. It also highlighted progress in three indigenous collective reparations, the fulfillment of more than 50 percent of 25 Comprehensive Collective Reparation Plans, and the implementation of a Comprehensive Protection Program for signatories and their families.[632]

285. However, challenges persist regarding security and the guarantee of the rights of the signatories to the Peace Agreement, which is reflected in an increase of recorded killings, which reached 34 by September 2025.[633] The JEP ordered the relocation of 124 signatories who were at risk in the Catatumbo region and ordered additional protective measures in response to threats.[634] At an institutional level, the executive branch's temporary withdrawal of Bill No. 621 of 2025, aimed at consolidating the Ministry of Equality and

Equity, generated uncertainty regarding the continuity of policies oriented towards reducing structural inequalities.[635]

286. Regarding the progress made under the Comprehensive Rural Reform, until March 31, 2025, 35,585 ha with duly registered titles had been allocated to 11,761 rural families. At the same time, 231,500 ha were provisionally allocated, of which 28,825 ha were allocated to ethnic communities,[636] with 130,000 ha being allocated during 2025.[637] In addition, 2,833,990 ha were formalized, which accounted for 41 percent of the aim established in the Final Agreement, with a significant impact on collective title processes.[638] Despite the reported progress, significant challenges persist in achieving the agreed targets, as definitive land allocation accounts for only 1.19 percent of the three million hectares committed,[639] a figure that rises to 9 percent when provisional allocations are included.[640]

287. In terms of citizen security, the State reported various actions aimed at strengthening public security, including the holding of 2,569 community meetings with social organizations and institutions to identify local challenges.[641] The Office of the Inspector General provided guidance to departmental and municipal governments on the development of Comprehensive Citizen Security and Coexistence Plans incorporating human rights, territorial, differentiated and gender approaches.[642]. Likewise, a Strategy against Multiple Types of Crime was implemented, aimed at coordinating the institutional capacity for special, intelligence and judicial operations against criminal structures. This resulted in the arrest of 37,753 individuals and the seizure of 322,696 kg of cocaine, among other outcomes.[643]

288. Moreover, the Paz Total (Total Peace) policy helped establish a mechanism to contribute to truth and non-repetition guarantees. It was made up of 16 peace facilitators drawn from the former United Self-Defense Forces of Colombia.[644] In addition, temporary location zones were established with the General Staff of the Blocks and Front in Catatumbo; the National Coordinator of the Bolivarian Army in Nariño and Putumayo; and the Comuneros del Sur in Nariño.[645] With these groups, plans aimed at disengaging children and adolescents together with other protective measures were agreed upon since children and adolescents had been forcibly recruited by these groups. In addition, other measures agreed included territory demining, the prohibition of the use of landmines,[646] and the substitution of illicit crops, together with the development of productive, educational and infrastructure projects.[647] Additionally, commitments were secured with the Conquistadores de la Sierra Nevada self-defense forces to prevent and eradicate the forced recruitment of children.[648]

289. Moreover, non-state armed groups and criminal organizations have expanded their activities, with clashes, attacks, and other violent incidents recorded in various parts of the country, resulting in civilian and military casualties. In January 2025, disputes between non-state armed groups in Catatumbo resulted in at least 60 casualties, including human rights defenders and Peace Agreement signatories. The scale of the violence led to the forced displacement of at least 60,000 people and the confinement of an additional 12,000, including 23 indigenous communities from the Bari and Yukpa peoples. This situation also caused the collapse of public service systems and deprived more than 46,000 children and adolescents of access to education.[649] In this context, the most recent ceasefire in force under the Paz Total policy was brought to an end with members of the self-proclaimed General Staff of the Magdalena Medio Blocks, including the "Comandante Gentil Duarte" and "Comandante Jorge Suárez Briceño" structures, and the "Raúl Reyes" Front of the FARC-EP.[650] The actions of armed groups in Guaviare also resulted in the murder of eight social leaders.[651][652] In addition, at least 24 attacks were recorded in Cauca, Valle del Cauca, and Antioquia, resulting in eight deaths and dozens of people injured.[653]. These incidents included the attack on the Military Aviation School in Cali, which caused seven casualties, as well as the attack on a police helicopter in Amalfi, Antioquia, where 12 people were killed.

290. In addition, civil society organizations expressed the need to participate in dialogues with armed groups under the Paz Total policy, while emphasizing the need to ensure the effective inclusion of victims' voices and the incorporation of ethnic-racial, territorial and gender approaches into the agreements. In regions such as Buenaventura and Chocó, serious impacts on ethnic peoples were reported, including murders, sexual violence, displacement and restrictions on ancestral mechanisms of organization. Territorial control practices exercised by armed groups[654] and perceptions of institutional tolerance of said practices were also reported, together with an increase in the threats against those who reported this situation, which continues to pose significant risks for local communities.[655]

291. With respect to challenges related to access to justice, the State reported on actions undertaken to safeguard the independence of the judiciary, highlighting the adoption of the Statutory Law on the Administration of Justice in October 2024.[656]. In this regard, the Office of the Ombudsperson highlighted the independence of the judiciary in the proceedings conducted by Judge Sandra Heredia of the Bogotá Criminal Trial Court, in the case involving former President Álvaro Uribe Vélez.[657] Additionally, the Office of the Ombudsperson highlighted the campaign to achieve parity among the high courts, as it recommends the creation of women-only candidate lists for the appointment of women justices to the State Council, the Supreme Court of Justice, and the Constitutional Court.[658]

292. Moreover, civil society organizations have reported high levels of impunity in cases of homicides against human rights defenders. In this regard, between 2016 and 2024, the Office of the Attorney General (FGN) recorded 1,372 homicides, of which 1,322 are currently under investigation. Of those cases, 793 showed no significant progress and, of the remaining 529 cases, 217 resulted in convictions, while only 20 led to the punishment of the masterminds.[659] Moreover, there are situations that hinder access to justice, such as the absence of judicial and civil state institutions in the territories of Buenaventura, which prevents the filing of complaints and the provision of security guarantees for complainants, particularly in cases of sexual violence against Afro-descendant girls, adolescents and women.[660]

293. Regarding the situation of human rights defenders, between January and July 2025, the Office of the Ombudsperson documented 107 homicides of human rights defenders with social and community leadership roles, and it recorded a total of 1,595 cases between 2016 and July 2025.[661] The OHCHR verified 29 of the 86 allegations received during the first half of the year, with additional cases under verification. The departments with the highest number of cases were Antioquia, Bolívar, Cauca, Chocó, Santander and Putumayo.[662] The Inter-American Commission granted three precautionary measures to protect three human rights defenders at urgent risk.[663] Furthermore, the State indicated that the FGN, through the National Threats Group, received 442 complaints, leading to requests for protection measures from the National Protection Unit in 406 cases and for preventive measures from the National Police in 395 cases. Finally, the proceedings resulted in two cases of convictions, four cases in which the principle of opportunity was applied, two cases were dismissed due to the death of the suspect, eight indictments, and nine cases in which charges were formally brought.[664]

294. Threats continue to be the most common form of aggression against human rights defenders. According to the Somos Defensores (We Are Defenders) Program, 58 cases of threats were reported during the first quarter of the year.[665] The case of adolescent environmental activist Francisco Vera came to light after he allegedly faced death threats, harassment and smear campaigns that prompted his departure from the country and continued while he was abroad.[666] The State reported on the criminal investigation opened in 2021 and on the measures adopted by the Colombian Institute of Family Welfare.[667] Moreover, civil society organizations reported 94 murders between January and July 2025, as well as differentiated risks faced by community leaders, in a context of armed presence that heightens exposure to reprisals and violence.[668]

295. In 2025, relevant progress was made in the regulatory and judicial recognition of the rights of indigenous peoples. The State issued a presidential decree strengthening the right to self-determination and regulating powers related to indigenous territories.[669] Moreover, Decree Law No. 481 of 2025 was enacted, recognizing the Indigenous Education System as a public policy of its own.[670] In the judicial sphere, the Constitutional Court issued a decision favorable to the Je'eruriwa people, ordering measures of comprehensive reparation, territorial restitution and guarantees of non-repetition.[671]

296. Nevertheless, various challenges persist in connection with the impact of the armed conflict and the illicit economies in indigenous territories. Between January and August 2025, more than 22,600 people belonging to ethnic communities were recorded as having been forcibly displaced.[672] Among those affected were members of the Je'eruriwa people, despite the Constitutional Court's decision.[673] In the Sierra Nevada de Santa Marta, the Kogui, Wiwa, Kankuamo, Arhuaco and Ette Naka peoples faced threats to their survival due to territorial disputes and illicit activities.[674] Likewise, concern persists regarding the under-utilization of funds allocated to the implementation of the Victims' Law and the ethnic decrees, which limits effective access to reparation, collective protection and institutional strengthening in contexts of heightened vulnerability.[675]

297. With regard to the situation of Afro-descendants and the fight against racial discrimination, the State reported progress aimed at strengthening the rights of Afro-descendants, including the creation of the Special Harmonization Program (PEA) aimed at fostering reintegration with an ethnic and gender-based approach.[676] During the internal unrest, collective and individual protection measures were implemented in Catatumbo and Cúcuta.[677] The Ministry of Justice of Colombia launched the 2025 Project Bank to support initiatives aimed at transitioning to licit economies in prioritized territories,[678] while the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Colombia promoted workshops to harmonize Afro-Andean statistical parameters.[679] Affirmative actions in higher education[680] and cultural recognition[681] were also taken, as well as judicial orders issued by the Constitutional Court of Colombia to grant title to mangrove and tidal flat areas for the benefit of community councils,[682] and to protect the Jaguares de Yuruparí macro-territory affected by mercury contamination.[683]

