Subjects

In this document, the following questions were taken into consideration:

- How do Tibetans travel to Nepal and India?
- What is the legal status of Tibetans living in India?
- What are the living conditions of Tibetans in India?

Executive Summary / Main Findings

The purpose of this report is to examine Tibetan communities in exile in India. This report provides an analysis and evaluation of the current political, educational, health and economic situation of these communities, as well as an examination of their legal status in India.

The first chapter describes the journey of Tibetans from Nepal to India. The second chapter describes the political, educational, health and economic situation of Tibetans in India. The third chapter reviews the different travel documents delivered by Indian authorities to Tibetans for trips abroad.

The major findings are as follows: Firstly, the vast majority of Tibetans cross the border from China to Nepal in winter with the help of smugglers. Secondly, most Tibetans in India live in settlements and are better off than other refugees in India. The Central Tibetan Administration (hereafter CTA) provides them with a wide variety of facilities such as schools and hospitals. Thirdly, the majority of Tibetans living in India possess a Registration Certificate (hereafter RC) and thus can acquire documents issued by the Indian government that allow them to travel abroad. Fourthly, interlocutors met during a fact-finding mission (hereafter FFM) in March 2012 agreed that Tibetan exiles in India are not currently at risk of refoulement to China.

1. Sources and limitations

This report draws on carefully selected sources such as United Nations (UN) documents, academic reports, press articles, official governmental websites, and the CTA website, as well as reports drafted by non-governmental organisations (hereafter NGOs). In March 2012, a joint fact-finding mission (hereafter FFM) was carried out in northern India and Nepal by the Belgian Office of the Commissioner General for Refugees and Stateless Persons (CGRS) and the Swiss Federal Office for Migration (FOM). The information gathered during this mission was then verified, updated and complemented with new information collected for the writing of this report. This report does not purport to be an exhaustive summary of the vast number of relevant documents on the situation of Tibetans in exile in India.

Five main restrictions should be considered when reading this report. First, because of the political sensitivity of the issue, acquisition of publicly available, valid sources on the situation of Tibetans in China and on the background of their movement towards Nepal is challenging. Second, it is possible for Tibetans to cross the border between China and India directly. However, that route has not been studied in this report. Third, obtaining valid information on the number of Tibetans who have acquired or wish to acquire Indian citizenship is difficult because this is still a taboo subject among Tibetans in exile. Fourth, a detailed overview of gender topics is not included in this report, as issues such as domestic violence are not covered in depth by any source. Fifth, because most Tibetans seeking asylum in Switzerland are Buddhists, this report covers only their situation and does not address e.g. the situation of Tibetan Muslim communities in India.

2. The trip from Nepal and to India

2.1. The Reception Centre in Kathmandu

In the “2013 UNHCR Country Operations Profile”, the Office of the UN High Commissioner for Refugees (hereafter UNHCR) stated that approximately 800 Tibetans transit through Nepal to India annually.¹

Tibetans transiting through Nepal are hosted at the Tibetan Reception Centre situated on the outskirts of Kathmandu (shown in Figure 2 below). The centre comprises three dormitories. The first one welcomes males, with no distinction between ordinary Tibetans and former detainees. The second dormitory shelters women. The third is reserved for monks.²

The Lutheran World Federation Nepal (LWF Nepal)³ is responsible for managing the day-to-day operation of the centre in Kathmandu (shelter, food, medical treatment, etc.). The federation works in close cooperation with the UNHCR.⁴

2.2.1. Screening process

Since 2009, upon arrival at the Reception Centre in Kathmandu, all newcomers are screened to verify that they are Tibetans or people from the Himalayan Region (Nepal, Bhutan and India). Children and parents are interviewed separately. Since 2009, the interviewer has rejected 300 people. During the screening, the interviewer checks identity documents (border pass, driving licence, school records, etc.), personal belongings (knives, SIM cards), dialects, spontaneity of answers (no rigid answers that may have been memorised), geographical knowledge, physiognomy, etc.⁵

Verified Tibetans receive a yellow form that they can take to the centre’s “registration office”, where their data are entered into a database, which was created in 1998; their data are shared with the Tibetan Refugee Reception Centre (hereafter TRRC) in Dharamsala / India and with the UNHCR. There are no records of arrivals at the centre before 1998.⁶

“With assistance from UNHCR, LWF Nepal provided care and maintenance assistance to a total of 739 Tibetan New Arrivals transiting to India through Nepal in 2011. This year, LWF Nepal also carried out a Needs Assessment of the Tibetan New Arrivals, who on their transit reside in Kathmandu Reception Centre (KRC). In addition, a KRC Management Guideline was also introduced to systematize and standardize the management of KRC.”

2.2.2. Medical treatment

Once they are registered, newcomers undergo a medical check-up and receive a medical booklet that contains information concerning immunisations and personal health issues. During their stay at the centre, newcomers have free access to Tibetan,⁸ as well as Western, medical treatments at the centre's clinic, where two nurses work full-time. Moreover, a doctor visits the clinic once a week.