298. Moreover, multiple incidents of violence were reported in regions with a high Afro-descendant presence, such as Cauca, Chocó, Nariño, and Valle del Cauca. In Buenaventura, during the first quarter of 2025, more than 50 Afro-descendant youths were killed, including Alan Valencia, a young leader of the Bahía Málaga Community Council,[684] which generated widespread fear.[685] In Chocó, armed strikes, mobility restrictions (confinement),[686] and clashes[687] were documented, hindering the delivery of humanitarian assistance.[688] The Office of the Ombudsperson issued an early warning regarding risks to the Afro-descendant population and people of low socioeconomic status in Cali, stemming from the presence of armed groups and criminal organizations.[689] The State also reported on operations conducted by law enforcement forces in corridors of the Pacific region aimed at reducing homicides and reopening roads.[690]

299. In terms of the human rights of women, progress was made in the legislative consideration of two key bills: a law aimed at prohibiting female genital mutilation, which has reached the Senate,[691] and the "Law on Care without Revictimization," which establishes mandatory training on violence against women and a gender perspective for public officials involved in such cases.[692] The Office of the Inspector General urged national and territorial authorities to strengthen and incorporate a gender perspective in the development and implementation of Comprehensive Citizen Security and Coexistence Plans (PISCC).[693] Additionally, during the first half of 2025, the Office of the Ombudsperson provided assistance, counseling, and guidance to 3,480 women victims of gender-based violence.[694]

300. Additionally, the State adopted measures to protect and guarantee sexual and reproductive rights. These measures included the decision of the Constitutional Court of Colombia urging an indigenous council to refrain from restricting requests for the voluntary termination of pregnancy,[695] a circular issued by the Ministry of Justice and Law of Colombia providing, on a temporary basis, for the availability of open cells for pregnant persons and persons in the breastfeeding period,[696] and the implementation of a course on professional secrecy with a gender perspective, aimed at students in the final semesters of law and health sciences programs.[697] Moreover, the Fondo Mujer Libre y Productiva (Free and Productive Women Fund) program, which promotes economic autonomy, benefited 16,015 women during the first half of the year.[698]

301. Moreover, available data on violence against women remains alarming.[699] Between January and September 2025, the National Institute of Legal Medicine and Forensic Sciences recorded 438 alerts for extreme risk of femicide,[700] while the civil society reported 621 femicides (some committed with extreme cruelty)[701] and 320 attempted femicides.[702] During the same period, the National Police received 5,054 calls through the 155-Salvia hotline, 98 percent of which were made by women: 2,282 related to psychological violence, 2,171 to physical violence, and 355 to sexual violence.[703]

302. Meanwhile, violence against women in a situation of greater vulnerability is still critical. Reports of physical and sexual violence against girls and adolescents, particularly those from indigenous communities,[704] threats, extortion, and femicides against trans women and sex workers,[705] disappearances related to human trafficking, especially affecting girls, adolescents, and migrant women,[706] and acts of violence against women human rights defenders, women searching for disappeared persons, and indigenous women leaders, including threats, sexual violence, and murder,[707] persist. In addition, some women recognized as participants in JEP's proceedings are allegedly subjected to threats, extortion, surveillance, mobility restriction, and even sexual violence by armed actors, as retaliation for their participation in judicial proceedings.[708]

303. Moreover, different actions by public officials also constituted violence and/or discrimination against women.[709] In the judicial sphere, discriminatory actions by justice operators, technical shortcomings in the proceedings, and the use of the "parental alienation syndrome" are reported.[710] In this regard, a court found the judiciary responsible for having used disrespectful and discriminatory language against a woman who reported sexual violence.[711] Similarly, within the health system, cases of obstetric violence and persistent practices obstructing access to abortion were reported,[712] such as interference by healthcare personnel, lack of access to relevant information, and delays in carrying out the procedure.[713]

304. With regard to the rights of children and adolescents, complaints were recorded concerning environmental crimes in Barrancabermeja, where pediatricians warned of serious impacts on children's health possibly linked to the landfill operated by Veolia in Patio Bonito, since high levels of mercury and other toxic metals were detected in nearby areas.[714]

305. The rights of LGBTI persons have seen progress following measures ordered by the Constitutional Court to expedite name change procedures for trans persons without requiring notarized documents,[715] to extend breastfeeding-related rights regardless of gender,[716] and to punish acts of discrimination in the education system.[717] Moreover, the opening of a congressional debate on the Comprehensive Trans Bill,[718] Circular No. 075 of 2025, aimed at guaranteeing the labor rights of trans and non-binary persons[719], as well as the trans voting protocol and the issuance of documents with the "non-binary" category, have ensured legislative and public policy advances. In March, the government approved CONPES 4147: the National Policy for the Guarantee of the Rights of the LGBTIQ+ Population.[720]

306. During the first half of 2025, the Ministry of Justice and Law made progress in the development of the LGBTIQ+ public policy for the judiciary, strengthening coordination with various entities. Moreover, the Office of the Inspector General held an inter-institutional roundtable to strengthen the prevention of prejudice-based violence; the Ministry of Equality and Equity launched the Salvia Dignidad program, aimed at eliminating barriers of access to fundamental rights; and the Ministry of Education began implementing Judgment T-529 of 2024 on the inclusion of students with diverse sexual orientation. [721]

307. By contrast, numerous murders and cases of violence against LGBTI and gender-diverse persons were recorded, many of which were carried out with extreme brutality, as noted by the Inter-American Commission in a statement expressing concern over this situation.[722] Between January and July, at least 50 killings were recorded,[723] including the murders of Fernanda Domicó,[724] Nawar Jiménez,[725] Victoria Strauss,[726] and Sara Millerey,[727] who was subjected to extreme violence, among other cases recorded during the year.[728] In the Catatumbo region, LGBTI leaders reported threats of extermination, targeted killings, displacement and confinement attributed to armed groups[729]. In addition, a United Nations expert acknowledged normative progress, while warning of the need to effectively address discrimination and violence based on sexual orientation and gender identity.[730]

308. With regard to the situation of persons in the context of human mobility, the Constitutional Court of Colombia determined that the Migration Service of Colombia violated the rights to personal liberty, due process of law and the principle of non-refoulement of three Cameroonian women who were denied entry into the country, and it ordered measures to ensure adequate standards in migration procedures.[731] In addition, in a case concerning the rights of a Peruvian migrant woman in an irregular situation, who was pregnant and living with HIV, the Constitutional Court of Colombia recalled the State's obligation to ensure pertinent care and enhanced protection for pregnant women, reaffirming constitutional standards of protection.[732]

309. Despite jurisprudential advances, structural challenges persist with regard to the recognition of refugee status. Civil society organizations reported prolonged delays in the adjudication of asylum applications, increases in rejections and a lack of adequate procedural guarantees, including insufficient public information and the limited availability of human, technical and financial resources. By mid-2025, more than 29,500 applications for international protection were pending.[733]

310. As for internally displaced persons, the Commission noted that the situation of internal displacement worsened as a result of clashes between non-state armed groups and criminal structures. The Office of the Ombudsperson reported that, as of August 2025, it had assisted 159,000 people affected by mass and individual displacement.[734] In the Catatumbo region, located in the northeast of the country, the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs (OCHA) reported that at least 56,091 people had been displaced between January and March 2025 to municipalities such as Cúcuta, Ocaña and Tibú.[735] An increase in situations of confinement and restrictions on freedom of movement was also reported due to the escalation of the conflict, which disproportionately affects rural and ethnic communities in highly vulnerable areas. The impacted municipalities include Ábrego, Teorama, Convención, Tibú, La Playa, El Carmen and Hacarí, as well as the Barí Indigenous Reserve.[736] The International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) estimated that 2025 was set to be the worst year of the decade in humanitarian terms, amid the expansion of armed groups and escalating violence.[737]

311. With regard to human trafficking, the State reported that, between January 1 and July 31, 2025, the Criminal Investigation Directorate and the International Criminal Police Organization (INTERPOL)

dismantled one transnational network and six criminal groups involved in human trafficking, and arrested three alleged perpetrators.[738] The LibertApp platform facilitated the rescue of four Colombian women who were victims of sexual exploitation and forced labor.[739] In June, the State delivered training to public officials as part of the National Plan for the Right to Live Free from Gender-Based Violence.[740] In March, the Colombian Senate passed a bill aimed at strengthening anti-human trafficking measures by updating existing regulations, expanding their scope to digital environments, enhancing prevention efforts and amending Article 188A of the Criminal Code to reflect current recruitment methods, including labor- and relationship-based schemes.[741]

312. In terms of persons deprived of liberty, the State is implementing a public policy focused on postrelease support through halfway houses aimed at individuals who have been released or are subject to house arrest or noncustodial alternative sanctions.[742] Colombia has also promoted social reintegration by recognizing productive activities as work experience and enabling sentence reductions through labor, with two days of imprisonment deducted for every three days worked.[743]

313. With respect to noncustodial sanctions, the State implemented measures to promote a "more efficient and effective" justice system, encourage restorative justice practices and strengthen the principle of opportunity as one of the grounds for release.[744] Furthermore, as of August, 176 women had been released following the application of alternative sentences of community service.[745] Nevertheless, the Commission voices its concern over the fact that women eligible for such benefits have been arbitrarily detained by authorities due to outdated judicial information systems.[746] With regard to the prevention of torture, the Constitutional Court upheld the constitutionality of the Optional Protocol to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment.[747]

314. Notwithstanding this progress, detention conditions remain inadequate, marked by high levels of overcrowding, deficient infrastructure, poor hygiene conditions and limited access to adequate food in terms of quality and quantity, as well as to health services, medical treatment and opportunities for social reintegration.[748] As of September 15, 103,996 persons deprived of liberty were held in prison facilities designed to accommodate 81,139 individuals, thus resulting in an overcrowding rate of 28 percent.[749] Moreover, as of July 23, 20,655 people were held in temporary detention facilities with a capacity of 9,684