At the centre's clinic, staff members treat mainly gastric diseases, mosquito bites and frostbite. The nurses also assist Tibetans who must be admitted to hospital in Nepal but cannot speak Nepali. The centre also contains an art room for children and young adults, where they can draw and paint. This activity is part of trauma therapy, which includes counselling. This trauma therapy is intended for former detainees or children who fled China without their parents, among others.⁹

2.2. Getting a Special Entry Permit from the Indian Embassy

Until 2003, no document was needed in order to cross the border between Nepal and India. Since then, however, newcomers have been required to obtain a "Special Entry Permit" (hereafter SEP) from the Indian Embassy¹⁰ in Kathmandu before leaving Nepal for India.¹¹ Before issuing an SEP, the Indian Embassy interviews the individual to assess his/her origin. It is extremely rare for someone who has been cleared by the “screening office” in the Reception Centre to not receive an SEP.¹²

There are three different categories of SEPs.¹³ First, the permit can be issued for educational purposes. This category of SEP was created to allow Tibetans to carry out their studies in India. “Education SEPs” are valid only until completion of the studies. “Tibetans entering India, on SEP, for the purpose of education are issued Registration Certificates for the duration of the course or one year, whichever is earlier.”¹⁴ Every year when Tibetans renew their RC, they need to present a letter from the education centre stating that they are carrying on their studies. According to the Indian Bureau of Immigration, Tibetans studying in India can reapply to the appropriate Foreigner Registration Regional Office/Foreigner Registration Office (FRRO/FRO) to extend their stay on a yearly basis. They must provide not only proof of registration and residence, but also a “bona-fide certificate from the recognised/approved educational institution in India”.¹⁵ There is no limit to the number of yearly RC renewals issued on the basis of an educational SEP.¹⁶ The majority of newcomers fall within this category.¹⁷

Second, an SEP can be issued for pilgrimage. “Pilgrimage SEPs” are valid for a period of three months, with a possible extension to six months. They allow Tibetans to perform religious pilgrimages. Once the pilgrimage is finished, however, travellers have to go back to China.¹⁸

The third SEP category is other/refugee. This type of SEP allows Tibetans to remain in India for a long-term stay.¹⁹

2.3. From Kathmandu to New Delhi

Once a group of approximately 30 to 40 people is ready to go to India, the Reception Centre in Kathmandu hires a bus to transport them from Kathmandu to New Delhi. Among the group members, an individual is designated as the lead. This person carries the documents for the entire group (a list of individuals allowed to travel in the bus, medical booklets, SEPs, etc.).²⁰

The identity of every member of the group is checked by UNHCR staff before they are allowed to board the bus. The group is also escorted to the Indian-Nepali border by a member of the Nepalese Department of Immigration. At the border, identifications are checked again by Indian border authorities.²¹

The TRRC is located in North Delhi, next to Majnu ka Tilla settlement²² on the right bank of the River Yamuna. Usually, the bus arrives in New Delhi in the morning, and the New Arrivals leave for Dharamsala the same evening.²³

Once the group arrives in New Delhi, the documents carried by the “lead” are given to the director of New Delhi’s TRRC. He then sends all the documents to Dharamsala’s TRRC. He

2.5.1. Facilities of the new Refugee Reception Centre

Until February 2011, the TRRC was located in Mcleod Ganj in the suburbs of Dharamsala. On 24 February 2011, a new centre, funded by the United States of America, was inaugurated by the American ambassador to India at that time, Timothy J. Roemer. The new centre is situated in lower Dharamsala, approximately 20 minutes by car from Mcleod Ganj.²⁵

The new centre can accommodate 500 people (300 males and 200 females). Each female dormitory can accommodate 14 women, and each male dormitory, 20 men. The centre also has two staff quarters for its 26 staff members. Former detainees have a separate dormitory, with only three accommodated per room. In general, more males than females come here; only rarely does the centre welcome families. There are call centres in the TRRC, as well as shops that sell snacks, batteries, etc.²⁶

The centre also houses a free medical clinic with two health-care workers available every day. In case of emergency, the Tibetan Delek Hospital²⁷ is approximately 15 minutes away. If newcomers require special care, they can be sent to the main hospital in Dharamsala or, if necessary, to New Delhi.²⁸

2.5.2. In-processing

When the newcomers arrive in Dharamsala, the director of the TRRC welcomes them personally at the bus stop. The documents carried by the group lead are given to the centre's director. The TRRC in Dharamsala then makes a list of all New Arrivals and sends it to the Reception Centre in Kathmandu and to the UNHCR to confirm that all the people who left Nepal have arrived.²⁹

Likewise, when the people leave the TRRC in Dharamsala, their departure, as well as their destination (school, monastery or settlement), is communicated to the Reception Centre and to the UNHCR office in Nepal. When the newcomers arrive at their destination, authorities at the school, monastery or settlement inform the centre in Dharamsala, which then transfers the information to the TRRC and the UNHCR office in Nepal.³⁰