315. Regarding incidents of violence involving persons in state custody, the Commission condemned the of Francisco Correa, who was facing charges for the murder of Paraguayan prosecutor Marcelo Pecci,[754] and voiced its concern over the violent incident that took place on September 14 at La Modelo Prison, which left one person dead and three others injured.[755] In addition, at least seven detainees died and five were injured following a fire allegedly sparked during a riot at a police station in Funza.[756]

316. In terms of memory, truth and justice, the State reported significant progress in the operation of the JEP. A total of 11,989 individual victims and 405 collective subjects were recorded in the Registry of Accredited Victims. Eighteen orders on the determination of facts and conduct were issued across the 11 macrocases, featuring 267 indictments. In 147 of these orders, full acknowledgments were made. The State also reported that the Chamber for the Definition of Legal Situations issued opinions on 11,003 submissions, that protection measures were granted to 313 individuals and 106 collective subjects, that 574 restorative actions and 4,435 monitoring logs for appearing persons were implemented and that 419 exhumations were carried out. Colombia also reported progress on 328 works, projects or activities with reparative or restorative content (TOAR), of which 110 were under implementation and 218 have already been certified. Finally, the State indicated that it had provided legal representation to 16,905 victims and 6,979 appearing parties, in addition to psychosocial support.[757]

317. Furthermore, the first two restorative sentences in the history of the JEP were issued on September 16 and 18: one in Case No. 001 concerning hostage-taking and severe deprivations of liberty committed by the FARC-EP,[758] and another in the Caribbean Coast subcase of Case No. 003, relating to killings and forced disappearances unlawfully presented as combat casualties.[759] These decisions imposed restorative sanctions of up to eight years, focused on projects related to memory, dignity, community reconstruction, the search for disappeared persons and demining. In parallel, the JEP and the government undertook joint interinstitutional efforts to establish coordination guidelines for the design and subsequent implementation of restorative sanctions imposed on those involved in judicial proceedings before the JEP.[760]

318. The State also reported on the coordinated work between the Ministry of Justice and the Unit for the Search of Persons Reported as Disappeared (UBPD) to advance a diagnostic assessment aimed at formulating the comprehensive public policy on search within the framework of the National Search System. However, the UBPD has faced challenges in its operations in La Escombrera, Medellín.[761] In this regard, the Appeals Section of the JEP ordered the continuation of search operations in the area.[762] In addition, the Victims Unit reported that 25 Comprehensive and Collective Reparations Plans have reached implementation levels equal to or exceeding 50 percent of the agreed commitments and that progress was made in the collective compensation of five subjects of collective reparations, with an investment of 3,401,867,820 Colombian pesos.[763]

319. The State reported progress in truth, reparation, accountability and search mechanisms for disappeared persons in relation to other armed actors. Colombia further noted the introduction of the Total Peace Bill with the aim of providing the State with legal tools to support demobilization, dialogue and justice efforts regarding illegal armed groups.[764] In addition, the Office of the Attorney General submitted a bill to amend the Justice and Peace Law.[765] The State also provided technical assistance to enhance access to transitional justice mechanisms in the territories and undertook actions related to the Public Policy on Historical Reparations for Afro-descendant, Raizal and Palenquera communities.[766]

320. As for the situation of persons with disabilities, the State adopted legislation on the prevention and care of mental disorders and illnesses[767], and updated the national mental health policy.[768] Progress was also achieved in mainstreaming a disability-inclusive approach into the assistance provided to persons in situation of human mobility[769] and into electoral training activities,[770] as well as through the inclusion of a caregivers information module in the Registry for the Identification and Characterization of Persons with Disabilities, in alignment with the National Care System.[771] Furthermore, progress was reported in the comprehensive care provided to signatories with disabilities of the Peace Agreement.[772] The Commission also noted an increase in judicial orders issued by the JEP concerning persons with disabilities, rising from 27 between 2022 and 2024 to 81 in 2025. Likewise, the number of persons with disabilities accredited in the macrocases had reached 1,477 as of June 2025.[773]

321. With regard to challenges, the United Nations Special Rapporteur on the rights of persons with disabilities voiced her concern over the barriers faced in obtaining disability certification; the ineffectiveness of certain departmental and district disability councils; and the reports received from adolescent girls and women with disabilities in relation to forced contraception or sterilization practices that were carried out without their informed consent.[774] In parallel, official data revealed a marked disparity in employment rates between persons with and without disabilities, with rates of 18.5 percent and 60.8 percent, respectively.[775]

322. In relation to the rights of older persons, the government announced the Pilar Solidario (Solidarity Pillar), aimed at benefiting more than 3 million people without contributory pensions through a monthly allowance of 230,000 Colombian pesos (approximately 60 US dollars).[776] However, the Colombian Pension Administration Agency (COLPENSIONES) reported that the necessary funding for its implementation had not yet been secured for the current year.[777] A bill was also introduced to exempt low-income older persons from property tax.[778] The National Care Policy was approved, which included specific provisions for older persons.[779] Finally, a fire was reported at a nursing home in Soledad, Atlántico, leaving two older persons dead and seven injured.[780]

XI. COSTA RICA

- General considerations

323. The Republic of Costa Rica (hereinafter, "Costa Rica") reported progress in measures aimed at strengthening democratic institutionality, human rights, citizen security and access to justice. These initiatives include the establishment of education boards with community representation in public schools, the expansion of health and drinking water services and the adoption of legislation on the rights of women, mental health, older persons and indigenous peoples.

324. As for the challenges, the Commission remains concerned over citizen security and the predominantly punitive approach adopted by the State. The Commission also notes persistent concerns regarding threats to judicial independence arising from budgetary constraints, external pressures reportedly faced by justice operators and statements by high-level authorities aimed at discrediting other branches of government.

325. On September 4, 2025, the State submitted its response to the Commission's request for information to prepare this chapter.[781] Additionally, the Commission received information from the Office of the Ombudsperson on October 23, 2025.[782]

- Specific issues

326. In terms of democratic institutionality, the State reported that the Law on Education Boards was enacted in February 2025, with the purpose of establishing in each public school a multimember body composed of parents, students and representatives of the community or local indigenous education councils. These boards were granted legal status and designed to serve as advisory bodies for school management, resource oversight and administrative transparency.[783]

327. At the hearing titled "Costa Rica: General human rights situation," the Commission was informed of alleged setbacks in the State's commitments to its international obligations and the weakening of democratic institutionality. In particular, civil society organizations reported that the escalation of statements by high-level authorities of the executive branch aimed at discrediting other branches of government and oversight bodies, together with allegations of corruption involving the administration, have eroded public trust in institutions and weakened democratic checks and balances.[784]

328. With regard to human rights institutions, the State highlighted the enactment of several laws concerning healthcare, education and social welfare. These include the declaration of the Costa Rican Science Olympiad as an event of public interest, the reform of the Law on Horizontal Property to ensure access to drinking water, the inauguration of healthcare infrastructure and the reorganization of healthcare services in communities with high population density.[785] The State also underscored the enactment of Law No. 10,725, which ensures immediate psychological care for persons experiencing suicidal ideation or behavior through the 9-1-1 system, and drew attention to the declaration of mental health education as a matter of public interest and the adoption of a school mental health plan.[786]

329. In this context, the Commission was informed of budget cuts in sectors and institutions related to education, healthcare and social security, which have reportedly affected the enjoyment of human rights. In particular, civil society organizations raised concerns over the reductions in funding for public higher education and the National Child Welfare Agency (PANI). The proposed budget allocation for education represents 4.98 percent of the Gross Domestic Product (GDP), significantly below the constitutional requirement of 8 percent. Finally, the Commission was reported on the failure of the National Institute for Women (INAMU) to fulfill its mandate to prevent gender-based violence.[787]

330. As for the cross-cutting issue of citizen security, the Commission notes that significant challenges persist in Costa Rica. In 2023, the country recorded 907 murders for the first time in its history, and 2024 became the second most violent year, with 872 homicides. As of October 31, 2025, the Criminal Investigation Service had recorded 697 murders in the year.[788] In this context, civil society organizations informed the Commission that the rise in violence is linked to the expansion of organized crime and to increasing social inequality.[789] They further expressed concern over the predominantly punitive approach adopted by the State, which translated into measures such as the imposition of longer sentences, the expanded use of pretrial detention and the tightening of juvenile criminal legislation.[790]

331. Costa Rica reported international cooperation efforts aimed at combating drug trafficking and organized crime, by means of training initiatives carried out with agencies such as the United States Drug Enforcement Administration (DEA) and the United States Southern Command, which resulted in the seizure of synthetic drugs and a reduction in illicit trafficking flows to Europe. The State also participated in the 34th session of the United Nations Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice (CCPCJ), where it presented its crime prevention policies.[791]

332. With respect to access to justice and judicial independence, the State reported that new legislation aimed at ensuring the enforcement of constitutional judgments on habeas corpus and writs of amparo with economic consequences had entered into force in May 2025. The law grants jurisdiction to the Court of Administrative Disputes and sets a four-year statute of limitations for enforcement proceedings.[792]

333. During a public hearing held in 2025, the Commission was informed of the weakening of the judiciary as a result of budgetary constraints. Civil society organizations underscored the need to strengthen the judicial career system and to implement objective procedures for the appointment of Supreme Court justices. The organizations further reported that the executive branch has exerted pressure on justice operators and members of the Office of the Public Prosecutor in the context of investigations into alleged acts of corruption involving senior public officials.[793]