Until February 2011, the TRRC in Dharamsala kept copies of all SEPs. The New Arrivals took their SEPs with them to the school, monastery or settlement, where they were needed in order to obtain their RCs.³¹ Since February 2011, however, the Indian police have been coming to the TRRC in Dharamsala to issue the RCs to the newcomers. It takes between 20 and 25 days to get a certificate. The police also apply the departure stamp directly here. The SEPs issued by the Indian Embassy in Kathmandu are kept by the TRRC in Dharamsala. When a newcomer leaves, he/she takes only his/her RC.³²

Once the New Arrivals have acquired their RC and have seen the Dalai Lama, they leave the TRRC for their destination of choice, such as a school (possible for newcomers up to 30 years of age), a settlement, a monastery or an old people's home.³³

3. The Tibetan community in India

According to a demographic survey of Tibetans living in exile conducted by the CTA Planning Commission in 2009, approximately 128,014 Tibetans lived outside Tibet, among whom 94,203 lived in India.³⁴ Nevertheless, unconfirmed sources put the number of Tibetans in India as high as 300,000.³⁵

3.1. General background – Short description

The settlement process of the Tibetan community can be depicted as three waves.³⁶ The first wave began when the 14th Dalai Lama fled Lhasa in the direction of India in the spring of 1959, when the Chinese People's Liberation Army (PLA) crushed an uprising of Tibetans against the Chinese communist authorities.³⁷ The Government of India (hereafter GOI) provided settlement areas, which were spread all over the country.³⁸ Thereafter, the second wave was characterised by people leaving the country during the 1980s and 1990s (i.e. martial law was proclaimed in the Tibet Autonomous Region in 1988). A third wave of Tibetans comprises today's "Tibetan New Arrivals".³⁹

The general living conditions of Tibetans in India can be divided into three categories. First, some Tibetans live in "refugee settlements"⁴⁰ provided by the GOI and administered by the CTA.⁴¹ Second, other Tibetans live among local communities in so-called "scattered communities".⁴² Third, some Tibetans are living outside these communities (see the list of 38 "settlements" in Annex B).

³⁸ Discussions in the political sphere are ongoing, and a variety of government interventions have therefore been undertaken in the past. Till today the GOI is supporting the Tibetans. The Ministry of Home Affairs had in its Budget 2011–2012 a position that was intended to cover expenditures on refugees from Tibet as well as a position that was to "to provide rehabilitation assistance to Tibetan Refugees" (GOI, 2012 and GOI, 2005). ⁴² According to the Human Rights Law Network (2007), the term scattered communities can be defined as follows: "The scattered communities consist of smaller groups of Tibetans outside of the official settlements who were not willing, or not able, due to limited resources, to be accommodated in the settlements." 3.2. The Central Tibetan Administration in India

The CTA was set up in 1959 by the 14th Dalai Lama and his entourage in a move to rehabilitate the refugee community in the subcontinent as quickly as possible. In 1960, the CTA based its headquarters in Dharamsala, in the foothills of the Himalayas (Himachal Pradesh, India). Since then, it has attended to the welfare of exiles in their respective host countries and advocated their cause to the international community.⁴⁴

The Democratic Socialist Republic of Sri Lanka appears on this map published by the Central Tibetan Relief Committee (CTRC) in 2002 despite the fact that there are no Tibetan settlements in this State.

In 1991, the CTA adopted a charter⁴⁵ that contains general rights for Tibetans, such as the right of equality before the law and freedom of religion.⁴⁶ Furthermore, the charter establishes separation of power between the three pillars of the judiciary, the legislature and the executive.⁴⁷

The CTA has His Holiness the Dalai Lama as its spiritual head. Below the Dalai Lama, one finds the three-pillar structure mentioned in the charter, which includes the Supreme Justice Commission, the Cabinet and the Tibetan Parliament in Exile (TPiE), as shown in green in Figure 5 below.⁴⁸

His Holiness the Dalai Lama declares that he has three commitments in life. First, he promotes human values such as tolerance and compassion. Second, he promotes religious harmony and respect for all of the world's major religious traditions. Last, the Dalai Lama is "a free spokesperson of the Tibetans in their struggle for justice".⁵⁰ The Dalai Lama "will carry on with the first two commitments till his last breath".⁵¹ However, on 29 May 2011, the Dalai Lama delegated all his administrative and political authority to the elected leaders of the CTA.⁵² Ever since, he has remained the spiritual leader.

The judiciary⁵³ is composed of three different levels: the Supreme Justice Commission, the Tibetan Circuit Justice Commission and the Tibetan Local Justice Commission.⁵⁴ *“Whenever an issue of contention arises in the course of the Tibetan executive’s implementation of any rules and regulations, besides public and individual civil disputes among the Tibetan community in exile, the Tibetan judiciary (Tibetan Supreme Justice Commission and its subordinate Justice Commission) interprets or makes decisions thereof; thus protecting the rule of law by guaranteeing justice to all and making the institution of Tibetan democracy vibrant and meaningful.”*⁵⁵

The legislature, which is the highest organ in the CTA, lies within the TPiE, with members elected every five years. There are 44 seats in the parliament, *“ten members each from U-Tsang, Do-tod and Do-med, the three traditional provinces of Tibet, while the four schools of Tibetan Buddhism and the traditional Bon faith elect two members each. Four members are elected by Tibetans in the west: two from Europe, one from North America and one from Canada. [...] When the Parliament is not in session, there is a standing committee of eleven members: two members from each province, one member from each religious denomination.”*⁵⁶ On a lower level, one can find local parliaments in 38 Tibetan communities.⁵⁷

The executive is represented by the Kashag (Cabinet), which is responsible for the execution of the operational and administrative tasks of the CTA. It is composed of seven members who are led by a Sikyong, or political leader, who is directly elected by the community. The Sikyong can nominate seven Kalons, who need to be approved by the parliament. The term in office is five years.⁵⁸ The Kalons are in charge of the following seven departments: Religion and Culture,⁵⁹ Home,⁶⁰ Finance,⁶¹ Education,⁶² Security,⁶³ Information and International Relations,⁶⁴ and Health.⁶⁵ Under the leadership of the Department of Information and International Relations are a number of “foreign missions” or “Tibet Offices”, which are located in New Delhi, Kathmandu, New York, Geneva, Tokyo, London, Canberra, Brussels, Moscow, Pretoria and

Additionally, the Tibetan community in India has created a variety of NGOs such as the Tibetan Youth Congress (TYC),⁶⁷ the Tibetan Women's Association⁶⁸ (TWA),⁶⁹ Gu Chu Sum⁷⁰ and Students for a Free Tibet.^{71,72}

The three official pillars mentioned previously are financed by voluntary contributions that were established on 1 August 1972. According to the CTA, the voluntary contributions, which are made by Tibetans throughout the region, reinforce the legitimacy of the administration as the official government in exile and serve to renounce China's incursion into Tibet.⁷³

3.3. The legal status of Tibetans in India

3.3.1. International and National Legislation

India is not a state party⁸⁰ to the United Nations Convention relating to the Status of Refugees⁸¹ (1951) or to its Protocol⁸² (1967), which define the status of refugees under international law and outline certain obligations for host states.⁸³

Indian policy with regard to “refugees” is implemented in the framework of the following national legislation: Foreigners Act⁸⁴ (1946) and Foreigners Order⁸⁵ (1948). Moreover, the Indian Citizenship Amendment Act⁸⁶ (2003) “defines all non-citizens who entered without visas as illegal migrants, with no exception for refugees or asylum seekers”.⁸⁷ Despite the absence of a specific legal framework, India’s approach towards Tibetan refugees has been very generous.

Even before the escape of the Dalai Lama, India adopted specific legislation with regard to Tibetans, such as the 1950 order regulating the entry of Tibetan nationals into the country.⁸⁸ According to this order, “Any foreigner of Tibetan nationality, who enters into India hereafter shall -

- (a) at the time of his entry into India obtain from officer-in-charge of the Police post at the Indo-Tibetan frontier, a permit in the [form] specified in the annexed Schedule;
- (b) comply with such instructions as may be prescribed in the said permit; and
- (c) get himself registered as a foreigner and obtain a certificate of registration.”⁸⁹

3.3.2. Registration Certificate (RC)

Current regulations can be found on the Indian Bureau of Immigration website.⁹⁰ The information provided on this website was verified with the relevant Indian authorities and with CTA authorities during the FFM carried out in March 2012.⁹¹ All Tibetans living in India are required to possess an RC,⁹² which allows them to find a job and rental housing, as well as conduct business at local banks and obtain a driving licence and other documentation.⁹³ Additional information can be found in Annex A.

All Tibetans 16 years of age or older living in India are required to possess an RC. This applies also to the monks and nuns living in monasteries. Children under 16 years of age are registered on their parents' RC. Everyone except the sick, the disabled and children has to present himself/herself personally to the branch of the FRRO in his/her district, which in some cases might be the police station.⁹⁴

Extension

In April 2012, the Indian government modified the regulations regarding the extension of RCs. Tibetans born in India and Tibetans born outside India but who have stayed in India for at least 20 years are permitted to renew their RCs every five years. Tibetans who were not born in India or have not lived there for the required period of 20 years have to continue renewing their RC every year or six months, depending on the place of issuance.⁹⁵

History

Not all Tibetans who entered India in the 20th century received an RC. Throughout the 20th century, local FRRO branches reportedly did not have any concrete, detailed nationwide instructions for the issuance of RCs to Tibetans. Hence, the procedures and prerequisites to obtain an RC may have differed from one district to the next.⁹⁶

The Tibetan interlocutors we interviewed during our FFM in March 2012 were not aware of any problems encountered by Tibetans born in India when applying for an RC. As a consequence, it is possible that many arrivals in the 1980s and 1990s falsely claimed to be born in India in order to obtain an RC.⁹⁷