334. As to the rights of indigenous peoples, the Constitutional Chamber granted a writ of amparo filed by the Office of the Ombudsperson seeking to ensure the participation of indigenous children and adolescents in the 2024–2036 national policy on children and adolescents.[794] Furthermore, the Office of the Public Defender of the Judiciary reported that judicial proceedings involving indigenous persons increased by 15 percent compared to the previous year, reaching a total of 3,875 cases. Members of the Bribri, Cabécar and Ngäbe peoples accounted for the majority of those involved in the proceedings, and the cases primarily concerned family law and child support matters.[795]

335. Notwithstanding the foregoing, in 2025, the Commission received information indicating that indigenous peoples continue to face significant barriers to the full enjoyment of their rights. Among other issues, conflicts persist due to the lack of legal certainty over the ownership of ancestral lands, as between 38 percent and 97 percent of such lands remain occupied by nonindigenous persons. Moreover, public policies have reportedly been formulated with no participation of indigenous peoples, in violation of applicable national and international standards. According to the information received, the State has failed to take action to recover and restore lands to indigenous communities, which has resulted in increased violence in these territories.[796]

336. With regard to the rights of women, Costa Rica strengthened its legal framework for the protection against gender-based violence. In particular, the State enacted the Law against Vicarious Violence;[797] ratified Convention No. 190 of the International Labor Organization (ILO) on the elimination of violence and harassment in the world of work;[798] amended the Law on the Criminalization of Violence against Women to include the use of corrosive, flammable, toxic or acidic substances as well as attacks against pregnant women as aggravating circumstances; adopted the National Mandatory Protocol for Alert and Expeditious Action in cases of disappearance or failure to locate women;[799] and took steps to advance a bill aimed at safeguarding the right to housing for women victims of violence.[800]

337. The State also launched the Ela mobile application, which provides information and assistance in cases of gender-based violence,[801] and the national violence prevention campaign "Que vos no seas la próxima" (Don't be the next one).[802] Moreover, according to official data, 53 violent deaths of women were recorded between January and August, 27 of which were classified as femicides.[803] In addition, during the April–June quarter alone, the Operational Center for Assistance in Cases of Domestic Violence and Violence against Women (COAVIFMU) reported having handled 5,888 incidents.[804]

338. In terms of sexual and reproductive rights, the State launched a national vaccination campaign against the Human Papillomavirus (HPV) targeting children and adolescents,[805] and provided free mammograms to more than 80 women living in situations of vulnerability or poverty.[806] However, the Commission notes with concern that the new Peace and Coexistence Education Curriculum, which replaced the Comprehensive Sexuality and Affective Education Program, excludes essential content related to sexual health, gender identity and sexual and reproductive rights.[807] Reports of obstetric violence in hospitals throughout the country also continued to be documented.[808]

339. According to civil society organizations, women victims of violence face obstacles, which include revictimization and procedural delays. The organizations also raised concerns over the repeal of the technical standard that had regulated therapeutic abortion since 2019 and drew attention to the adoption of a new regulation that further limits its application.[809]

340. With respect to the rights of children and adolescents, the Commission noted a judgment issued by the Constitutional Chamber of Costa Rica in March 2025, which granted a writ of amparo filed by the Office of the Ombudsperson concerning the exclusion of indigenous children and adolescents from the consultation process on the 2024–2036 national policy on children and adolescents. The chamber ordered the National Council for Children and Adolescents to conduct a consultation process with children and adolescents from the 24 indigenous territories within the next 12 months, with the aim of ensuring the protection of their rights under the policy.[810]

341. The Commission also noted an increase in medical services provided to children and adolescents who were victims of sexual abuse in Costa Rica.[811] According to statistics published in March by the Costa Rican Social Security Fund (CCSS), between 2019 and 2024, outpatient consultations rose from 7,705 to 11,768 cases per year, representing an increase of 52.7 percent, while emergency care cases increased by 35.5 percent, from 989 to 1,340 cases. In addition, during the first three months of 2025, the National Children's Hospital reported 110 cases, 41 of which involved children between 1 and 9 years of age.[812]

342. Regarding LGBTI persons, the Constitutional Chamber of the Supreme Court of Costa Rica ruled in favor of a woman whose request for co-motherhood leave had been denied by the CCSS, thereby recognizing the rights of diverse families.[813] In contrast, in January, the Ministry of Public Education (MEP) terminated both the Comprehensive Sexuality and Affective Education Program and the protocol for addressing school bullying against LGBTI students.[814] In April, the CCSS opposed the Bill on the Recognition of Trans,

343. As for persons in the context of human mobility, the Commission noted that Costa Rica entered into a cooperation agreement, among other purposes, to receive persons expelled from the United States and to provide support for deportations to their countries of origin. Under this agreement, Costa Rica assumed exclusive responsibility for the actions related to migration and law enforcement, including interdictions, access to protection, the provision of adequate and humane temporary accommodation, inadmissibility determinations and the processing of travel documents when required.[817] According to public information, in February, 200 persons of different nationalities arrived in Costa Rica on two flights from the United States, including approximately 50 children.[818]

344. In response to this situation, the General Directorate of Migration and Foreign Nationals (DGME) issued Resolution D.JUR-0057-02-2025-JM on February 18, 2025, authorizing the entry and temporary stay of foreign nationals expelled from the United States to Costa Rica. The resolution specifies that the sole purpose of entry into Costa Rican territory is to allow those expelled to continue their journey to their countries of origin or to third countries.[819] Subsequently, on July 7, the DGME issued Resolution D.JUR-0222-07-2025-JM, granting regular migration status on humanitarian grounds to 25 foreign nationals expelled from the United States who, at that time, were staying at the Temporary Reception Center for Migrants (CATEM sur) located in the southern region of the country.[820]

345. In this regard, according to information received by the Commission, these individuals had been detained at a migrant reception center near the border with Panama. Although state officials reportedly declared that all individuals had expressed their intention to return to their countries of origin, civil society organizations assert that at least five of them had sought recognition of refugee status in Costa Rica.[821]

346. The Office of the Ombudsperson of Costa Rica emphasized that the State has the obligation to assess whether, upon return to their countries of origin, any of these individuals would be subjected to cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment, or whether such deportation would be contrary to the principle of non-refoulement.[822] The Office of the Ombudsperson further noted that, although States may enter into migration agreements, in practice, all necessary conditions of protection and assistance must be in place to ensure that such measures comply with national and international human rights standards.[823] At the same time, the Office of the Ombudsperson reported shortcomings in the assistance provided to these persons, including the lack of adequate reception facilities, insufficient information regarding the procedures to be followed in Costa Rica, the absence of interpreters[824] and a lack of awareness of alternatives for those unable to return.[825]

347. In addition, a reverse flow of persons seeking to reach South America was identified, in light of changes in migration policies adopted by other countries in the region. According to a joint report by the Offices of the Ombudsperson of Costa Rica, Panama and Colombia, between January 31 and July 2025, CATEM Sur had received a total of 1,480 people. The report highlights that the individuals who were interviewed declared that they did not have access to clear and timely information in a language they could understand regarding migration procedures, international protection options and available services. According to the report, shortcomings were also identified in the provision of humanitarian assistance.[826]

348. With regard to persons deprived of liberty, the Commission welcomes the introduction, on May 22, of a bill aimed at establishing a legal framework to promote education, training and employment opportunities for women who are accused or convicted, and for family members under their care.[827] However, the Commission notes with concern that, according to available information, the State plans to begin the construction of a megaprison with an estimated capacity of approximately 5,000 people.[828]

349. This initiative allegedly seeks to address prison overcrowding and the increase in the number of detainees. According to statistics from the National Mechanism for the Prevention of Torture (MNPT), as of March 31, 2025, a total of 17,692 persons were deprived of liberty in Costa Rica, which represents an annual increase of 9.47 percent, thus marking the third consecutive year of rising figures. The reasons for such increase are linked to greater reliance on criminal law and incarceration, particularly in response to organized crime. Furthermore, given that the available capacity is 13,665 people, overcrowding reaches 29.5 percent, the highest rate recorded in the past five years. However, in some cases, this percentage is higher. For instance, at the Institutional Care Centers (CAI) of Liberia, Antonio Bastida de Paz, Jorge Debravo and Limón, overcrowding rates exceed 70 percent.[829]

350. Furthermore, the Commission voices its concern over the shortage of security personnel in detention centers. According to the Office of the Ombudsperson, the staffing deficit increased from 1,754 correctional officers in 2023 to 2,722 in April 2025. This situation limits access to medical, technical and educational services for persons deprived of liberty and negatively impacts staff due to work overload, fatigue and difficulties in taking leave.[830]

351. The Commission also takes note of concerns raised by civil society organizations and relatives of persons deprived of liberty regarding the adoption, on April 22, of Instruction No. DVJ-009-04-2025 by the Vice-Ministry of Justice and the General Directorate of Social Rehabilitation. This directive tightens detention conditions in the so-called "high containment circuits," where persons deemed to "pose a high institutional risk, exhibit heightened dangerousness or engage in persistent violent behavior" are held.[831]

352. In particular, said directive restricts the entry of food, personal belongings and hygiene items; limits visits, including by preventing the entry of children; and reduces the duration of telephone calls. The directive also restricts access by academic staff and educational materials, reportedly leaving more than 100 persons deprived of liberty without access to programs offered by the Remote Learning State University.[832] In this context, detainees allegedly face difficulties in accessing medical care and adequate food. Furthermore, relatives of detained persons informed the Commission that a man died in state custody on September 25, allegedly due to a lack of access to healthcare.[833]

353. With regard to the rights of older persons, the Commission welcomes the adoption of the Law on Strengthening Social Welfare Organizations for Older Persons, which aims to address the intersectional vulnerabilities faced by this population and establishes that older persons in a situation of neglect are subject to state intervention.[834]