From 2000 onward

In the first decade of the 21st century, the GOI and the CTA jointly organised a number of regularisation drives for Tibetans who had not obtained an RC (or failed to renew their old RCs) during the 1980s and 1990s. Awareness campaigns were organised, and information published in local newspapers explaining to undocumented Tibetans their obligations concerning registration. As a result of this campaign, 3,000 Tibetans who arrived before 2003 were issued an RC, and "only a few" Tibetans have been left without one.⁹⁸

Since the introduction of the SEP in 2003 and the awareness campaign, Indian authorities have become tougher regarding the residence situation of Tibetans. Whoever fails to renew his or her RC in due time has to reckon with official warnings and fines.⁹⁹

The CTA actively provides assistance to Tibetans who are experiencing difficulties in obtaining or renewing their RC. The office issues recommendation letters and provides for practical assistance.¹⁰⁰ The CTA Department of Security also intervenes in all cases when a Tibetan has problems with the renewal or issuance of his/her RC.¹⁰¹

In New Delhi, an arrangement must be made to set a date online for the issuance/renewal of an RC. Those who are unable to navigate the internet can ask for assistance at the Welfare Office in Majnu ka Tilla.¹⁰² Tibetans living in Kangra District have to register or renew the RC at the police station in Dharamsala. Since February 2011, the police have issued new RCs to Tibetan New Arrivals directly at the TRRC in Dharamsala.¹⁰³

Reliable information on Tibetans who are living in India without being registered by the CTA was not available/could not be found. However, competent Indian authorities whom we met in New Delhi in March 2012 declared that Tibetans who are unable to obtain a recommendation letter from the CTA in order to get an RC can come to them and explain their situation.¹⁰⁴

3.3.3. Indian citizenship

According to the “Indian Citizenship Act” (1955) [the complete act can be found in Annex B]:

1. Every person born in India after 26 January 1950 but before 1 July 1987 is eligible to acquire Indian citizenship “by birth”.
2. Every person who has been ordinarily resident (as a foreigner) in India for (at least) 12 years is eligible to acquire citizenship by naturalisation.¹⁰⁵ In the case of naturalisation, the foreigner must have stayed in India 12 months without interruption before the application and resided there at least 11 of the 14 years preceding the period of 12 uninterrupted months of stay in India.¹⁰⁶

In addition to conditions that must be fulfilled by any foreigner who desires to acquire Indian citizenship, according to an oral agreement between the GOI and the CTA, Tibetans must also present a “letter of no objection” issued by the CTA.¹⁰⁷

If Tibetans fulfil the legal conditions prescribed by the Indian national legislation, they are de jure entitled to get Indian citizenship. Reliable, up-to-date information on the number of Tibetans who have already acquired Indian citizenship and the number of Tibetans who currently want to acquire it could not be found. Furthermore, all interlocutors met during the FFM in March 2012 agreed that the CTA doesn’t encourage Tibetans to acquire Indian citizenship.¹⁰⁸ However, in September 2012, Sonam Dorjee, a member of the CTA, made declarations in favour of Tibetans acquiring Indian citizenship: “Once we get voting rights, we can strongly lobby with the Indian government to take up the Tibet issue with China. We want Indian citizenship just like the US and Switzerland provides citizenship in their country. We will be taken seriously by political parties and the ruling government only when we become vote banks.”¹⁰⁹

A story related to the acquisition of Indian citizenship by a Tibetan hit the news in India in 2010. Namgyal Dolkar was granted Indian citizenship by the Delhi High Court on 22 December 2010 after she contested a refusal by the Ministry of External Affairs to issue her citizen status.¹¹⁰

3.3.4. Deportation and refoulement

Reliable, up-to-date information on the number of Tibetans deported or “refouled” could not be found. Interlocutors met during the FFM in March 2012 agreed that Tibetan exiles in India are currently not at risk of refoulement to China. However, the CTA Department of Security mentioned a case of deportation involving a man living in India without an RC. He was arrested on criminal charges and was then taken to the Nepali border and asked to cross.¹¹¹ Indian authorities pointed out that Tibetans are never actually forced to leave India. Instead, they would be left behind at the border area or outside the district frontiers, but not handed over to Chinese authorities.¹¹²

3.4.1. General programmes of the Department of Health

The Department of Health was created in 1981 by the CTA, with the mandate to improve the health of Tibetan refugees through the establishment of medical centres that provide both treatment and preventative services and through the development of “a comprehensive health care system” serving Tibetan exiles in Nepal and Bhutan, as well as India.¹¹⁴ The Health Department based in Dharamsala¹¹⁵ is registered under the Indian Society Registration Act¹¹⁶ as a charitable organisation and is known as the “Tibetan Voluntary Health Association (TVHA)”. The department does not have a fixed budget but depends on fundraising. Donors include such institutions as the American Himalayan Foundation¹¹⁷ and the Tibet Relief Fund.¹¹⁸

The Department of Health also manages programmes¹¹⁹ such as the “Mother and Child Health Program”¹²⁰, the “Disease Control Program”¹²¹ and the “Tibetan Torture Survivors Program”.¹²²

3.4.2. Special programme: Tibetan Medicare System

Currently in the settlements, clinics and hospitals admit Tibetans living in India, whether they have a Green Book or not, as well as Indian citizens. Services at these clinics and hospitals are not generally free. However, they are cheaper than services offered by Indian hospitals, and the poorest people do not have to pay.

On 1 April 2012, the CTA Health Department launched a new programme known as the “Tibetan Medicare System”,¹²³ offering secondary and tertiary health-care coverage aimed at providing “financial assistance to poor Tibetan families as well as to provide proper medical care to those in need of urgent medical attention”.¹²⁴ The system, based on a public-private partnership, aims to provide equitable and comprehensive coverage on a yearly basis to serve the health-care needs of the entire Tibetan exile community. All Tibetans living in India are entitled to enrol. For an annual payment of Rs 3565,¹²⁵ a family of two to five people receives cashless health benefits with a value up to Rs 100,000¹²⁶ (each additional family member costs Rs 713¹²⁷ a year). Individuals pay Rs 950¹²⁸ annually for cashless benefits up to Rs 50,000.¹²⁹ The benefits include costs of hospitalization at selected institutions and prescription medicines

3.4.3. General medical infrastructure

Currently, the CTA Department of Health manages 7 hospitals, 4 primary health centres and 31 clinics in refugee settlements across India.¹³¹ A list of the facilities can be found in Annex C. The number of health-care resources varies by settlement. For instance, at the Majnu ka Tilla settlement in New Delhi, there is a clinic with two full-time Tibetan nurses and a dental clinic; an Indian doctor visits two days a week.¹³²

Tibetans can also be trained as Tibetan doctors in India. There is a medical school in Dharamsala, the Tibetan Medical and Astrological Institute, which has 15 branch offices in India.¹³³ To become a Tibetan doctor, one needs to follow a five-year course of study and then perform a one-year internship. Once the six-year programme is complete,¹³⁴ the student is a qualified Tibetan doctor.¹³⁵

All Tibetan refugees in India own a medical booklet in which their medical history is recorded. Tibetans born in India receive their booklet at birth, and all vaccinations since birth are recorded in it. For Tibetans born in Tibet, the medical booklet is issued at the Reception Centre in Kathmandu.¹³⁶

In 1971, the Tibetan Delek Hospital was established in Dharamsala with the mandate to provide health care to the Tibetan community, as well as the Indian community in the area. The hospital has 45 beds and “provides general medical care with a special focus on Tuberculosis, the single most serious infectious disease that threatens the Tibetan population and new arrivals from Tibet”.¹³⁷ Services at the hospital are not free, but “user fees are kept exceptionally low so that the poor can afford treatment in this hospital.”¹³⁸

3.5. Access to education

The CTA created an Education Department in 1960 with the mandate to “look after the educational affairs of the Tibetan administration and community in exile”.¹³⁹ The CTA Education Department, based in Dharamsala,¹⁴⁰ is registered under the Indian Society Registration Act¹⁴¹ as a charitable organisation with the name Tibetan Children’s Educational and Welfare Fund (TCEWF).¹⁴² The creation of separate schools for the Tibetan community living in India was based on the assumption that it would allow a modern, quality education while preserving the

Tibetan language and culture.¹⁴³ This seems to be a key issue, as studies indicate that a growing number of Tibetans in India face a challenge in preserving their religious identity.¹⁴⁴

The CTA Education Department supervises 73 Tibetan schools in India and Nepal under different autonomous administrative bodies. These schools welcome approximately 24,000 students and employ approximately 2,200 staff. Tibetan schools fall into two categories; on one side, the schools are run by the Indian government (Central Tibetan Schools Administration), and on the other, schools are managed by charitable organisations (such as the Tibetan Children's Villages [hereafter TCV], the Tibetan Homes Foundation [hereafter THF] and the Sambhota Tibetan Schools Society).¹⁴⁵

A list of Tibetan Schools in India can be found in Annex D. In addition, in 2000, the Department of Health established a school for children with special needs (Ngoenga School) in Dehradun. The school provides special programmes and a homelike environment for 50 children with a range of disabilities.¹⁴⁶

3.5.1. Schools managed by the Indian government

The Central Tibetan Schools Administration was created in 1961 and is managed by the Ministry of Human Resource Development, GOI. Its objective is to “establish, manage and assist schools in India for the education of Tibetan Children living in India while preserving and promoting their culture and heritage”.¹⁴⁷ The administration comprises 71 schools in India, welcoming approximately 10,000 students from pre-primary to class 12. The medium of instruction at primary level is Tibetan, and thereafter English.¹⁴⁸ Children arriving from China are not received in Tibetan schools run by the Indian government. These schools are only for Tibetans born in India.¹⁴⁹ The Indian Ministry of Human Resource Development has agreed to hand over responsibility for Central Tibetan Schools to the CTA by 2014.¹⁵⁰