354. In 2025, according to data from Costa Rica's National University, there was an increase in the number of cases of abuse and neglect of older persons, which reveals the need to strengthen reporting mechanisms and the oversight of long-term nursing homes.[835] Additionally, the media reported the closure of a home in Miramar due to allegations of abuse and unsanitary conditions.[836]

355. Concerning dignified aging, according to media reports, thousands of older persons live on monthly incomes of less than 82,000 colones (around 163 US dollars) in a context of rising living costs and limited access to basic services.[837] It was also reported that population aging is a structural challenge for the sustainability of the social security system of the country.[838] Moreover, private initiatives were promoted to improve the mobility and autonomy of older persons, such as the incorporation of a specific option on digital transport platforms for them to travel safely.[839]

356. Regarding access to pensions, the State reported it enacted the Law on Revitalizing Assistance for Vulnerable Populations, which broadens the coverage of the Social Development and Family Allowance Fund (FODESAF) to include older persons, among other groups. Finally, it highlighted the reform of the Worker Protection Act, which allows pensioners or active affiliates of the Mandatory Supplementary Pension Scheme to withdraw all their funds in case of serious or terminal illness.[840]

357. With respect to the rights of persons with disabilities, the State issued the School Mental Health Plan and enacted Law No. 10,725, which guarantees immediate psychological care for persons at risk of suicide. It also amended the Law on the Criminalization of Violence against Women to include disability as an aggravating circumstance in such cases. Furthermore, the State passed the Law on Strengthening Social Welfare Organizations for Older Persons, which sets forth the obligation to provide financial support to persons with disabilities in a situation of neglect, and the Law on Revitalizing Assistance for Vulnerable Populations, which includes persons with disabilities as beneficiaries of the FODESAF.[841]

358. However, official data from the National Institute of Statistics and Census on persons with disabilities indicated that 59.4 percent of this population reported having experienced violence, that 55.8 percent are not in the labor force and that only 18.3 percent has completed higher education programs.[842]

359. With regard to human trafficking, the Commission notes that between February and April 2025, training sessions were carried out by the Regional Coalition against Human Trafficking and Illicit Smuggling of Migrants (CORETT)[843] with the aim of strengthening, among other things: i) coordinated strategies for the prevention and detection of victims in Mesoamerica; ii) methods to standardize criteria for data collection and analysis; and iii) the investigation and prosecution of said crimes by means of mock trials with a gender-based and human rights perspective.

XII. DOMINICA

- General considerations

360. As it relates to progress, the IACHR highlights efforts by the State to reduce its judicial backlog and to address incidents of gun violence. Moreover, the Commission welcomes the launch national campaign aimed at eliminating all forms of abuse against children. In addition, the IACHR takes note of the implementation of the agreement on the free movement of persons with specific countries of the Caribbean Community.

361. As it relates to challenges, the Commission notes social unrest relating to electoral reform efforts by the State. Additionally, the IACHR takes note of the persistence of legal provisions that allow corporal punishment against children. The Commission also notes that LGBTQ+ persons faced discrimination and reported a lack of trust in law enforcement in the State.

362. The State did not respond to the request for information for the preparation of this chapter.

- Specific issues

363. Regarding democratic institutionality, the Commission notes ongoing efforts by the State to reform its electoral process. As previously reported by the Commission,[844] in December 2024, the IACHR requested information on the electoral reform process, including issues surrounding voter identification, the independence of the Electoral Commission, campaign financing, and overseas voting practices.[845] In February 2025, as requested by letter from the State, the IACHR sent a follow-up letter providing further clarification.[846]

364. In this regard, in April, after the passage of the electoral reform Bills triggered widespread protests, the IACHR issued a Press Release expressing its concerns over the State's electoral reform process and emphasizing the importance of democratic principles and citizen participation.[847] In addition to highlighting the significance of safeguarding freedom of assembly and expression, the IACHR called for electoral reforms that align with international human rights standards. Moreover, in May, a group of concerned citizens instituted legal proceedings seeking to prevent any elections from taking place in Dominica until the pending electoral reforms have been implemented. The claimants cite procedural flaws in the two previous General Elections in 2019 and 2022, such as voter registration irregularities, bloated voters list and lack of voter identification cards, among other concerns.[848]

365. In relation to human rights institutions, the Commission notes that to date, a National Human Rights Institution (NHRI) has not been established in Dominica. In this scenario, the IACHR notes that in the context of the Fourth Universal Periodic Review (UPR), the State noted that it remained open to discussions on establishing a national human rights institution. However, bearing in mind the cost of establishing such an institution, the State highlighted that the cost of rebuilding after recent climate-related natural disasters had left the country with a debt-to-gross domestic product ratio of 100% and as such, they would require financial support to establish an NHRI.[849]

366. With regards to access to justice, the IACHR highlights the decision of the State to reintroduce "night court" in September. According to the Ministry of National Security, night court is scheduled from 2:00 PM until 9:00 PM and will operate in a manner that allows greater flexibility and provide better access to the Courts. Ultimately, it is hoped that this reintroduction will assist with addressing the backlog of cases faced by the Courts. In this regard, available information indicated that for the period July 1, 2024, to June 20, 2025, a total 2,471 cases were disposed of by the Court however a backlog still persists.[850]

367. Regarding citizen security, according to public information, a total of 14 homicides were reported up to September 21, 2025.[851] This represents a homicide rate of 21.1 per 100,000 inhabitants up to September.[852]

368. Moreover, the IACHR notes the announcement by the State regarding plans to address gun violence, including a limited gun amnesty and the establishment of a special multi-agency Firearms Task Force. Regarding the gun amnesty, the allowed persons to surrender illegal firearms and ammunition without fear of prosecution from July 16 to August 15, 2025.[853] According to publicly available information, four illegal firearms along with a quantity of ammunition were surrendered during the amnesty.[854]

369. According to official information, this Firearms Task Force will identify, apprehend and prosecute persons involved with the trade of illegal firearms.[855] The Task Force includes multi-agency personnel from the Criminal Investigation Department, Special Branch and K9 Unit of the Police Force, as well as the Excise Division of the Coast Guard and the National Joint Intelligence Centre. Further, the State launched a confidential hotline for the reporting of illegal firearms or other suspicious activity and announced a reward of $1,000 for accurate inform leading to the retrieval of illegal firearms or ammunition.[856]

370. With respect to the rights of children, the Commission takes note of the launch, in June 2025, of the national campaign aimed at eliminating all forms of abuse through raising awareness and education. This initiative by the State, in collaboration with the IOM, seeks to create a safer environment for children and adolescents by strengthening protection services; establishing specialized units including a Child Protection Unit within the Social Welfare Division; and developing communication mechanisms and strategic alliances between the government, civil society, international organizations, and the private sector.[857]

371. Furthermore, the Commission takes note of information presented within the framework of the State's Fourth UPR regarding the persistence of legal provisions that allow corporal punishment. In particular, several recommendations were made to the State to repeal section 49 of the Education Act and move towards the explicit prohibition of corporal punishment against children in all settings, in line with international standards.[858]

372. With regard to persons in the context of human mobility, the IACHR notes the progress achieved in the implementation of the agreement on the free movement of persons signed together with Barbados, Belize, and Saint Vincent and the Grenadines within the framework of the Caribbean Community (CARICOM).[859] According to available information, the agreement, which has been in force since October 1, guarantees the right of nationals of the four States to enter, move freely and reside in each other's territories, while ensuring equal access to economic, social and cultural rights in the host State, including the right to work.[860]

373. Regarding the situation of Afro-descendant persons and the fight against racial discrimination, CARICOM noted and welcomed the Second International Decade for People of African Descent (2025–2034) and renewed the regional reparations agenda for slavery and colonialism in cultural and youth forums.[861]

374. Regarding the rights of LGBTI persons, a study on police interactions with LGBTQ+ persons in the Eastern Caribbean found that community members, especially in Dominica, lack trust in law enforcement and instead rely on friends for protection. Respondents reported neglect, discrimination, and dismissal of complaints, including sexual assault cases, with little to no follow-up. They also noted the absence of mechanisms to report police misconduct or initiatives to build trust, concluding that engaging with police is often futile. The study stressed the need for non-discrimination policies within police forces to ensure fair treatment.[862]

375. Concerning the death penalty, the IACHR once more notes that Dominica continues to retain the death penalty, even though no execution has been carried out since 1986. It further notes that, as of May 2023, no one was on death row in the State, and no progress has been made in removing this form of punishment from the law.[863]

XIII. DOMINICAN REPUBLIC

- General considerations

376. With regard to progress, the Commission welcomes the measures adopted by the Dominican Republic to combat corruption within public institutions and takes note of the continuation of actions aimed at reducing the judicial backlog in courts, the implementation of a police reform, and the decrease in homicide rates. At the same time, it highlights the provision of legal, health and psychological services for victims of violence, as well as measures to improve the performance of the justice system in these cases, together with the implementation of a pilot plan on the first "national prison registry."

377. Among the challenges, the Commission is concerned over the adoption of new migration measures that allegedly hinder access to healthcare for migrants, as well as their impact on Dominican people of Haitian descent, and the continued increase in the number of people in human mobility who are being expelled from the country. At the same time, it continues to note limitations in the exercise of the right to nationality of Haitian people and Dominican people of Haitian descent, and the persistence of a context of structural discrimination. In addition, the Commission is concerned about the continued occurrence of pregnancies among girls and adolescents, the maintenance of the absolute prohibition of abortion, acts of violence against human rights defenders, as well as the overcrowding and the poor detention conditions in the country's prisons.