3.5.2. Schools managed by charitable organisations

Tibetan Children's Villages

The TCV¹⁵¹ is a charitable organisation that manages seven villages (TCV Upper Dharamsala, TCV Lower Dharamsala, TCV Suja/Bir, TCV Gopalpur, TCV Bylakuppe, TCV Ladakh and TCV Patlikuhl). The villages welcome children from 0 to 14 years of age and include accommodations, medical facilities and schools. In March 2012, there were approximately 15,000 children in TCV across India.¹⁵²

Tibetan Homes Foundation

The THF¹⁵⁴ is a charitable organisation established in November 1962 in Mussoorie. Its mission is to care for the most vulnerable segment of the Tibetan refugee population – the children, many of whom have lost or been separated from one or both parents or are living in poverty. The foundation also operates a school with a Montessori section for the youngest children and Junior and Senior sections through class 12, where students are exposed to the humanities and sciences, as well as business classes. The school is affiliated with the Central Board of Secondary Education in New Delhi.¹⁵⁵

Sambhota Tibetan Schools Society

The Sambhota Tibetan Schools Society¹⁵⁶ is a charitable organisation that manages 12 schools. Among them is the Sherab Gatsel Lobling School in Dharamsala, where students beyond traditional school age (i.e. older than 18 years) can learn language skills (English as well as Tibetan) and take computer and other vocational classes. Many of these Tibetan refugees have recently moved to India from Tibet, where they were unable to attend school.¹⁵⁷

3.6. Housing

In the settlements, Tibetans have been provided with housing facilities proportionate to the number of persons comprising the household at the time of the establishment of the settlement. Scattered Tibetans living in Indian towns and cities mostly reside in rental houses. Up to 27.5% of Tibetans have a privately owned house, which is defined as “a house for which any of the household members is not paying any rent or the particular house has been distributed by the settlement office or any other authority”.¹⁵⁸ Moreover, as shown in Figure 9 below, in India, 41.4% of Tibetans live in settlement houses, 35.2% live in rented houses and 22.7% live in “staff

3.7. Economic opportunities

As shown in Figure 13 below, in India, Tibetans participate in a variety of economic sectors, such as agriculture, education and health services. According to a survey conducted by the CTA Planning Commission in 2009, a total of 3,173 Tibetans have found a livelihood while working for the administration and its allied/affiliated offices. This number amounts to almost 10% of the entire working population of exiles.¹⁶² In general, one can say that “[Tibetans] have successfully emerged from a self-sufficient barter economy into a competitive economy, and have adjusted to the new situation which is a tribute to the Tibetan community in exile”.¹⁶³ However, unemployment and lack of opportunity are important issues as well.¹⁶⁴ According to the CTA survey, more than 17% of the total Tibetan population in India is unemployed¹⁶⁵ or underemployed.¹⁶⁶

However, as the book describes in-depth the phenomenon of marginal workers – that are seasonally employed in the winter sweater business – it is assumed these individuals comprise the Underemployed.

Differences can be found in the distributions within the female and male workforces. The workforce distribution of Tibetan females is presented below in Figure 14.

For some of the activities listed above, property and land are important requirements. However, in India, Tibetans cannot easily acquire or transfer immovable property. According to Indian Law, “No person being a citizen of Pakistan, Bangladesh, Sri Lanka, Afghanistan, China, Iran, Nepal or Bhutan without prior permission of the Reserve Bank shall acquire or transfer immovable property in India, other than lease, not exceeding five years.”¹⁷⁰ Tibetans who hold a valid RC can obtain permission to acquire property from the Reserve Bank.¹⁷¹

However, this process reportedly requires a lot of time and is burdensome. It is not common for Tibetans to follow this procedure. They more often strike a deal with an Indian citizen, who pays for the property in his/her own name with the informal understanding that the Tibetan shall use it. This procedure does not grant any legal protection to Tibetans. In Dharamsala, most of the land on which Tibetans live and work has apparently been acquired in this manner. Furthermore, because India is governed federally, the laws differ from one state to another. “Himachal Pradesh, for example, which includes Dharamsala and other regions with major Tibetan populations, prohibits ownership of agricultural land by anyone who is not a citizen of

The economic prosperity of Tibetans in India is sometimes a source of conflict with local Indian communities. According to Anne-Sophie Bentz, the economic prosperity of Tibetan refugees sometimes upsets the local populations, who perceive this success as an injustice.¹⁷³ According to Prof. R. S. Kharat, Himachal Pradesh is the most sensitive region with regard to friction and conflict between Tibetans and the local population. As an example, he describes events that occurred in 1997 and 1998: *“There were continuous conflicts between the Tibetans and the local population particularly in Gaddi and Gujjar districts of Himachal Pradesh. These conflicts were mainly due to the sharing of economic opportunities of livelihood in business, taxi-driving and shop-keeping. Most of the time, local Indians have come in mobs and ransacked Tibetan property; in retaliation, Tibetans have used violent methods and sometimes even killed responsible individuals.”*¹⁷⁴ In Dharamsala (home of His Holiness the Dalai Lama), tourism has an important impact on the relationship between Tibetans and the local population. In fact, the money made from tourism by the Tibetans increases the inequalities between the two communities.¹⁷⁵