378. On October 3, 2025, the State submitted its response to the Commission's request for information to prepare this chapter.[864]

- Specific issues

379. In the area of democratic institutionality, the State reported on a series of actions aimed at strengthening transparency, accountability and the fight against corruption. Among these, the following stand out: i) the creation, in February, of the Presidential Commission on Transparency and Anti-Corruption, to integrate and coordinate government strategies on prevention, transparency, access to public information, auditing, and the recovery of illicitly obtained assets; ii) the adoption, in March, of Decree No. 166-2025, which establishes measures to strengthen transparency in public administration; iii) the legal formalization of the anti-fraud unit of the Office of the Comptroller General, by means of Decree No. 382-25 of July, to address complaints regarding the use of public resources; and iv) the adoption, in July, of Decree No. 47-25, which created the Public Procurement Law, incorporating a new system of administrative and criminal sanctions, as well as patrimonial liability for public officials and civil servants.[865]

380. Likewise, the State reported on the creation of the Ojo Cívico (Civic eye) digital platform, aimed at facilitating access to public information on public officials, as well as the implementation of training programs in institutions such as the Ministry of Public Administration (MAP) and the National Institute of Public Administration (INAP), aimed at developing technical and ethical competencies and promoting transparency, efficiency and accountability in public service.[866]

381. In the area of citizen security, the State provided details on actions related to the process of modernization of the National Police. It highlighted the incorporation of dialogue protocols among officers, citizens, and authorities, as well as training to update intervention methods and ensure a proportional use of force. It also noted the creation of the Directorate for Human Rights within the National Police, and the designation of a liaison officer responsible for cross-cutting human rights policies between the National Police and the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. Likewise, the State reported that, in August, it submitted the Comprehensive Human Rights Policy of the National Police for review and approval by the Superior Police Council and it detailed a series of training activities on human rights, the use of force and international humanitarian law targeted at members of the security forces.[867]

382. Moreover, it indicated that it continued to strengthen the comprehensive citizen security strategy and the joint task force, which would be reflected in a 17.4 percent reduction in the country's homicide rate, a 5.7 percent decrease in the number of people injured by firearms, and a 15.6 percent decline in overall robberies, among other indicators.[868]

383. Concerning access to justice, the State informed the Commission of the creation of the Ministry of Justice by means of Law No. 80-25, which was enacted on August 7, 2025. This Ministry will serve as the institution responsible for planning, directing, coordinating and implementing, as appropriate, the State's policy to combat crime. It will also cooperate functionally and administratively with the justice system, represent the State and the public administration in judicial and extrajudicial proceedings, and coordinate the national human rights system and the correctional prison system.[869]

384. In addition, the Commission continued to support the country's efforts to reduce the judicial backlog. According to information provided by the State, between January and August 2025, a total of 344,489 cases were received, of which 337,841 were resolved, accounting for 98.1 percent of the cases filed. As of August, 7,973 cases remained pending, reflecting a 65.08 percent decrease compared to the 22,835 cases recorded at the end of 2024. The State further specified that 82 percent of court chambers nationwide were free of backlog.[870] The State also reported on the strengthening of the use of alternative dispute resolution mechanisms, such as mediation and arbitration, through which a total of 22,561 people were assisted.[871]

385. With regard to persons in the context of human mobility, the Commission took note of the implementation of 15 migration measures, for which it requested information from the State.[872] According to official information, these measures focus, inter alia, on strengthening border security with the support of the armed forces and on establishing a protocol to control access to public hospitals for people in an irregular migration situation. This protocol would require staff at hospitals of the National Health Service (SNS) so that they could request identification, proof of employment in the country, and proof of residence. In cases in which the requirements to receive medical care are not met, the person would be treated but expelled immediately after recovery.[873] The adoption of this protocol takes place within a broader context of a series of migration measures, including the announcement by the National Security and Defense Council of the expulsion of up to 10,000 people in an irregular migration situation per week, as previously observed by the Commission in its 2024 Annual Report.[874]

386. In its response to the Commission, the State indicated that migration represents a structural burden on the national health system. With respect to the "procedure for the management of health services for foreign patients," it reported that this procedure does not limit access to medical care but rather organizes interinstitutional coordination between the SNS and the General Directorate of Migration (DGM). It further establishes clearly that no person may be deprived of emergency medical care, including childbirth, obstetric emergencies and perinatal complications. According to the State, the verification of a person's migration status is carried out only after discharge, which does not interfere with the health service or the professional behavior of health personnel.[875]

387. Notwithstanding the foregoing, the Commission notes with concern the persistence of a migration policy marked by racially discriminatory prejudices against Afro-descendant people, particularly Haitian people and Dominican people of Haitian descent. Official data from the DGM indicate that, between January and April 2025, a total of 119,003 people were expelled, representing a 71 percent increase compared to the same period in 2024.[876] These expulsions were reportedly accompanied by public gatherings at which xenophobic speeches were delivered.[877] In particular, 2,188 detentions in health centers were reported during the first month of implementation of the aforementioned protocol.[878]

388. For their part, civil society organizations informed the Commission that this set of measures imposes barriers to access to critical public services for migrant children and pregnant women, who have experienced stigmatization for exercising their rights to health and education.[879] They further indicated that these measures have had an impact both on people in need of international protection who have been prevented from obtaining it,[880] and on Dominican people of Haitian descent who face difficulties in proving their nationality in the country. This situation arises as a consequence of the lack of action to resolve cases of deprivation of nationality resulting from Judgment TC 168-13 of the Constitutional Court and delays in the implementation of Law No. 169-14.[881]

389. Additionally, the Committee of Experts of the Follow-up Mechanism to the Inter-American Convention on the Prevention, Punishment and Eradication of Violence against Women (MESECVI) expressed concern regarding the institutional violence involved in the detention and deportation in hospitals of Afro-descendant women and pregnant and postpartum Haitian migrant women.[882] In a similar vein, the Commission has observed that Haitian migrant women, girls and adolescents continue to face discrimination and violence, in particular sexual,[883] institutional and obstetric violence.[884] According to official figures, between April 21 and May 30, 186 pregnant women and 559 postpartum women were deported.[885] Reports were also received of acts of racial discrimination and violence against Afro-descendant women and Haitian migrant women by police officers during a commemorative event held in the context of International Women's Day,[886] as well as cases of sexual exploitation and human trafficking involving migrant women and girls in tourist areas.[887]

390. In the area of children and adolescents in the context of human mobility, the State informed the Commission that, between January and August 2025, it assisted 13,718 girls, boys and adolescents, of whom 45 percent were accompanied, while 9.9 percent were unaccompanied. Of the total number of unaccompanied children and adolescents assisted, 1,329 were reunified with their families in the Dominican Republic, and 1,520 were returned to Haiti by means of the binational CONANI–Institut du Bien-Être Social et de Recherches (IBESR) mechanism.[888]

391. Regarding statelessness, the Dominican State reported on two actions aimed at advancing the implementation of the National Regularization Plan.[889] In this regard, it indicated that: i) it ordered the exemption from payment of fees for services related to requests for the transcription of civil registry records to apply for the issuance of identity and electoral cards; and ii) it held working meetings with civil society organizations and international bodies to encourage people belonging to Group B under Law No. 169-14[890] to attend immigration centers to apply for identity cards, as well as for the transcription of naturalization. In addition, the Central Electoral Board established procedures for requesting the transcription of naturalization, with the expectation that such requests would be processed in the shortest possible time.[891]

392. Concerning human trafficking, the State highlighted that, in January, February, June and July, the Office of the Specialized Prosecutor against Migrant Smuggling and Human Trafficking (PETT), together with the Office of the Public Prosecutor, carried out search operations and victim rescue actions in operations known as Venus, Begonias and Atlántico. Through these actions, transnational human trafficking networks for purposes of sexual exploitation were dismantled.[892]

393. For its part, the Commission welcomes the approval, in February, of the 2025–2028 National Action Plan against Human Trafficking and Smuggling of Migrants, which establishes, inter alia, objectives and actions in the areas of prevention, protection and prosecution of the crime of human trafficking.[893] Likewise, it takes note of the approval, in May, of the bill amending Law No. 173-03 on the Smuggling of Migrants and Human Trafficking. Among the main reforms it proposes are: i) the imposition of prison sentences of 20 to 25 years on those found guilty; ii) the non-application of the statute of limitations in cases of human trafficking; and iii) a disqualification from holding public office for a period of 10 years, and 20 years in cases of recidivism, for public servants and/or their accomplices.[894]

394. Concerning the situation of Afro-descendants and the fight against racial discrimination, the Commission takes note of initiatives aimed at regional dialogue and coordination. Afro-descendant organizations held the Bicentennial Forum for Afro-descendant Reparations in Santo Domingo, which concluded with the Santo Domingo Declaration in favor of their full political participation and against racism and xenophobia.[895]

395. In the area of rights of women, concerning gender-based violence, the State continued and expanded the provision of comprehensive care services for victims, including legal, health, and psychological services, as well as economic support and protection measures.[896] It also adopted measures to improve the performance of the justice system in cases of violence, such as the establishment of a Special Prosecutor's Office in Sosúa focused on the investigation and prosecution of cases related to pimping, human trafficking and sexual exploitation,[897] and the approval of the protocol for the forensic interviews of victims and witnesses in situations of vulnerability.[898]

396. Moreover, the new Penal Code incorporated the criminalization of femicide, harassment, the non-consensual dissemination of intimate material, and economic and patrimonial violence within the family, which could contribute to the prevention of and protection against such forms of violence.[899] At the same time, it presents shortcomings that result in insufficient protection of women's rights. For example, it maintains the absolute prohibition of abortion, exhibits technical weaknesses in the definition of certain crimes, including sexual offenses, omits the criminalization of other conducts that also constitute violence against women and allows practices such as the corporal punishment of children.[900] Various entities have criticized the new Code and called on the President to veto it prior to its entry into force in 2026.[901]

397. In this context, a high incidence of femicidal, domestic and sexual violence persists. According to official data, as of August 2025, 48 violent deaths of women were recorded, of which 36 were committed by their current or former partners, and eight by state security agents.[902] As of July, 21,390 complaints of domestic violence and 3,854 complaints of sexual offenses had been recorded, including sexual assault (1,178), rape (681), and sexual harassment (510).[903]

398. In terms of sexual and reproductive rights, the State reported progress in the design of a menstrual health policy that includes the distribution of menstrual kits in prioritized public schools,[904] as well as in the design and pilot implementation of a Critical Roadmap for the protection of fundamental rights in cases of early unions and adolescent pregnancy in prioritized territories.[905] In this regard, according to official data, 7,391 pregnancies among girls and adolescents aged 15 to 19 were recorded during the first half of the year, an 11.6 percent reduction compared to the same period of the previous year.[906] However, through the first week of September, 105 maternal deaths were reported.[907]

399. With respect to advances in the rights of LGBTI persons, on November 18, the Constitutional Court declared Articles 210 of the Code of Justice of the National Police and 260 of the Code of Justice of the Armed Forces unconstitutional. These provisions punished police officers and military personnel with up to two years of imprisonment for engaging in sexual relations with people of the same sex. The Court held that such provisions violated the rights to equality, human dignity, privacy and the free development of personality.[908]

400. Regarding the situation of human rights defenders, during a public hearing held in the context of the 193rd regular period of sessions, civil society organizations informed the Commission of state actions aimed at closing the civic space in the country, which would particularly affect those engaged in the defense of the rights of historically excluded populations. They underscored that human rights defense is carried out in a hostile environment, in which civil society organizations and activists have been subjected to smear campaigns, stigmatizing discourse, digital harassment, physical threats, hostile demonstrations in front of their premises, among other actions. For its part, the State acknowledged that respect for freedom of association and citizen participation are pillars of democracy and rejected all the reports on acts of violence and persecution against human rights defenders. It also indicated that it guaranteed the right to peaceful protest and highlighted measures it had implemented to investigate the facts alleged during the hearing.[909]

401. As for persons deprived of liberty, the Commission welcomes the implementation, in June, of the pilot plan for the first "national prison registry," which aims to collect, record and update information on this population, prison infrastructure and system resources.[910]

402. In addition, it values efforts in the area of social reintegration. In particular, in April, the National Office for Support to Prison Reform and the Directorate of the Presidential Social Assistance Plan signed an agreement to facilitate the labor inclusion of incarcerated people in the "semi-liberty" phase within the aforementioned plan's social programs.[911] In September, the prison system signed an agreement with two educational institutions to allow them to select incarcerated people to pursue technical and higher education studies through the granting of scholarships.[912] In July, reforms to the Penal Code that promote social reintegration and establish measures to reduce the use of imprisonment, such as semi-liberty, were approved; however, it is of concern that, in certain cases, penalties are increased to up to 60 years of imprisonment. [913] In addition, the Commission takes note of the information submitted by the State regarding the progressive opening of the "Las Parras" center, with 2,400 places, which will make it possible to reduce overcrowding and improve conditions for persons deprived of liberty therein.[914]

403. Despite these efforts, the Commission reiterates its concern regarding the poor detention conditions in Dominican prisons. According to the National Office of Public Defense (ONDP), with a prison population of 24,725 people, overcrowding reaches 63 percent. In light of this situation, the Commission takes note that, according to official information, the judiciary, the ONDP, and the Office of the Public Prosecutor are working on a project to reduce overpopulation.[915] It is also concerning that people detained at the San Felipe Correction and Rehabilitation Center in Puerto Plata face, in addition to overcrowding, challenges in access to healthcare and poor detention conditions when housed in "reflection cells." In this context, the Commission welcomes the August judgment of the Constitutional Court, which, as a result of a writ of amparo filed by the public defense, ordered immediate measures to guarantee improved detention conditions at said facility.[916] Lastly, it is also a matter of concern that the Office of the Attorney General identified that there were 26 persons

XIV. ECUADOR

- General considerations

404. In 2025, the Republic of Ecuador (hereinafter, "Ecuador") made progress in several fields. For instance, it implemented measures to promote inclusion and accessibility in the elections, including an option for persons with disabilities to vote from home and handing out intercultural materials to indigenous peoples and nations. Moreover, the State consolidated public policies on gender equality, LGBTI rights and care for victims of violence, and it fostered the participatory design of the Organic Law for Persons with Disabilities and the expansion of social programs aimed at Afro-descendant and indigenous populations.

405. Nevertheless, significant challenges persisted in connection with citizen security, democratic institutionality and the situation of persons deprived of liberty. The repeated renewal of the state of emergency and the expansion of the scope of action of the armed forces to encompass internal security tasks triggered a worrying process of militarization. In addition, high levels of criminal violence were recorded, and the Commission noted reports of forced disappearances and cases of repression in the context of social demonstrations, which highlighted social tensions that require effective and intercultural dialogue.

406. On September 4, 2025, the State submitted its response to the Commission's request for information to prepare this chapter.[918]

- Specific issues

407. In relation to democratic institutionality, the National Assembly approved amendments to the Organic Law on Elections and Political Organizations, which were aimed at preventing and punishing violence against women in political contexts and promoting the participation of Ecuadorians living abroad in the country's elections.[919] The 2025 general elections were held in two rounds[920] and included votes cast from home by persons with disabilities, and votes cast by persons deprived of liberty that have not received a final binding judgment.[921] In addition, the election materials were drafted in three indigenous languages: Cha'palaa, Kichwa and Shuar.[922] The Electoral Observation Mission of the Organization of American States highlighted the transparency and accuracy of the official results and the referendum call.[923] On November 16, a popular consultation and referendum were held which, among other things, resulted in the rejection of the initiative to convene a constituent assembly to draft a new constitution.[924]

408. However, civil society organizations expressed concern about violence in the electoral context, especially against political leaders.[925] There were also acts of political violence against women, including attacks, harassment and coercion.[926] In this regard, a group of independent United Nations experts voiced their concern about reports of political, administrative and judicial harassment against the Vice President of Ecuador, María Verónica Abad Rojas, and about the specific and gender-based nature of these attacks.[927]

409. Concerning citizen security, during the first half of 2025, Ecuador recorded 4,619 intentional homicides, which accounts for an increase of nearly 47 percent in comparison with the same period in 2024.[928] In response to this situation, the State declared at least five new states of emergency to address crime and reinforce internal security operations. These measures expanded the scope of action of the armed forces, who took on tasks that were usually assigned to the National Police.[929] The executive and legislative branches insisted on characterizing the context as a non-international armed conflict, an approach incorporated into the Organic Law on National Solidarity, which was declared unconstitutional by the Constitutional Court (CC).[930]

410. In addition, the Commission condemned the disappearance and subsequent murder of child Steven Medina and adolescents Josué Arroyo, Saúl Arboleda and Ismael Arroyo in Guayaquil;[931] these events were followed by a reported 30 additional disappearances of adolescents and men attributable to state forces. In a public hearing, family members and organizations reported to the Commission on extrajudicial executions, [924] The questions included in the referendum and consultation referred to: i) eliminating the prohibition on establishing foreign military bases or foreign facilities for military purposes and on ceding national military bases to foreign armed or security forces, which required partially reforming the Constitution; ii) eliminating the State's obligation to allocate resources from the General National Budget to political organizations, which required partially reforming the Constitution; and iii) reducing the number of National Assembly members by establishing that the lower house must be comprised of 10 members on behalf of the country, 1 member elected by each province and 1 additional provincial member for every 400,000 inhabitants, according to the latest national census. See: CNE, Preguntas, Anexos y Estatutos del Referéndum y Consulta Popular 2025 (Questions, annexes and statutes of the 2025 Referendum and Popular Consultation), 2025.

[925] According to reports from the Citizen Observatory on Political Violence (OCVP) and the Association of Women for Gender Equity and Autonomy (MEGA), with the support of Friedrich-Ebert-Stiftung Ecuador (FES Ecuador), 80 attacks against the integrity and lives of political actors have been recorded, including 1 physical assault, 21 threats, 46 murders, 8 attacks and 4 kidnappings. The total number of documented aggressions accounts for a 158 percent increase compared to the civil society's recorded incidents during the 2023 elections, which amounted to 31 cases. [929] In this regard, the IACHR issued a statement reminding that states of emergency authorizing the armed forces to perform security tasks must be extraordinary. In 2025, the Republic of Ecuador notified five states of emergency to the General Secretariat of the OAS, in compliance with Article 27.3 of the American Convention on Human Rights. The first state of emergency was notified on January 3, 2025, via Note No. 4-2-002/2025; the second on April 15, 2025, via Note No. 4-2-073/2025; the third on September 22, 2025, via Note No. 4-2-228/2025; the fourth on October 9, 2025, via Note No. 4-2-249/2025; and the fifth on November 6, 2025, via Note No. 4-2-287/2025. torture and forced disappearances linked to the militarization of security during the successive states of emergency.[932]

411. Between September 15 and October 22, indigenous and social organizations carried out a national strike in protest against diesel subsidy cutbacks,[933] to which the government responded with a state of emergency and military mobilization.[934] The demonstrations were most intense in Otavalo and Imbabura, where there were alleged cases of excessive use of force and acts of violence that are not encompassed by the right to protest, as analyzed by the Inter-American Commission in a press release calling for dialogue.[935] In this context, Kichwa community member Efraín Fueres was killed on September 28 in Cotacachi[936] and José Alberto Guamán was killed on October 15 in Imbabura; both incidents are under criminal investigation.[937] Organizations recorded at least 473 people injured, mainly in Imbabura; 206 detained, 16 disappeared and 13 facing charges for alleged acts of terror.[938] Still, the government maintained its refusal to engage in dialogue with indigenous organizations.[939]