3.8. Opportunities for women

As stated in section 3.2. as well as 3.6., women play an important role in Tibetan society.¹⁷⁶ Their past contributions have included major involvement in the uprisings of 1959 when, for example, only women participated in the insurgency in Lhasa on 12 March 1959.¹⁷⁷

In the political sphere, there are currently two female Kalons:¹⁷⁸ Dolma Gyari is the head of the Department of Home Affairs, and Dicki Chhoyang represents the Department of Information and International Relations.¹⁷⁹

In the civil society field, one of the biggest NGOs is the Tibetan Women's Association. The key activities of the group, according to its website, are “supporting women in Tibet”, “working for women's empowerment”, “supporting women [...] through studies fellowship”, “rigorously campaigning for issues and injustice affecting the lives of [Tibetan] women” and producing “regular research and media”.¹⁸⁰ The NGO has regional branches all over India as well as in Australia, Canada, Japan, England, Denmark, Italy, Nepal, Switzerland, the United States and Taiwan.¹⁸¹

In the field of health, Tibetan women have access to the Mother and Child Health Program, offered by the CTA's Department of Health. This programme supports mothers and their children. It offers free immunisations and also free distribution of traditional Tibetan medicines. Furthermore, it provides expansive reproductive health-care services that are sensitive to cultural norms and available “to all the Tibetan refugees of reproductive age”.¹⁸²

Very little information is available on the subject of violence against women, and very few cases are publicly reported. One case that was publicised in July 2011 involved a Tibetan woman who “was assaulted, beaten and paraded naked in a public space by other Tibetans for

In the education sector, opportunities beyond those provided by the CTA are available. The Tibetan Women's Association, for instance, has held leadership training, enabling Tibetan women to gain more confidence in those roles or to obtain such positions.¹⁸⁴ Additionally, this organisation sponsors a "studies fellowship" programme that provides "the required financial impetus" for Tibetan women to study at advanced levels and is available for all Tibetans, including those in Nepal.¹⁸⁵ Under the title of Women's Empowerment, there are also opportunities to take part in gender sensitisation and domestic violence training, a leadership programme for nuns and democracy training.¹⁸⁶

4. Travel documents for Tibetans issued by Indian authorities

4.1. Identity Certificate (IC)

Tibetans living in India who intend to travel internationally must apply for an Identity Certificate (hereafter IC; also called "Yellow Book"), which serves as a kind of passport. As stated on the official website of the Indian Ministry of External Affairs,¹⁸⁷ an "Identity Certificate (IC) is normally issued to Tibetan Refugees residing in India, from the Regional Passport Office, Delhi (RPO Delhi) on recommendation by the Bureau of His Holiness the Dalai Lama (HHDL), New Delhi".

The IC is valid for a period of 10 years and can be renewed or extended in Indian foreign missions.¹⁸⁸ It is now also possible to apply for an IC online.¹⁸⁹ The online application procedure is explained on the official website of the CTA¹⁹⁰ (see Annex F). Tibetans desiring to acquire an IC must submit the application form with all required supporting documents to the Bureau of His Holiness the Dalai Lama in New Delhi, which then forwards the application to the Indian Regional Passport Office in New Delhi.¹⁹¹ A list of the required supporting documents can be found in Annex G.

Once the Indian Regional Passport Office receives the application, it must obtain a clearance from the Ministry of External Affairs. According to the ministry's official website, the clearance is issued by the "Consular, Passport and Visa (CPV) PV-III division".¹⁹²

In October 2012, the rates for acquiring an IC (issuance of a fresh IC; issuance of a fresh IC after the validity has expired; issuance of an additional booklet; issuance of an IC to replace a lost/damaged certificate, etc.) were adjusted owing to a revision in the passport service fees by

4. *Issue of IC for the lost and damaged case – Rs. 2,100.00."*¹⁹³

The IC allows the holder to travel internationally. However, re-entry to India must be ensured before leaving the country; therefore, the "No Objection to Return to India" (hereafter NORI) stamp (described below) is essential.

4.1.1. No Objection to Return to India (NORI) stamp.

If Tibetans intend to stay abroad for less than 15 days, they need to acquire NORI permission from the FRRO State Government prior to departure. If they intend to stay abroad more than two weeks, they will also need an "exit permission". As stated on the Indian Bureau of Immigration website, Tibetans and Tibetan refugees who leave India and travel abroad without an IC or NORI permission from the appropriate FRRO/State Government office "cease to be eligible for Temporary Refugee/Long Term Stay Status in India".¹⁹⁴ As stated on the Ministry of External Affairs official website, "Clearance by State Government (Department of Home Affairs / Police) / FRRO) is also required for grant of No Objection to Return to India (NORI) to be stamped on the Identity Certificate".¹⁹⁵ For more information on the application procedure, required supporting documents and rates, see Annex G.