412. With regard to access to justice and judicial independence, training was provided to strengthen the investigation of femicides, legal pluralism and restorative juvenile justice.[940] The Organic Law on Public Integrity was passed, thus empowering the Council of the Judiciary to declare a "state of emergency" within the judiciary, which has reportedly allowed for the establishment of a special and expedited regime for admissions into the justice system and early evaluations of judges and prosecutors.[941] This law was declared unconstitutional by the Constitutional Court due to procedural flaws in its adoption.[942]

413. Furthermore, the independence of the Constitutional Court was threatened following its rulings on the unconstitutional nature of certain laws, which were of priority for the government. In consequence, high-ranking officials described the Court as an "enemy of the people" and accused its members of siding with organized crime.[943] The Inter-American Commission warned that these actions constituted a threat to judicial independence and might jeopardize the safety of the members of the Court and their personnel.[944]

414. In addition, organized crime threatened judicial independence by means of acts of violence against judicial officials and prosecutors. The Commission condemned the murder of judge Marcos Mendoza, perpetrated on October 16 in Manabí,[945] which occurred in addition to nine other attacks against justice officials —as reported by the civil society—, such as the murder of judge María Belén Cherrés, who died as a result of an armed assault by hit men in La Libertad.[946]

415. Regarding human rights defenders, the State reported on having drafted a protocol on the protection of human rights defenders who take part in criminal proceedings as victims or witnesses, in which gender-, ethnic-cultural and collective-based approaches were incorporated.[947]

416. However, civil society and indigenous organizations stated that they face a hostile landscape, which is characterized by threats, attacks and stigmatization campaigns against human rights defenders. The Commission received reports of harassment on social media, intimidating phone calls and texts, and acts of criminalization linked to the causes these defenders advocate for.[948] On August 26, the State passed the Organic Law on Social Transparency, presented as an urgent measure to address the economic crisis, which expands the State's authority to control civil society organizations.[949] This law imposes financial obligations; allows for sanctions such as suspension or closure under ambiguous grounds, like "irregularities" or disrupting public order; and allows the State to issue administrative precautionary measures to freeze funds in the event of suspicious transactions.[950] These measures are issued without prior legal assessment, given that a judicial review takes place after the funds have been frozen.[951]

417. By enforcing this law, the Financial and Economic Analysis Unit provisionally froze the bank accounts of at least 21 social organizations and human rights defenders for alleged suspicious transactions;[952] in this regard, high-ranking executive branch authorities stated that the frozen funds were allegedly intended to destabilize the government in the context of the national strike.[953] Civil society organizations and human rights defenders reported to the Inter-American Commission that said bank accounts were frozen suddenly, without prior notification, and in some cases, without allowing the holders to access their case files. According to these reports, this has had an impact on these groups' work and has had a deterrent effect on the defense of human rights.[954] Additionally, criminal investigations were reportedly opened against more than 50 indigenous, peasant and environmental leaders.[955]

418. With respect to the rights of indigenous peoples, 2025 was a year marked by growing tensions between the State and indigenous peoples amidst social protests against diesel subsidy cutbacks and the increase in the cost of living.[956] In addition, there were reports of state measures that allegedly affected collective rights, such as the passing of the Organic Law for the Strengthening of Protected Areas[957] without prior consultation, which will reportedly lead to the militarization of indigenous territories and might result in the violation of the rights to ownership, possession and self-determination.[958]

419. Concerning the situation of Afro-descendants and the fight against racial discrimination, the State sent an apology to former Afro-descendant workers involved in the Furukawa case and announced reparation measures.[959] It also gave grants to 12 indigenous, Afro-Ecuadorian and Montuvio organizations for community production projects.[960] The Office of the Attorney General trained 4,203 agents in the application of ethnic-racial legal instruments and assisted 30,000 Afro-descendant women victims of violence.[961] Moreover, Afro-descendant youth in Esmeraldas met to discuss discrimination, access to higher education and dignified jobs, and commended the existence of 36 schools teaching ethnic studies in the country.[962]

420. In turn, climate and natural disasters in Esmeraldas disproportionately impacted coastal communities mainly made up of Afro-descendants. Floods, landslides and an earthquake resulted in damage to roads, houses and crops and caused power outages in neighboring cantons, among other consequences.[963] According to official information released by the press, the government reported a rupture in the Trans-Ecuadorian Pipeline System (SOTE) in Quinindé, which resulted in the spillage of thousands of barrels of crude oil, thus triggering containment, water distribution and medical assistance measures, and a halt in operations for a few days.[964]

421. Regarding the human rights of women, the State adopted the General Regulations to apply the Organic Law on Support and Transformative and Comprehensive Reparation for relatives of victims of femicide and other gender-based violent deaths, in which all forms of reparation are listed, including a financial fund for the victims' families.[965] The expansion of the scope of the Centros Violeta (Purple Centers) also continued,[966] which provided a total of 32,127 services to women, girls and adolescents who were victims of gender-based violence in the period ranging from January to July 2025.[967] In terms of gender equality, the Labor Code was amended to recognize and regulate paid home-based work,[968] and the Organic Law to Promote the Economy of Women Entrepreneurs was passed.[969]

422. Notwithstanding the foregoing, the Ministry of the Interior absorbed the Ministry of Women and Human Rights (MMDH), which resulted in the loss of the governing body for public policies on the rights of women and diverse people.[970] This occurred in a context in which, according to official figures, 538 women were killed between January and September 2025, 43 of whom were classified as victims of femicide, mostly perpetrated by the victims' partners or ex-partners.[971] In addition, 12,422 crimes related to sexual violence were recorded —most of them against girls and adolescents—, of which 5,897 were cases of sexual abuse, 5,410 were cases of rape and 1,115 were cases of sexual harassment.[972] Additionally, during the first half of the year, there were 78 recorded victims of human trafficking for sexual exploitation, most of them women and girls.[973]

423. Moreover, the Court of Pichincha rejected the appeal filed in the case of the femicide of María Belén Bernal; it upheld the conviction of the perpetrator and declared the second suspect innocent.[974] The National Assembly also rejected the report drafted by the special parliamentary committee created exclusively to determine the State's responsibility for the death of second lieutenant Aidita Ati —which occurred inside a military barracks in 2024—. Said report recommended initiating legal proceedings against public officials that had been possibly involved in her death.[975]

424. In relation to sexual and reproductive rights, the Constitutional Court issued a judgment acknowledging the obstetric violence suffered by an adolescent in a situation of human mobility and reaffirmed the State's duty to guarantee access to dignified, safe and respectful healthcare.[976] Furthermore, according to information submitted by the civil society, obstacles to access the voluntary termination of pregnancy persist, even in cases of rape.[977] In this regard, the United Nations Human Rights Committee determined that the State was responsible for denying an abortion to a girl who had suffered sexual violence.[978]

425. With regard to the rights of LGBTI persons, the MMDH reported progress in the implementation of the LGBTI+ Diversity Action Plan (PAD 2022–2025). Sex and gender variables were included in the work of 24 state-run entities and the Ministerial Agreement MMDH-2024-0001-A —which regulates information management with a focus on diversity— was approved. In addition, an inter-institutional agreement was signed between the MMDH and the Institute of Statistics and Census to develop the National Survey on LGBTI+ Persons' Living Conditions. Furthermore, a technical working group on LGBTI+ comprehensive health was created, inclusive care protocols were updated and technical contributions were introduced for the prevention of violence and the promotion of good health practices. Progress was also made in validating the protocol on supporting children and adolescents in the process of affirmation of their gender identity, in compliance with Judgment No. 95-18-EP/24. The State also reported the launch of the initiative "Public Institution Free of Violence and Discrimination Against LGBTI+ Persons".[979]

426. The Office of the Attorney General carried out processes to build up institutional capacity by offering training on gender-based violence and criminal policy on access to justice for LGBTI+ persons, which was targeted at prosecutors and technical teams. The team specializing in gender provided support and followed up on 744 cases of gender-based violence between May 2024 and June 2025. The State also promoted a criminal policy on access to justice for LGBTIQ+ persons to address hate crimes and discrimination, prioritizing protection measures and equal care for victims. Sex, gender and sexual orientation variables were included in online complaint forms, and this information was in turn added to the Unified Registry of Violence (RUV), a tool that centralizes data from across the country to improve the prevention of and response to gender-based violence.[980] The Constitutional Court made progress in recognizing the rights of transgender children by ordering the Ministry of Education to devise support protocols[981] and by reviewing the case of Amada, a transgender girl whose name and sex registration was authorized but then reversed by the Civil Registry Office.[982]

427. Nonetheless, the judgment in favor of the transgender girl prompted demonstrations by around 40 groups in rejection of what they consider to be the "imposition of gender ideology."[983] The executive branch also signed an agreement with religious leaders committing to repel this alleged ideology from classrooms.[984] In August, the mayor of Pujilí, José Arroyo, changed his gender on his identity card without changing his name, sparking controversy over the possible misuse of legislation that enables transgender people to change their gender in legal documents.[985]

428. Regarding the rights of persons with disabilities, Ecuador made progress with the formulation of a new Organic Law for Persons with Disabilities, which was shaped by many contributions from citizens.[986] Moreover, technical regulations for the provision of specialized services in comprehensive day care centers, inclusive reception centers and shelters for persons with disabilities and their families, by means of public and private assistance units, were updated.[987] The State also implemented a new model of Independent Living Centers for persons with disabilities to live an autonomous and self-determined life, which is currently in a pilot stage. Finally, the Caregivers' Committees were strengthened; reportedly, there are over 1,400 active committees made up of more than 45,000 members nationwide.[988]

429. However, the Commission received complaints regarding the alleged arbitrary detention of a person with an intellectual disability in the context of the security measures adopted by the government on September 26 in San Rafael de Otavalo; reports also indicate that this person has been missing since then.[989]
